"This confirms and strengthens our convictions in this regard; although this government has a parliamentary majority, in fact there is a potential political majority opposed to it," he said.

"Nevertheless, this latter majority is in favor of establishing a democratic coalition government comprising the PCI.

"This is our general prospect in our country's present political situation, in a very concise and condensed form."

[Question] You are convinced that the Italian Communists will soon join the government. Will this happen?

[Answer] Absolute predictions cannot be guaranteed.... Nevertheless, we say that this is the necessary and possible solution for the country and furthermore, in view of the possible obstruction process on the part of the reactionary forces, which still carry real weight in Italian politics, we believe that they will lose their positions--which have been maintained at all costs--because they cannot shut every door to the PCI.

We have a real basis of support and we consider our political action to be correct. We are therefore sure that these conservative and reactionary forces cannot close all the doors opened to us by our country's real social force. They shut one door, but more and more are opened to us. We must be taken into consideration if Italy's problems are to be resolved.

I believe that the outcome of the battle is guaranteed, but this does not mean that I am making hard forecasts.....

Absence From Paris

Although the reasons for the absence of the PCE, PCI and other parties from the recent communist parties' conference has been sufficiently explained on many occasions, we put the question to the Italian Communist leader, who gave this concise answer:

"When dealing with a subject such as peace and disarmament one must take into account the various political forces having real support--Socialist, Social Democratic and Christian--without meetings of this kind being limited to communist parties.

"Second, we believe that it is inopportune to limit discussion of such a complex topic to the communist parties alone, in a situation as grave as the one we are now experiencing, which is influenced by the situations created as a result of events in Afghanistan and Iran, to cite two examples.

"Furthermore, we consider this method to be erroneous: It differs from the method which was followed at the Berlin conference. For such a high-level conference to be efficient, since it is dealing with such important topics directly concerned with world peace, a basis for consensus is needed from the preparatory phase and it must embrace the real political forces influencing the international political situation and not be completely limited to certain communist parties and workers forces."

China Cannot Be Excluded

What about China...? Berlinguer smiled when I briefly mentioned the subject. "China...is very large," he told me. Then he explained concisely the reasons for his visit and for the normalization of relations between the PCI and CCP.

"China and its Communist Party cannot be excluded from the international political scene," he explained. "Its importance is beyond dispute and one must take into account these two immense forces which have through their own merits assumed a very prominent position in world politics. This is why we attach great importance to the resumption of our relations with the Chinese comrades.

"We were able to exchange information and to hold political discussions--very serious and thorough--on the principal international issues.

"In this connection we analyzed the causes of international tension and so forth, taking into account considerations of political strategy.

"Apart from all this, the independence and differing logics governing the activities of two communist parties such as the PCI and CCP, whose principal fields of action are in very different circumstances, remain clear. This did not prevent us from showing great mutual respect for our respective stances and from separating objective from subjective issues and issues connected with very different circumstances or fields of political action. China must be taken into account," he remarked.

Next Enrico Berlinguer, the former Italian aristocrat who attended his first political rally at the age of 8 in short pants and when his eyes were less tired than they are now, explained to us the reason for the importance of a party such as his, which has over 1 million members and exerts considerable and well-known influence in the international political field. With his calm voice, his tired eyes and his lively--very lively--mind.

FOREIGN MINISTER ON OLYMPICS, VISA DENIALS, OTHER ISSUES

LD220841 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 10 May 80 pp 1, 8

[Augusto de Carvalho interview with Portuguese Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister Diogo Freitas do Amaral: "Portugal Has Declined To Organize Alternative Olympic Soccer"--date, place not specified]

[Text] EXPRESSO: The death of President Tito of Yugoslavia is the event which has dominated the international political scene this week. The Portuguese Government was represented at the highest level at the funeral. I would like to begin by asking you to what the Democratic Alliance government wished to pay tribute by sending its prime minister to Belgrade.

Freitas do Amaral: The Portuguese delegation included the president of the republic and the prime minister, and there was a reason in protocol for this. Marshal Tito, in addition to being head of state was also prime minister. With respect to the government's being represented at the highest level, this was decided on because of certain values which President Tito embodied. These values were the defense of national independence within a geographical and political context and framework within which that independence could have been, and so frequently was, opposed. Marshal Tito was capable of embodying that independence and of defending it against all hegemonic attempts, specifically by the Soviet Union. Tito's resistance to Soviet hegemonism also greatly contributed to world peace.

EXPRESSO: There are extreme rightwing newspapers which wrote that the Portuguese Government, with its presence in Belgrade, could not help paying tribute to the communist that Tito was.

Freitas do Amaral: I do not share that opinion. Both at the ideological level and at the level of domestic policy it is clear that there are deep differences and even antagonism on our part with respect to the system which was established and persists in Yugoslavia. But we draw a distinction between the levels of foreign and domestic policy. At the level of Yugoslavia's position on the chessboard of foreign policy, we believe that there are values, stances and a situation there which are of interest to the West, and thus to Portugal. To that extent, we support them.

There Will Be No Alternative Soccer in Portugal

EXPRESSO: The prime minister's office has issued a Cabinet communique advising the Portuguese Olympic Committee to boycott the games. Does the government already know what the Portuguese Olympic Committee's stance will be?

Freitas do Amaral: We only know, through a contact with the Portuguese Olympic Committee chairman, that a plenary meeting will be held 15 May and that the decision will be made on that day.

EXPRESSO: But have you no foreknowledge of the resolution which will emerge from that meeting?

Freitas do Amaral: I have no foreknowledge in the sense of a hunch. However, I hope that the committee will be responsive to the advice given to it by the government.

EXPRESSO: Let us suppose that the committee's decision is in keeping with the government's hopes--that is, a boycott of the games. In that event, could individual athletes, who so wish, visit Moscow in order to take part in the Olympics?

Freitas do Amaral: That matter is the province not of the government but of the Olympic committee. But, judging by the information at my disposal, I believe that this is not possible. If the Olympic committee decides not to take part, I believe that, in view of the rules, participation on an individual basis is not possible since athletes can only be entered by their respective Olympic committees.

EXPRESSO: However, let us suppose that participation on an individual basis is possible. Would the Portuguese Government deny passports to athletes wishing to visit the Soviet Union to take part in the games?

Freitas do Amaral: No. The government would not have to intervene in that respect. What I believe is that the committee organizing the games in Moscow can accept no entry which does not come from the Olympic Committee of the country concerned.

EXPRESSO: As far as we know the United States is preparing alternative games and we also believe that Portugal has even been considered for holding soccer matches this summer. Could you tell us what truth there is to all this?

Freitas do Amaral: What I can tell you about this is that an initiative was indeed taken by the U.S. Government to the effect of studying the possibility of holding high-level games this summer--games which would be open both to athletes who do not go to Moscow and even to those who, having gone to Moscow, wish to take part. As a result of this initiative a 2-day meeting was held in Geneva--1 day at the U.S. Embassy, and the other at the British Embassy. This meeting was attended by several countries, including Portugal, as an observer. Portugal attended as an observer and not as a participant since it had not yet decided on the nub of the matter. It was disclosed at this meeting that the organizers would like to go ahead with these games and a list of countries where the games were intended to be held, in principle, was put forward. The idea was that there should be one sport per country. Within the context of this exchange of views, Portugal's name was suggested as a country where the soccer matches could be held. We made no reply at that time; we were only there as observers. However, I can now disclose Portugal will organize none of these contests although it could support Portuguese participation.

EXPRESSO: Does this decision by the Portuguese Government take into account a possible lack of organization or was it made for other reasons?

Freitas do Amaral: It was made in particular for organizational and financial reasons.

EXPRESSO: Not of a political nature?

Freitas do Amaral: No.

EXPRESSO: Was Portugal invited to attend that meeting as an observer?

Freitas do Amaral: No. Portugal was invited as a participant. But it only agreed to take part as an observer.

EXPRESSO: And how many participants were there?

Freitas do Amaral: About 18.

EXPRESSO: The Moscow Olympic games will certainly be broadcast by the television networks. What will happen in the case of Portuguese television? Will it also broadcast them?

Freitas do Amaral: I believe that the prime minister has already said publicly on one occasion that, even if we do not take part in the Moscow Olympics, the television system will not be forbidden to broadcast the games. What remains to be seen is how the broadcasting will be organized. But that is a matter which rests with Portuguese television.

Denial of Visas Is Retaliation Against Invasion of Afghanistan

EXPRESSO: Let us now turn to another topic, if you do not mind. The topic is that of the denial of entry visas for our country to citizens of East bloc countries--of socialist countries. Do you not believe that this action runs counter to the spirit of the Helsinki agreements on the free movement of people and ideas?

Freitas do Amaral: I would like to begin by answering this last part and then give an explanation.

I believe that it does not. It is the Soviet Union which has gravely violated the Helsinki documents and, in our opinion, it is justifiable for the other Helsinki signatory countries to react with measures which will indicate to the Soviet Union their condemnation and their refusal to accept such grave violations as the invasion of Afghanistan. So if there is a violation here of the spirit of Helsinki, it lies in the cause and not in the effects. It lies in the invasion of Afghanistan and not in the measures which are legitimately adopted to counter that action, to prevent it going unpunished and to render a repetition of it more difficult.

At the level of deeds, what is happening is as follows: We must draw a distinction between the situation with respect to Soviet citizens and the situation with respect to citizens of other countries, even if they are satellites of the Soviet Union.

With respect to the Soviet Union, the government has decided, because of the invasion of Afghanistan, to impose some restrictive measures. However, these are selective restrictions which are neither systematic nor comprehensive. They apply in particular to visits of a political nature or to visits of an ostensibly cultural nature which lend themselves to the exercising of improper influence at the political level. There are no restrictions on visits of a commercial nature or at the level of business, for instance. The restrictive measures exist and are being adopted, but we need not be ashamed of them. We will lift them on the day that the Soviet Union withdraws from Afghanistan.

With respect to the other countries, denials of visas are based solely on security reasons--state of security--which has nothing to do with the case of the Soviet Union.

EXPRESSO: Are you referring to police espionage? [as published]

Freitas do Amaral: I am referring to citizens of this or that country who do not enter Portugal, just as they do not enter many other countries, because their presence is deemed contrary to state security.

EXPRESSO: However, in this connection REUTER reported on 2 May that the miners' trade unions international, which is based in Warsaw, had protested against Portugal's refusal to grant visas to Soviet and GDR citizens who were to have taken part in a meeting of the international on 5 May in Lisbon.

Again according to the same report, the organization's secretary general, Alain Simon, stated in a message to President Eanes that the refusal meant a failure by the Portuguese Government to observe basic human rights and freedoms.

According to this report visas were denied to GDR citizens. Is this a matter of a state security problem?

Freitas do Amaral: As far as I know, this denial of visas to take part in the miners' meeting applied only to citizens of the Soviet Union. If there was any refusal of visas with respect to GDR citizens, it is certainly because there were security reasons.

As I have already said, only Soviet citizens are affected by the retaliation prompted by the invasion of Afghanistan. Moreover, I should add that in the instructions which we gave on this matter, we made an explicit exception with respect to participation by Soviet citizens in congresses of Portuguese political parties or organizations directly connected with them. Only yesterday I signed an authorization for visas for a Soviet delegation attending a communist youth congress, just as Soviet women were recently authorized to take part in the Women's Democratic Movement Congress.

EXPRESSO: And journalists?

Freitas do Amaral: With respect to journalists there is no special restriction.

EXPRESSO: But there have already been restrictions.

Freitas do Amaral: There was perhaps some particular information which justified them--information concerning political activity and not journalistic activities.

If you will allow me to make a final comment, I will say that there has been a good deal of speculation on this matter. Restricting visas for foreign citizens is a practice which, in addition to being in line with international rules, is regularly practiced by all countries. Specifically, in democratic Britain, the denial of entry to foreign citizens--and not only those from the East bloc--occurs almost daily.

Africans Who Could Be Portuguese

EXPRESSO: Another topic which could be to some extent connected with this: This is the case of the Africans from countries whose official language is Portuguese, who have been in Portugal since 25 April [1974] and who for various reasons do not wish to return to their countries of origin. They were told for years and years that they have full Portuguese citizenship. They had Portuguese identity cards and some of them even had passports. Suddenly they were denied Portuguese citizenship, placing them in a really difficult and, we will say, even inhumane if not immoral situation. How does the government, of which you are deputy premier and foreign minister, approach this matter?

Freitas do Amaral: The government is approaching and seeking to resolve this grave problem by means of the nationality law, which it has already submitted as a bill to the Assembly of the Republic.

EXPRESSO: And might it be known what the government's policy is?

Freitas do Amaral: What the government is proposing to the Assembly is a radical alteration of the rules which you mentioned and which stemmed from the Goncalvist legislation of 1975 which made our brothers, purely and simply, stateless.

The government proposes that individuals born or domiciled in overseas territories which subsequently became independent, who at the date of independence had no other nationality and did not opt for the nationality of the new sovereign state, should be automatically regarded as Portuguese.

So this is an act of justice which we are seeking to perform. There is no moral, legal or political reason for forcing them to remain stateless or for tolerating the continuation of such an unjust situation.

EXPRESSO: This problem has been dragging on since 25 April and nobody has resolved it yet.

Freitas do Amaral: As you know, the submitting of a new nationality law formed part of the Democratic Alliance's election program. The Democratic Alliance's election program explicitly stated that one of the aims of the new nationality law would be to resolve the tragic human problems of decolonization which have not yet been resolved.

EXPRESSO: Do you deem it advisable to resort to the political refugees law for these cases, as was the belief until recently?

Freitas do Amaral: I believe that this makes no sense with respect to most of them. There may be just one or two instances in which the refugee law should be applied. In addition, we have another problem with respect to nationality concerning natives of the former overseas territories. It is a problem which we attempting to resolve. I am referring especially to the case of the Cape Verdians who are working as emigrants in the EEC countries but who are still registered with Portuguese passports. These workers benefit from special privileges as a result of the agreements concluded between Portugal and the countries where they pursue their respective activities. But now, either on their own initiative, wishing to become citizens of their countries, or as a result of pressure or a request from their own countries' respective authorities, a trend toward their adopting their own nationality is being created. However, since there are no agreements between the countries where they work and Cape Verde, they risk losing their privileges in adopting the nationality of their country. We have persuaded the EEC countries to conclude social security agreements to this end identical to our own. I wrote a letter to my Cape Verde counterpart to this effect just a few days ago.

EXPRESSO: And with respect to Timor, what is the Portuguese Government's stance? A revolutionary front for an independent East Timor minister is currently in Lisbon. Has he already met with you?

Freitas do Amaral: No.

Nonrecognition of Indonesia's Sovereignty Over East Timor

EXPRESSO: East Timor is afraid that the Portuguese Government will establish contacts with the Indonesian authorities in order to give its consent to that territory's integration into Indonesia.

Freitas do Amaral: We cannot do that. I will begin by stating that we are keenly aware of the East Timor problem with respect to both its human and its political aspects. We also made a very clear allusion to this matter in the Democratic Alliance's election program. With respect to the efforts to find a solution, there was no initiative on the part of the governments which preceded us, and I deem it a grave matter that none of the five constitutional governments before us took any initiative to resolve this problem which is so delicate and grave in its human and political aspects. We decided to do something. And the first issue with which we were confronted is this: There are humanitarian problems in Timor which compel us to make a decision in order to attempt to provide a solution, but this will compel us, however, to contact the Indonesian authorities.

EXPRESSO: Are you referring to the case of the 3,000 families, concerning which Indonesia reportedly asked the Netherlands to approach the Portuguese Government with a view to their being received in Portugal?

Freitas do Amaral: That is one instance. Likewise, there are other Portuguese or former Portuguese people who are there and who also wish to come to Portugal, as well as other people in a state of grave physical ill health. We cannot resolve these problems without entering into contact with the Indonesian authorities. But neither do we wish to establish any contact which could be interpreted, whether by Indonesia or by the international community, as recognition, albeit merely de facto, of Indonesia as the legitimate holder of sovereignty over East Timor, so that a problem which at the outset is humanitarian is transformed into a problem of a political nature. Moreover, there is article 307 of the Constitution which we respect and which refers to the furtherance of actions and measures aimed at guaranteeing East Timor's right to self-determination and independence. As far as this other aspect is concerned, the Constitution assigns joint responsibility to the president of the republic and the government. The government will therefore be unable to act alone and will have to have a joint line of conduct with the president of the republic. Because of all this and in view of the sensitive and delicate nature of the issue, it has been suggested that a commission comprising two representatives of the presidency of the republic and two of the government be appointed to study the political problems involved in the matter in order to advise the president of the republic and the government. This idea has been accepted in principle, and the people who are to comprise this commission have already been designated.

EXPRESSO: So is the commission not yet functioning?

Freitas do Amaral: The people must be appointed and it will start functioning only after it has been formalized. We want it to act rapidly so that we can be informed soon about the line of conduct to be followed. In addition, we need to take initiatives urgently for diplomatic reasons. Portugal's position in the United Nations with respect to East Timor deteriorated a great deal in 1979. What happened at the UN General Assembly last September was symptomatic. A broad trend toward ceasing to vote with Portugal with respect to the assertion of its responsibilities toward East Timor emerged. This trend is toward agreeing with Indonesia and deeming the matter closed. At the time, Portugal effected a successful initiative to prevent this from happening, but most of the countries which agreed to vote with Portugal once more intimated that it would be the last time that they would do so if Portugal did not take some new initiative in the meantime. So we must approach the next UN General Assembly in a situation in which, although not having resolved the entire problem, of course, we can nevertheless demonstrate to the international community that we are interested in resolving it and that we are taking specific steps in that direction. I will add that the series of reports which are being published, according to which a meeting between the Portuguese and Indonesian foreign ministers has been planned, are totally untrue.

EXPRESSO: Are you referring to the meeting forecast by the press for 19 May in Paris?

Freitas do Amaral: It has no foundation. We have made no approach to that effect and none has been made to us by Indonesia either.

EXPRESSO: But what are the specific steps, in your opinion?

Freitas do Amaral: Since these steps must be agreed on with the president of the republic, it would be incorrect to disclose them at present.

The Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo Affair

EXPRESSO: And now another matter--perhaps the most controversial matter recently: that of Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo. According to press reports Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo visited Belem Palace a few days ago to express her complete readiness for the matter to be resolved as quickly as possible. Has it now been resolved?

Freitas do Amaral: It has not been resolved. As far as I know there has not yet been any working meeting between the president of the republic and the prime minister since the president of the republic received Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo. The situation therefore remains unchanged at present. The government has proposed her dismissal [as Portugal's ambassador to UNESCO] and the president of the republic has not yet accepted it. On the other hand, the government, within the context of its own powers, believes that it is not desirable for Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo to resume her post in UNESCO, and that is why it has decided that she should be kept here.

I believe that this matter has been the subject of considerable speculation on the part of the opposition, albeit using a right which it possesses under democracy. However, if we view matters calmly there is no reason for such a commotion. It is merely a matter of this: Does or does not the government have the right to replace political ambassadors whom it found appointed by previous governments? Throughout the world the answer is "yes." It is apparently only in Portugal that this right does not exist! But it does exist. And why? In the first place, political ambassadors are not career officials; they are, in the terminology of administrative law, political agents enjoying confidence--the government's confidence. Moreover, this is not the only category of political agents enjoying the government's confidence: There are the civil governors, the directors general, the ministerial staff, the chairmen of public enterprises, and so forth. All these people hold certain posts whose considerable political importance presupposes a relationship of confidence between them and the government. When that relationship does not exist, as in the case of Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo, the government has the right to replace them. There is also a special reason in the case of ambassadors. This is that the reason why the role of a political ambassador is accepted in all countries for certain posts and at certain times is that it is believed that there is a need in those posts and at those times for an ambassador whose degree of political identification with the government exceeds that which is normally required of a career diplomat.

Now, as is common knowledge, Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo is a figure in opposition to this government, just as the parties supporting this government were in opposition to Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo's government. It would be a grave matter in a democratic country like ours if the government were to order her to be arrested or impose enforced residence somewhere in the country on her just because it regarded her as an opposition figure. But nothing of this kind is happening. It is perfectly natural for the government, not having political confidence in Mari de Lourdes Pintasilgo, not to allow her to hold the post which she used to occupy.

EXPRESSO: When do you believe this matter can be resolved?

Freitas do Amaral: That depends on the president of the republic. If he does not accept the dismissal, the matter will drag on, unfortunately for several months, until the elections resolve it one way or another.

Relations With Saudi Arabia

EXPRESSO: And what about the ambassador in Maputo--a post which has remained vacant for quite a while?

Freitas do Amaral: Here we must distinguish between two stages. With respect to the first stage, which is the most protracted, that is not our responsibility. As far as this government is concerned, one of the first things that I did when I took over this ministry was to study and quickly propose a diplomatic reshuffle which specifically included an ambassador for Maputo and another for Luanda.

This diplomatic reshuffle was approved by the Cabinet during--I believe--our government's first month in office, and submitted to the president of the republic. If the diplomatic reshuffle has not as yet been carried out it is because the president of the republic and the government have not yet reached final agreement. Incidentally, I should say that there is no disagreement between the government and the president with respect to the names proposed for Maputo and Luanda.

EXPRESSO: Will Portugal continue to vote in international bodies against colonialism and apartheid?

Freitas do Amaral: Obviously it will.

EXPRESSO: When will an ambassador to Zambia be appointed?

Freitas do Amaral: Soon, we believe. Moreover, we have another problem to resolve which is that of the ambassador to Saudi Arabia. We are hopeful of achieving the establishment of diplomatic relations with Saudi Arabia this year--something which, let it be said none of the previous governments achieved.

EXPRESSO: Since we are talking about Arabs I would like to ask you whether the severing of trade relations with Iran will not gravely harm Portugal with respect to oil supplies.

Freitas do Amral: It has not harmed us gravely although this decision has its dangers--dangers which highlight and enhance it even further. However, we were not forecasting substantial supplies of Iranian oil for this year.

With Respect to Iran, Only Attack on Embassy at Issue

EXPRESSO: May I ask you what caused Portugal to stand out from the community of Western nations with respect to Iran, if we except the United States? Was it U.S. pressure?

Freitas do Amaral: We had neither pressures nor even urgings on the part of the United States. It was a pure decision based on national sovereignty. It is strange: When we make decisions after some countries, specifically those of the EEC, our opponents accuse us of subservience, but when we make them before, they accuse us of not waiting for the other countries, specifically those of the EEC! But we believe that it is our right to make the decisions which we see fit at a time we see fit. The fact is that we are not yet an EEC member and so do not form part of the system of consultations and political cooperation which exists amongthe EEC members. We are therefore not obliged to await EEC decisions before making our own. Moreover, the fact is that this matter was perfectly clear to us. It is a matter of grave violation not only of international law but also of the mose elementary human rights. It was also clear to us that the Western countries which respect international law and human rights would make decisions to the same effect. This is what has happened: We were ahead of time, but we did not remain alone since we were soon followed by the EEC.

EXPRESSO: So is the Portuguese Government's decision connected solely with the attacks on the U.S. Embassy and not with the course of Iran's domestic politics?

Freitas do Amaral: We fully respect the Iranian people's autonomy and independence for resolving their domestic problems however they see fit. This suspension (it is not a severance) of trade relations between Portugal and Iran is in force solely because of the hostages issue and for as long as their detention continues. As soon as this ends and the hostages are released and restored to their families, the suspension of trading relations will be immediately lifted.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE VOTES TO PARTICIPATE IN MOSCOW GAMES

LD231120 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 23 May 80

[Text] The Spanish Olympic Committee declares itself in favor of participating in the Moscow Olympic games. (Rafael Recio) reports: Spain will take part in the next Olympic games, according to the decision taken by the Spanish Olympic Committee. There were 18 votes in favor and 11 against. So Spain will be present at the 22d Olympic games of the modern era.

Government Communique Favored Boycott

[Text] We now have the official communique issued by the Spanish Government on Spanish participation or nonparticipation in the Moscow Olympics. According to the note which has just arrived from the Diplomatic Information Office at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the government considers that Spanish participation in the Moscow Olympics is not desirable.

The note says: The military intervention in Afghanistan which was overwhelmingly condemned by the United Nations General Assembly and by public opinion caused a serious worsening in the international situation which has had an effect on the spirit of peace and friendship necessary for the normal development of the Olympic games, one of the objectives of which is to contribute to the building of a better and more peaceful world by means of sport. The Spanish Government and hoped that the circumstances necessary for universal participation in the Olympics would come about but that the decision regarding Spanish participation was the responsibility of the Spanish Olympic Committee. Since that act of aggression took place there have been no new developments and the circumstances remain unchanged. Consequently, the government considers that Spanish participation in the Moscow Olympics is undesirable.

The decision then is not final and as with the Italian and Belgium governments the Olympic Committee could decide to take part on an unofficial basis.

GONZALEZ TO PRESENT PLAN TO END IRAN-U.S. CRISIS

NC231047 Paris AFP in English 1042 GMT 23 May 80

[Text] Madrid, May 23 (AFP)--Spanish Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez, the deputy chairman of the Socialist Internationale, will go to Tehran tomorrow to discuss a plan for ending the Iranian-American crisis, his party announced today. He might confer with Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr, the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party (PSOE) specified.

The plan was submitted to Mr Gonzales here on May 13 by Christian Bourguet, a lawyer representing Iranian revolutionary leader Ruhollah Khomeyni in Paris, and by Argentine businessman Hector Villalon. Mr Gonzales was asked to have the plan approved by the Internationale (the federation of non-communist socialist parties) and then submit it to Iran's parliament in the name of the Internationale. Mr Villalon said at that time that freeing the American hostages was only one element of the plan.

Two other leaders of the Internationale, Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and former Swedish Premier Olof Palme, are expected to be in Tehran tomorrow.

Mr Villalon and Mr Bourguet talked with Spanish Premier Adolfo Suarez too. According to unconfirmed reports, they also saw an envoy of President Jimmy Carter here, and Spain might be the scene of an international conference to resolve the crisis. The French lawyer and Argentine businessman are members of a private group seeking a peaceful solution. Another member is the Greek Catholic former Archbishop of Jerusalem Hilarion Capucci.

FRANCE'S MITTERRAND, CARRILLO DISCUSS EUROPEAN ISSUES, CSCE

ID221125 Paris LE MONDE in French 18-19 May 80 p 2

["C.V." dispatch: "Mr Mitterrand and Mr Carrillo Express Similar Skepticism With Respect to Soviet Proposal for World Summit"]

[Text] Madrid--A "Euroleft?" Mr Mitterrand says that he prefers to use the word cautiously. At any rate, he was anxious to give a correct impression of the talk which he had with Carrillo in Madrid on 16 May. "Everybody remains what he was," he stated. "There is no question of transcending any alliances which we have concluded in our respective countries in order to build...castles in Spain. Despite the question of plans for society, which remain different, many of us within the European workers movement have convergent views on the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, SALT II and the Madrid conference. We believe that it is necessary to start discussing all these problems. It is not a question of concluding any new alliances. I believe that the socialist and communist parties cannot ignore one another when peace is being threatened. I urge all socialists to talk to those communists who reject the imperialism and hegemonism of the big powers."

The talk between the French Socialist Party first secretary and the PCE secretary general took place on neutral ground, in a big hotel in the capital, and in strictest secrecy. It appears that in both countries there was one partner who had to be dealt with tactfully--the PCF in Paris and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party in Madrid. Relations between socialists and communists are undoubtedly less aggressive in Spain than in France, but they are tense.

Taking Initiatives in Favor of Detente.

The communique explains that Messrs Mitterrand and Carrillo discussed "the most worrying international and European problems and dangers threatening peace." After emphasizing "the usefulness and importance of dialogue and encounters among parties belonging to the European workers movement," they expressed the view that "it would be a good thing if initiatives were taken in favor of detente, especially with a view to preparing for the Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (LE MONDE note: in principle, planned for the fall) under the best possible conditions."

The Madrid conference was the main topic of conversation. "If it could be shown that our different parties have similar views on human rights, detente and collective security, the European and even the world conscience would probably be touched by this."

The Socialist Party first secretary denied that he had engaged in a domestic political operation by meeting Mr Carrillo soon after seeing Mr Berlinguer. Furthermore, he showed himself skeptical in his comments on the world summit proposed by the Soviet Union. "An initiative of this kind," he stated, "taken at this moment even though the Soviet Union has not withdrawn its troops from Afghanistan, cannot succeed." Mr Carrillo expressed an identical opinion. The PCE secretary general also believes that the dialogue started by Mr Mitterrand should be extended to include the Yugoslav and Romanian parties. He stated that he is ready to meet, if necessary, such leaders of European social democratic parties as Willy Brandt, Helmut Schmidt and Olof Palme. "We have already established contacts with the British Labor Party," he said.

At any rate, the PCE has obviously improved its relations with the CCP. It is now playing host to some Beijing journalists, and a few months ago Mr Manuel Azcarate, the man in charge of PCE international relations, traveled to Asia. A Spanish Communist youth delegation and a delegation representing the workers commissions will visit China this summer. "This is similar to what preceded Berlinguer's visit to the PRC," Carrillo asserted.

SOCIALIST LEADER MUGICA OPPOSES ENTRY INTO NATO

LD221117 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 10 May 80 p 12

[Unattributed report: "Mugica Declares Himself Opposed to Spain's Entry Into NATO"]

[Text] "The balance of power in Europe, which helps maintain peace, would be upset by Spain's entry into NATO," Socialist leader Enrique Mugica stated yesterday in a talk on the topic of "defense in Spain" at the Higher Council for Scientific Research. Mugica said that the awareness that the planet could be shattered in a nuclear conflagration had kept the peace for several decades, but security based on fear has recently been diminishing dangerously. Among other factors, the anxiety over the energy crisis, the new Soviet medium-range weapons aimed at West Europe, the invasion of Afghanistan, the deterioration of the crisis in the Near East, the situation in Southeast Asia and the Sino-Soviet dispute have brought us to a new situation.

"In view of this," he continued, "greater attention should be devoted to Spain's defense with respect to both the world strategic theaters and those determined by our specific interests. The latter include the dangers to the Canary Islands if an internationalization of the West Sahara problem occured, and the threats looming over Ceuta and Melilla as a result of the attempts by the Moroccan king and government to distract their people's attention from the failures in that area."

"This requires strengthening our defenses in case of an attack against these two cities, either through the repetition of another green march or through armed actions, and this would require the creation of reserves, control over the Alboran Sea and the creation of alternative supplies in the event of an Arab blockade."

He then said that "the balance of power in Europe, which helps maintain peace, would be upset by Spain's entry into NATO, dangerously increasing international tension, and those harmed most would be the democratic countries of Central Europe, which are interested in maintaining coexistence and trading interests with the East bloc; and so the exhortations that we join the alliance are probably due to more a theoretical habit than to a deeply felt reality."

"Spain should strengthen its own deterrent capability by improving its arms, and to this end it must diversify its foreign sources of supply and nationalize their maintenance, as well as manufacture the equipment necessary for this purpose which, moreover, would help to alleviate unemployment.

"In the event of the treaty with the United States being renewed," he continued, "this should be done on egalitarian foundations which will strengthen our defense and not by giving way, as hitherto, to formal imperatives of prestige. At the same time, bilateral associations with European countries will have to be established with a view to the manufacture of arms and combined exercises. Even though the idea of a European army is a vision of the future, it is encouraging to know that the European socialist parties studied the problem of a European defense at the conference held in Amsterdam in November 1976, and that the European Parliament's next debate will be on this same topic."

EL PAIS AWAITS 'FACTS' BEFORE EVALUATING BREZHNEV-GISCARD PARLEY

LD230901 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 20 May 80 p 10

[Editorial: "The French Opening and the Cold War"]

[Text] Europe is responding feebly to Carter's pressures; it is striving to seek its own solutions to what it increasingly views as its own problem. The countries which are withdrawing from the Olympic games are doing so reluctantly, and the countries of the Nine have adopted the sanctions against Iran at their Naples meeting with the same reluctance, reducing and restricting them. Only trade contracts with Iran signed since 4 November--which are few and insignificant--will be suspended. And it is added that they will be rapidly resumed as soon as the hostage situation changes favorably. Muskie secured little from his Allies in the Brussels meetings and in the bilateral talks, although on his return to Washington he appeared timidly satisfied, and with respect to his conversation with Gromyko in Vienna as well. And the interparliamentary conference of the two sections of Europe has concluded by emphasizing the need for the Madrid conference to be held, but not in the form of a battle but in a constructive spirit. The Soviet proposal of a world conference of heads of state and government to seek to reduce tensions is being viewed more favorably in Europe (in general) than in the United States, even though its prospects are not good.

Throughout the whole of last week, the diplomatic center of the crisis lay in Europe, and so there was a trend toward reducing tension, returning to common sense and dialogue and seeking other solutions. These reasons are quite simple: Europe is afraid of becoming the biter, bit--the sanctioneer, sanctioned. Its entire economic fabric is weak and its society is infirm: The strikes in Britain and Sweden, the demonstrations in Paris and the protests in West Berlin are displaying very considerable sensitivity; not so much because of the danger of war, of which nobody is very clearly aware, but because of the crisis which is occurring. The psychological approach to the issue within Europe is that of tending to believe that it is an artificial crisis provoked by Carter in his election campaign and concentrates more on this fact than on the invasion of Afghanistan, although condemning the latter. It is probably mistaken to associate this entire trend with a single personality, or even with the White House club headed by Brzezinski; there is an entire trend in U.S. society in favor of toughness and deterrence, and there is also and above all a determination on the part of some circles not directly in political power who believe that this is the course which must be followed at what they deem a crucial moment for their future history, when the loss of a hegemony which means the continuation of a certain living standard is at stake.

All this European resistance culminated yesterday in the emergency meeting between Brezhnev and Giscard d'Estaing, with Gierek in Poland, despite all the circumstantial difficulties--Brezhnev's illness and fatigue following his visits; Giscard's commitments, with the president of Mexico visiting the country--in order to find possibilities of a solution. Unofficial U.S. comments on this meeting are critical, but they can hardly deny France the right to this opening when Muskie has just met with Gromyko. The Chinese, who have a greater verbal involvement in this cold war, are harsh and condemnatory and assert that this is a Soviet success. As far as most European countries are concerned, they feel at heart rather jealous of this initiative and of France's diplomatic freedom. It could be said that comments are split between approval on the part of the moderate rightwing and the left and criticism on the part of the less accomodating rightwing. The French opening is in fact aimed--apart, of course, from the dialogue's direct and specific aims--at not allowing the left to take the credit for the benefits of the search for a European neutrality, as is happening in the movement prematurely termed the "Euroleft," which centered last week on Madrid, with Mitterrand's visit to Felipe Gonzalez and Santiago Carrillo--separately--following his talks in depth with Berlinguer.

Neutrality is, at present, an excessive word; not even Giscard's France, with the independent policy already formulated by De Gaulle, could declare that neutrality at a given moment. It is probably a matter, on the one hand, of drawing Washington toward lost moderation and the former paths of coexistence and dialogue, and, on the other hand, of maintaining a right to make one's own decisions on matters as delicate as dealing with the countries producing oil and raw materials, the marketing of one's industrial and agricultural products, the assurance that one's military bases (France has none) will not be used for operations like that in Iran and, in the last resort, the final ability to decide between war and peace.

We must await some statements, some indiscretions and, above all, some facts in order to consider the significance of the meeting in Poland. Edward Gierek's presence at the conversation has suggested that it could be that France and Poland, with such a long-standing and renewed friendship, could keep in constant touch to help reduce tension, each representing one bloc. But if Poland could clearly hold this role--and Brezhnev's presence bears witness to it--it is difficult to imagine that the United States would assign it to France, which it will not even allow to represent the other West European countries. But it cannot be unaware that this represents a very deep breach in the attempted bloc, and that its global policy is affected by Europe's reluctance and the determined French state.

ANV TO ACT 'AUTONOMOUSLY' WITHIN BASQUE COALITION

LD221613 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] Basque Nationalist Action [ANV] is to act autonomously within [radical-left independence coalition] Herri Batasuna, its secretary general, Josu Aizpurua, has announced. ANV is the only group within Herri Batasuna to be legalized so far. Josu Aizpurua said that this does not mean a split within the patriotic coalition nor a distancing from the stands of Herri Batasuna. Unofficially, some leading members of Basque Nationalist Action have said that the principal problem at present is the participation of the party's elected members in Basque institutions. This clashes directly with the stand taken so far by Herri Batasuna, which decided to abandon the Basque government, town councils and county councils until certain political conditions are met.

EC INDECISION CLEARS WAY FOR PARTICIPATION IN OLYMPICS

LD220851 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 19 May 80 Pt 1 p 1

[Lars Th. Kjolbye report: "EEC Olympic Boycott Abandoned"]

[Excerpts] Naples--Denmark acquired an alibi in Naples on Sunday for not recommending to the Danish Olympic Committee to stay away from the summer Olympics in Moscow. The nine EEC nations' foreign ministers concluded their Italian weekend meeting without reaching agreement on a common approach to the question of a boycott of the Moscow games following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The foreign ministers limited themselves to mutual briefings of the situations in their respective countries. Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen put forward the Danish Government attitude--that the Olympic committees themselves should decide to what extent they would take part in the Olympic games. The final date for acceptance of the invitation is Saturday. On the other hand, Denmark would not have gone against a common EEC approach if such an approach had proved possible.

Culture Minister Lise Ostergaard will give an account of the goverrment attitude in the Folketing on Tuesday in her capacity as sports minister. She will now have the opportunity to repeat the government's views on the principle of noninterference. Because of the lack of unity within the EEC the government will now be able to avoid giving advice and making requests to Danish sportsmen who have already been given the prospect of traveling to Moscow by the Danish Olympic Committee.

After the lack of support for a common EEC approach to an Olympic boycott, Danish Olympic Committee Chairman Kurt Moller has no reason to call an extraordinary meeting of the committee. "There is now no change in the situation. We would have called an extraordinary meeting if we had been requested to by the government. If there had been agreement at the EEC foreign ministers' meeting we would probably have received a request from the government, even though I cannot see why the EEC should decide whether Denmark takes part or not. I cannot see any reason why Denmark should not now participate at the Olympic games," Kurt Moller said.

SVENSKA DAGBLADET: OLYMPIC TEAMS TO COMPETE IN MOSCOW

[Unattributed report: "Swedish Will Compete in Olympics"]

[Text] Sweden will compete in the Olympic games in Moscow this summer. The expected decision came on Monday. "We are unanimous," said C.-G. Anderberg, chairman of the Executive Council of the Swedish Olympic Committee.

The Swedish Olympic Committee's meeting was preceded by a discussion with leaders and active sportsmen from various summer Olympic associations. Here too there was total agreement: Sweden will take part.

Earlier, riders and yachtsmen had expressed their hesitation about competing. They considered the loss of competent opponents to be too great. "Today both the riders and yachtsmen declare that they are ready to take part in the Olympic games," C.-G. Anderberg explained.

IMPLEMENTATION OF SANCTIONS AGAINST IRAN DELAYED

LD230102 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2326 GMT 22 May 80

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Orders to implement sanctions against Iran because of the American hostages crisis may not be made until Thursday next week, the Foreign Office said tonight.

The orders were originally expected to be made this week--possibly today (Thursday). But the Foreign Office announced tonight that the orders would be made not later than Thursday next week--sooner if possible.

The orders would impose sanctions from midnight on the day they were made. They would prohibit exports to Iran under the contracts made after the orders, and contain provisions on transporting goods to Iran and on service contracts relating to new industrial contracts in Iran.

The Foreign Office said that this was a government decision.

Britain is the only Common Market country to refuse to backdate the sanctions to November 4 last year--when the American hostages were seized.

Earlier this week the government faced a row when MP's on both sides of the House of Commons protested that Parliament had not been asked about backdating the sanctions, and the government had to do an about-turn on its agreement with its EEC partners.

The orders in council would be made under the Iran (Temporary Powers) Act 1980 and the Import, Export and Customs (Defence) Act, 1939.

Officials said there were practical difficulties in implementing the orders sooner. Parliament was now rising for the recess, a public holiday was due, and Britain had to coordinate her actions with Common Market partners.

THATCHER, HAUGHEY CONFER ON ULSTER PROBLEM

LD221037 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 22 May 80 pp 1,36

[Nicholas Comfort report: "Cool Reception for Haughey's Ulster Plan"]

[Text] Mr Haughey, the Irish prime minister, last night called on Britain to persuade Ulster's Unionist majority to accept a united Ireland under a constitution rewritten by the Dublin government to protect its interests.

His appeal followed talks at Downing Street during which Mrs Thatcher apparently did nothing to encourage his hopes, reiterating the British view that the people of the province must be free to decide for themselves.

The Irish leader was not specifically consulted about the government's impending discussion paper on the future of Northern Ireland.

The paper is expected to be axed on an assembly elected by proportional representation and exclude the "Irish dimension" sought by Dublin.

But Mr Haughey said: "I cannot support any proposal that would be cast entirely in a Northern Ireland context because I think it would be doomed to failure."

There had been uncertainty in British Government circles as to how Mr Haughey, acquitted of involvement in IRA gun-running scandal in 1970, might tackle the Northern Ireland question in his talks with the prime minister.

Both leaders had been forthright in their views during a private 45-minute talk, and it appeared that each had earned the respect, though not the agreement, of the other.

Although the two governments appeared as far apart on Northern Ireland as they have been for several years, the final communique indicated a desire to ensure this did not stand in the way of close collaboration on other matters.

"My meeting with Mrs Thatcher was one of the most friendly, cordial meetings I have had with any politicians," Mr Haughey said after the talks broke up, having overrun the time allowed for them.

And despite his hard line on a united Ireland, Mr Haughey showed his goodwill by announcing that his government would act to end the "anomaly" under which Britons living in Ireland cannot vote while Irish citizens in Britain enjoy full political rights.

This situation has come under bitter attack from Conservative backbenchers, and the Irish leader said he was ready to tell his Cabinet that "we'd be prepared to do something about it as soon as possible."

The Downing Street talks--which also involved at various stages Lord Carrington and Sir Ian Gilmour from the Foreign Office, Mr Atkins, Northern Ireland secretary and Mr Brian Lenihan, the Irish foreign minister--also agreed on the need for regular consultations.

Security, although reviewed, did not overshadow the basic political arguments about the future of Northern Ireland. While neither side wished to suggest that it could not be further improved, each leader appeared to accept that the other was doing their best.

It was unclear last night whether Mr Haughey had harboured any serious expectation that Mrs Thatcher would show interest in a united Ireland, having bluntly stated in the Commons on Tuesday that the future of the province was no-one else's business.

The Irish leader made it clear that the prime minister had given him a full hearing, but went on to reiterate that the course her government was reportedly following would not, in his view, end the violence.

Mr Haughey underlined Dublin's disavowal of violence and its commitment to work toward a united Ireland only through the consent of the majority in the north.

But he emphasised that it was up to the British Government to bring about that consent if it really wanted to secure a peaceful settlement.

There could be "no political progress," he said, as long as the Unionists believed they exercised a right of veto over any solution which might appeal to the British Government.

Mr Haughey was implacable in his opposition to any temporary effort to settle the Northern Ireland problem.

[Text] Speaking today at a press conference, the director of the Soviet pavillion at the Cyprus International Fair, Mr Babesko, stressed that Soviet relations with Cyprus have a friendly and steady character and are developing in accordance with the principles of equality and of mutual respect. Within the pavillion, he added, 1,000 items from nine Soviet export organizations are exhibited. The Soviet commercial attache, Mr Grigoryan, responding to a journalist's question, said that Soviet-Cypriot trade in 1980 is expected to reach 16 million pounds. He also said that the Soviet Union exports fuel oil, timber and other articles to Cyprus, and primarily imports spirits, fruits and clothing.

CAR MINISTER DISCUSSES COOPERATION, COMMENTS ON RALLIS SPEECH

AB221936 Paris AFP in French 1646 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] Athens, 22 May (AFP)--Economic cooperation between Greece and the Central African Republic as well as Greek participation in the Bangui international meeting next June were the main topics of talks between the Central African minister of transport, Mr Timothe Malendoma and Greek leaders, namely the ministers of foreign affairs and trade, Mr Konstandinos Mitsotakis and Mr Stavros Dhimas respectively.

Mr Malendoma, who is on a 2-day visit to Athens, delivered a personal friendly message from President David Dacko to the Greek prime minister, Mr George Rallis. During his first speech in Parliament on Wednesday, Mr George Rallis underlined the importance Greece accords to her relations with Third World countries. In special reference to the African countries he described them as fertile lands for wider cooperation.

I AVYI SEES 'PROBLEMS' IN POLICY STATEMENT

AT221504 Athens I AVYI in Greek 22 May 80 p 8

[From the I AVYI column: "The Policy Statement"]

[Text] Naturally nobody expected the policy statement which Rallis read yesterday in the chamber to chart an essentially new policy compared to the policy of the previous New Democracy governments. After all, the prime minister himself hastened to stress the continuation of the basic direction of the Karamanlis' governments. Naturally our first--and one could say the most general point of opposition to the Rallis policy statement rests on our long standing belief that the country needs to have a policy on basic nationa, economic and internal issues radically different from the policy the New Democracy Party followed during all these years.

However, in addition to this basic observation which determines the depth of our substantive differences with the government and with the policy which was declared yesterday, we shall not reject a good-willed and constructive critique to the Rallis Government, something that, after all, we did in the past. Examining the Rallis policy statement from this perspective it is found to contain certain new elements which require special stress.

First it is obvious that Rallis wanted to give his statement a tone of mildness and moderation, something that is undoubtedly positive. At the same time, however, within this general tone he presented in a low key the most serious problems which the country is facing and which to a great extent are due to the policies of the previous New Democracy governments. There is a clear disproportion between the seriousness of the national, economic, social and political problems the country is facing and which the people are enduring daily and the picture that the Rallis policy statement gave of these very same problems.

Despite the repetition of the well-known positions of the previous governments, on the issue of foreign policy there is--even though rhetorically--a stress on a search for greater independence in the choice of the country without the usual underlining of "Atlantic solidarity" as the basic axis for the formulation of foreign policy. Of course, life will show how much substantive content these rhetorical expressions have and whether the repetition of the formula for "a special relationship" with NATO, which in practice had been muted in view of the goal of complete return, can mean the intention of greater resistance to U.S.-NATO pressures. [paragraph continues]

In any case, it is not a positive point that, in speaking about the factors which exacerbate the international situation, Rallis referred only to the Afghanistan issue and the detention of the U.S. hostages in Tehran, keeping completely silent about the U.S. cold war activities which are being manifested with increasing intensity.

Rallis' position on the issue of economic policy was entirely negative. Without any pretexts he gave the "green light" to the unaccountability of the notorious "private intiative." This is a direction which will cost the national economy and the people's standard of living very dearly. The expectation that inflation will be blocked by giving additional incentives to private capital for economic development is not based either on the facts of experience or on any serious scientific analysis. The essentially unaccountable activity of large capital, especially in the current circumstances, will intensify all phenomena of the economic crisis, will compress the domestic market reducing the people's purchasing power, will increase the deficit in the balance of payments and will bring massive unemployment to our country.

This basic direction of "private initiative" which Rallis announced together with the downgrading of the public sector to the classic role of essentially a servant of large private entrepreneurial capital will disastrously stamp our economic and political life by attempting to pile the burdens of the economic crisis on the working people and by causing very sharp social and political upheavals.

Within this framework not one of the--vague in any case--promises Rallis gave about the income of the working people can possibly be implemented. And perhaps it is not accidental that the prime minister avoided adopting the most effective measure so far to guarantee the purchasing power of workers and employees' incomes, that is, the cost of living readjustment which constitutes the command demand of the entire trade unionist movement.

Within the above framework it now remains to see in action how Rallis will implement his declarations that he wants a mild political atmosphere, that he will seek dialogue with the opposition and so forth, because politics is not an abstract science. It moves according to existing problems and oppositions. When Rallis talks about the comfortable parliamentary majority of his government he should not lose sight of what is happening at the level of popular masses.

We shall wait, therefore, to see how the promises for a dialogue will be put into practice, into a reality that until now has been very different. For instance, we will wait to see what will happen to the disgrace called information through television. But at the same time, we will wait for the end of the antidemocratic and antitrade unionist persecutions, the abolition of law 774/78, law 330/76 and law 3239, because a dialogue is not conducted only or principally at the top. Dialogue is inconceivable when the people are essentially forbidden to organize themselves and to struggle for their rights. It is inconceivable or without substantive content within the framework of a supercentralized state mechanism which moves with its own logic, suppressing the initiative of the masses, limiting suffocatingly popular self-administration and with antidemocratic methods imposing the government's "own people" on the trade unionist and cooperative organizations.

Therefore, within the generality of Rallis' statement there are very real problems and very real questions and anxieties. Consequently do not let the prime minister complain about criticism which lacks good will when the people already have had harsh experience and have learned to judge not from general promises and general phrases but from specific deeds.

DEMIREL COMMENTS ON DECISION TO BOYCOTT OLYMPICS

[Excerpt] The Council of Ministers meeting, which began at 1045 under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel, lasted 4 hours. Demirel talked to journalists on the issues discussed during the meeting and referred to the Moscow Olympics issue.

[Begin Demirel recording] The Council of Ministers discussed the question of whether or not to participate in the Moscow Olympics. This is what I have to say on this subject: Everyone knows that the Soviet Armed Forces invaded friendly and brother Afghanistan on 28 December 1979 and the first world reaction against this invasion came from here. The Turkish Republic was the first to declare that this was an invasion. Since that date, these forces have not withdrawn. The Soviet Armed Forces are presently in Afghanistan. There does not seem to be any intention to withdraw. In the light of this fact, the Council of Ministers has decided that the Turkish Republic will not send athletes to the Moscow Olympics. In other words, it has decided that Turkish athletes will not participate in these Olympics. [end recording]

DEMIREL CITES U.S. IRAN POLICY; NOTES INTERNAL ISSUES

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has said that the United States will not be able to solve the hostage issue by pushing Iran into the arms of others and that the attitude of the United States on this subject will not serve its own interests.

In a statement issued jointly to the ASSOCIATED PRESS and the ANATOLIA Agency, Demirel said that the issue of the hostages cannot go on forever. Demirel noted that Turkey is in favor of the immediate release of the hostages.

Recalling that the United States and certain European countries have begun to implement certain sanctions against Iran, Demirel said that Turkey has traditional friendly relations with Iran and this is why he regards it as beneficial to leave the door open. Demirel continued: It may be possible to say something through this door. We tried to be useful several times through humanitarian reasons and not because the United States is our friend and ally.

Replying to a question on the presidential election, Demirel noted that Turkey will select a president and it will not be ruined because it failed to elect a president for 6 weeks. Demirel declared that the difficulty in the election of a president results from the lack of rules. He said: If there was a rule stipulating that the parliament would be dissolved unless a president is elected in 10 rounds of voting, then this issue would have been solved.

Expressing his views on economic issues, Demirel said petroleum is available at official prices and sufficient fertilizer is being imported. He noted that factories have resumed production. Pointing out that the economic bottleneck is being surmounted, Demirel said that the businessmen's complaints about the lack of credit is a proof that the fight against inflation is being waged.

Replying to a question on anarchy and terror, Demirel explained that a large number of terrorists were captured this year and the state is countering terrorism. Noting that the strength of the terrorists cannot be compared with the power of the state, Demirel said: However, the state does not use their methods. The state's forces cannot murder. They murder. This is not a regular war.

Noting that Turkey imported goods worth some $80 million from Bulgaria last year and that, in exchange, it exported goods worth $20 million, Basol said that Turkey will export more metal, citrus, foodstuffs and industrial goods. Basol added that Turkey and Bulgaria are planning to increase their annual trade volume from $100 million to $250 million. The Turkish delegation that will attend the Turkish-Bulgarian Joint Economic Committee meetings is composed of officials from various ministries, the Turkish Central Bank and the State Planning Organization.

ECEVIT SENATE GROUP DECRIES JUSTICE PARTY PROPOSAL TO ELECTION

[Speech by RPP leader Bulent Ecevit on presidential elections at Turkish Mine Workers Federation Congress in Ankara on 22 May--recorded]

[Excerpt] The direct election of a president by the nation is only one of the apparent reasons for the constitutional change. There are other motives behind the change that are no longer being concealed. These are motives that have been exposed for years. The primary reasons for the proposed change in the system are as follows: Abolish the independence of the judiciary, abolish the Constitutional Court, cancel its effectiveness and ensure that the Constitutional Court does not have the authority to annul the anticonstitutional laws enacted by the Assembly. The opposition in parliament will thus be rendered ineffective. The Constitutional Court and the judiciary will also be rendered ineffective and then all the draft bills, including the bill on the implementation of the echelle-mobile system, will be enacted one after the other. This is the other aspect of the game.

The desire to amend the Constitution is based on the following principle: Government power will not be shared by anyone. All power will be concentrated in the government. This is entirely contradictory to the principle of democracy. The scheme consists of claiming that the Turkish Constitution, the laws and democracy are preventing the Grand National Assembly from functioning and electing a president as well as from convening to discuss the various bills and that therefore we should change the system and the Constitution. Rather than amend the Constitution, elect a president! Rather than amend the Constitution, ensure the attendance of your members, who are receiving salaries as deputies, at the Assembly to ensure the functioning of the Assembly and the enactment of bills!

Senate Unity Group Opposition

TA231134 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 23 May 80

[Text] A statement by the National Unity Group in the Senate says that efforts to solve the presidential election impasse through a constitutional amendment would lead the democratic system to an impasse. The statement signed by group leader Fahri Ozdilek concludes as follows: We would like to make public our belief that if political parties releive the moral pressure on their members, the parliament can briefly and easily elect the president.

APPEALS COURT REVERSES PALESTINIANS' DEATH SENTENCES

TA231031 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 23 May 80

[Text] The death sentences for four Palestinian guerrillas who killed two Turkish security force members and took over the Egyptian Embassy in Ankara last July were reversed by the military court of appeals. (Mervan Sebem), (Muhammad abu-Zerat), (Husayn Suleyman Abdallah) and (Mustafa Besesi), the four armed Palestinian guerillas, held the embassy employees--including the Egyptian ambassador--hostage for 45 hours before they surrendered without their demands being met. The First Military Court in Ankara, which tried the four Palestinian guerrillas and their three Turkish accomplices, demanded the death sentences. In its verdict made public today, the military high court reversed the first military court's death sentences. The verdict says that since this incident was not connected with actions which brought about the declaration of the martial law, the trial should take place in a civilian court. Accordingly the four Palestinian guerrillas and their three Turkish accomplices will be retried in a civilian court.

WORLD COURT RULES AGAINST IRAN; ORDERS REPARATIONS

WA241122 London REUTER in English 1116 GMT 24 May 80

[Text] The Hague, May 24, REUTER--The World Court today ruled that Iran had committed repeated and multiple flagrant violations of international law by supporting the seizure of hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and ordered it to pay financial reparations.

The chamber, principal legal body of the United Nations, said in its final judgement on the case that it would have to determine the amount of damages to be paid to the United States later, since Iran's breaches of international law were still continuing.

The court unanimously reiterated its interim order of last December 15 that Iran should release immediately all the hostages.

Chamber President Sir Humphrey Waldock of Britain said the 15 judges voted 13 to 2 to condemn Iran for a catalogue of violations of international law, including breaches of the 1961 and 1963 Vienna Conventions on diplomatic and consular relations. He added they had split 12 to 3 on the question of reparations. "The facts of the case speak loudly and clearly of successive and still continuing breaches by Iran of its obligations to the U.S." under bilateral or multinational conventions, Sir Humphrey said.

In Tehran, a Foreign Ministry official said Iran would not comment on the court's decision until it had been officially informed of the ruling. Iran has boycotted the proceedings and seats reserved for its lawyers were unoccupied again today as Sir Humphrey delivered the judgment, which took two and three-quarter hours to read.

Sir Humphrey said the case, which the United States brought before the U.N. body on November 29, was unique. For the first time "this was not just individuals or groups of individuals who set at naught the inviolability of an embassy and its staff, but the government of a state itself," he added. Iran's action in condoning and supporting the occupation of the embassy and two consulates elsewhere in Iran by Moslem radicals seeking the extradition of deposed Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi could do irreparable harm to international law which had been built up over centuries, he said.

However, the court criticized last month's abortive U.S. military mission to Iran launched in an attempt to rescue the hostages. Sir Humphrey said President Carter might have been understandably preoccupied for the well-being of the hostages and frustrated at the failure of diplomatic attempts to obtain their release. "Nevertheless the court feels bound to observe that an operation undertaken in such circumstances, from whatever motive, is of a kind calculated to undermine respect for the judicial process in international relations," he added.

The court recalled that its ruling last December included a request to both Iran and the United States not to take any action which might aggravate the tension between them. It added it was giving no ruling on the question of the legality of the American military operation, which was aborted when three of the eight helicopters being used developed mechanical problems. Eight Americans died when a helicopter collided with a C-130 transport plane during the withdrawal.

The court did not rule on another U.S. demand that the Moslem radicals responsible for the embassy seizure should be put on trial by Iranian authorities.

The chamber found that the international convention cited by the United States as a basis for such arrest and trial did not provide a basis for its jurisdiction on this aspect of the case.

The 15 judges voted unanimously to order Iran not to put any of the American diplomatic or consular hostages on trial or to force them to give evidence to any tribunal. U.S. Judge Richard Baxter did not attend today's hearing because of illness but took part in the vote.

A written version of the court's judgment, released after the public session, disclosed that Platon Morozov of the Soviet Union and Saleh el Dine Tarazi of Syria were the judges who did not believe Iran had violated international law. They were joined by Manfred Lach of Poland, a former president of the court, in dissenting from the majority view that Iran was obliged to pay reparations for injury caused to the United States.

FRENCH OFFICIAL VIEWS GENEVA CONFERENCE ON KAMPUCHEA

[Text] Geneva, May 26, (AFP)--The French Government deeply regrets the Soviet and Vietnamese refusal to take part in the aid to Cambodia conference but notes with satisfaction "the Soviet Union's last-minute decision to occupy an observer's chair," French Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Olivier Stirn told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE here today.

Mr. Stirn noted that France's position was that "we have recognised no one, neither Pol Pot nor Heng Samrin, and we will recognise nobody in Cambodia as long as Phnom Penh does not have a representative government."

Concerning Vietnam, he said, "France will only review its cooperation with that country when all Vietnamese of French origin have arrived in France."

Mr. Stirn added that the representatives of the nine-member European Economic Community had met this morning before the conference opened to define a joint policy. Their agreed objective, he said, was to make the meeting a "conference of effectiveness" that would stress Western Europe's "support of the member countries of ASEAN (Association of Southeast Asian Nations), especially Thailand."

SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL LEADERS MEET PRIOR TO TRIP TO IRAN

Kreisky Comments on Aims

LD241830 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1800 GMT 24 May 80

[Text] Austrian Federal Chancellor Bruno Kreisky will fly to Tehran tomorrow morning together with Swedish ex-Premier Olof Palme and the Spanish Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez on behalf of the Socialist International. The aim of their trip is a discussion with the Iranian president, Bani-Sadr, on the possible release of the 50 American hostages who are being held in various Iranian cities.

Felipe Gonzalez and Olof Palme arrived in Vienna this afternoon, 24 May. Kreisky said in an interview that the primary aim is for the West to establish contact with Iran in an attempt to create a good understanding between the European democracies and the Iranian Government. Kreisky confirmed that he will not cancel or postpone his proposed official visit to Greece on account of his trip to Tehran.

No comment is yet available from Tehran on the visit by the three leading social democrats. It is interesting in this connection that the UN special representative, the Syrian Ad-Dawudi, arrived in Tehran today. Ad-Dawudi was one of the five members of the UN commission investigating the crimes of the deposed former shah.

Departure for Tehran

LD250858 Hamburg DPA in German 0833 GMT 25 May 80

[Text] Vienna--Austrian Federal Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and socialist leaders from Sweden and Spain left Vienna by air for Tehran today for exploratory talks on mediating in the U.S.-Iranian hostage affair. Kreisky, Olof Palme and Felipe Gonzalez intend to look into possibilities for release of the 53 American hostages on behalf of the Socialist International.

Palme and Gonzalez, who like Kreisky are deputy chairmen of the Socialist International, arrived in Vienna Saturday and conferred with Kreisky late into the night. Kreisky referred to the initiative of the Socialist International, which had been prepared secretly for weeks, as "purely a fact-finding tour" and "informal." Informed circles said the Socialist International thought it important to make early contact with the newly elected Iranian parliament, which is to meet for the first time on Wednesday and which is to play a key role in deciding the further fate of the hostages. It is thought the three politicians will remain in Tehran for 24 hours. Kreisky is expected in Athens Tuesday for an official visit to Greece.

SCHMIDT, GENSCHER TO VISIT MOSCOW 30 JUN-1 JUL

LD271018 Hamburg DPA in German 0957 GMT 27 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher will travel to Moscow on 30 June for their announced 2-day talks with the Soviet leadership. It was learned from reliable quarters in Bonn today that the dates for the visit--30 June to 1 July--were arranged last Friday in a talk between Genscher and Soviet Ambassador to Bonn Vladimir Semenov. Bonn had recently proposed a date between 30 June and 4 July.

It appears that the major topics of Schmidt's talks with Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev will be the crises regarding Afghanistan and the Mideast as well as questions pertaining to disarmament. It was learned that the chancellor expects Brezhnev to react to his proposal that the East and West agree to renounce the deployment of nuclear medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe for several years in order to use this time for negotiations on these weapons.

SCHMIDT REPORTEDLY CONTACTS GISCARD ON OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

[Excerpt] Hamburg--According to a report in the BERLINER MORGENPOST (Sunday edition), Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, concerned about a disintegration of the Western stand on the Moscow Olympics, has sent a letter to French President Giscard d'Estaing in which he once again outlines Bonn's assessment. The report says that, in the view of informed circles in the federal capital, a postponement of the deadline for registration for the games by the IOC beyond 24 May would give Paris the chance to keep its earlier promise to the Federal Government--that France would take its cue from the German attitude.

EGYPT'S MUBARAK ARRIVES IN BONN, MEETS TOP OFFICIALS

Arrival Statement

NC261222 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1138 GMT 26 May 80

[Text] Bonn, 26 May--Vice President Husni Mubarak has stated that he carries a message from President Anwar as-Sadat for West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on the latest developments related to the question of Palestinian autonomy. In a statement to the MENA correspondent upon his arrival in Bonn, the vice president said that he would hold consultations with Chancellor Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on the results achieved so far in the autonomy negotiations. He added: We will exchange views with senior FRG officials and brief them on our thinking regarding the next phase.

On the possibility of resuming the autonomy negotiations he said this depended on Israel. He emphasized that conditional negotiations were unacceptable and that Egypt would not accept any preconditions.

On Israel's recent decision to consider Jerusalem as its unified capital, Mubarak stressed that Egypt regarded Jerusalem as part of the West Bank. He added: When we negotiate there should be no preconditions as long as an issue is under negotiation.

Genscher on EC's Mideast Stand

LD261332 Hamburg DPA in German 1238 GMT 26 May 80

[Text] Bonn--According to Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the European Community will adopt "a very clear stand" on the Near East question at its Venice summit in June. After a private conversation with Egyptian Vice President Husni Mubarak, Genscher emphatically told journalists in Bonn today that a speedy solution to the Near East conflict was an important task of the international community. Bonn supports the Palestinians' right to self-determination, it stresses the importance of a settlement of the Jerusalem problem and resolutely opposes Israel's annexation policies on the West Bank.

Mubarak, whom Genscher informed of the EC's forthcoming Near East statement, told the federal foreign minister about his visit to Washington and the state of the Egyptian-Israeli autonomy talks. A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Mubarak's remarks during his intimate conversation with Genscher were to be viewed as a "message" from Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat to Federal Chancellor Schmidt. No further details were given.

Like Genscher, Mubarak stressed the exceptionally good relations between the Federal Republic and Egypt and thanked the Federal Government for supporting his country "in many different ways." His exchange of views with Genscher on the problem of the Palestinians and the autonomy question had been "very fruitful" and there had been agreement on virtually all points. It represented the continuation of the close traditional consultations between As-Sadat, Schmidt and Genscher.

Genscher considered it significant that the Egyptian vice president had made Bonn his first stop on his return from Washington. Egypt's recognition of the Federal Government's Near East policy was valued. The foreign minister paid tribute to As-Sadat's "courageous and farsighted" steps. Genscher reaffirmed the idea that any comprehensive and just peace in the Near East would have to be based on a recognition of Israel's right to existence and also on the Palestinians' right to self-determination.

The Egyptian vice president is to fly to London for talks tomorrow morning.

MINISTER GENSCHER ON FOREIGN POLICY THEORIES, REALITIES

DW230908 Bonn Foreign Ministry Information Bulletin in German 20 May 80

[Prereleased speech by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Bonn on 20 May on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the German Society for Foreign Policies]

[Text] Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, at this festive function marking the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the German Society for Foreign Policies I express to you the congratulations of the Federal Government. At the same time I thank you as an independent and nonpartisan organization for having accompanied with dextrous advice and constructive criticism over 25 years of our German foreign policy--the representation of German interests in the circle of the international community.

It is to your merit, Mr President, that this has not been done in small circles of insiders but with the objective goal of establishing a broad national consensus for the basic issue of our policy, a task which is more necessary than ever in the present world situation.

During the 35 years since the end of World War II a profound change has taken place in the world. An anniversary such as the one we are observing here requires a retrospection so as to make us more clearly aware, through comparison, of the present situation, the current challenges. In 1955, a quarter of a century ago, the Federal Republic of Germany regained sovereignty. It was admitted to the North Atlantic defense alliance. Soon after it became one of the founders of the European Community. This was the first period of German policy, a period of building up: the building of a liberal, democratic state, economic reconstruction, and the inclusion of the Federal Republic of Germany in the community of Western democracies.

In the late sixties the second period of German policy began: a period of treaties with the East, the normalization of FRG relations with its Eastern neighbors, the establishment of relations with the GDR, the stabilization of the situation of Berlin, the improvement in the contacts between people in East and West and between Germans on both sides of the border, the intensification of efforts toward security and cooperation in Europe, toward arms control and disarmament.

Ladies and gentlemen, today, at the beginning of the eighties, we are in the initial phase of a new period of world politics and thus also of our own foreign policy. The new element becomes visible if we visualize the situation as it still was in the late sixties: At the time our country was living in an international system which had been almost solely marked by the goals and requirements of Western democracies. It was an Atlantic world, as it were. It included Europe's former colonies. Granted, they had become politically independent, yet nothing essentially had changed in our economic relations with them. They joined the liberal world economic system, continued to supply oil and raw materials, and served as commercial markets for the West's industrial goods.

Outside this world were the East bloc and China. They formed a second world, as it were--autarkic, separated from the West by the "Iron Curtain." Western policy toward this second, communist world was largely confined to security and containment.

During the seventies this divided world was fundamentally changed by three developments: the first was the Soviet Union's ascension from a great regional power to a global superpower which caught up with the United States in intercontinental nuclear armament and gained worldwide development of power through the organization of its air-transport capability and navy.

The second development was the open eruption of the antagonism between China and the Soviet Union. Linked with this was China's emergence from isolation and the establishment of relations with the West.

The third and final development was the entry of the Third World states into world politics. They ceased to be passive participants in the existing world-political and world-economic system. They rather became protagonists of world politics who want to make their own ideas and claims prevail and who, collectively and also individually, have power.

What ultimately stands behind these three developments is one force: the convergence of nations into one world propelled by modern technology and modern communication facilities.

Today the states can attain their goals of peace and economic weal only through worldwide cooperation. In the relationship between industrial and developing countries, their former one-sided dependence has given room to mutual dependency. And it is in no other way that East and West, too, find themselves compelled to develop dialogue and cooperation beyond their differences so as to preserve peace and solve contemporary world problems which concern all of us.

Global interdependence necessitates global cooperation lest the interdependent states jointly drift into chaos. Forms and instruments of worldwide conflict management and conflict solution become constantly more necessary, and the utilization of research findings on peace and conflicts in practical politics becomes constantly more urgent.

The talks which were taken up again in Belgrade in the meetings that were made possible there illustrate the will not to leave the crisis to its own momentum but to get it under control.

It is the decisive challenge of our epoch to create for the required global cooperation a world order which will make this cooperation possible and organize it in a reliable fashion. In the past, order between states mostly stood for predominance or submission. "Pax Romana," the predominance of a single imperial power, and "European concert," the condominium of a few hegemonic powers, were the formulas of order in history.

All of us know that in today's complex world in which more than 150 states exist these factors of order are no longer suitable. Hegemonic policy and the use of military force as a rule can produce but one thing in such a world: chaos, economic regression, refugee misery.

Nowadays, international order can only be attained through voluntary adaption, through cooperation on the basis of equal rights, mutual advantage and fair balance of interests.

Elements of such an order are pluralism and noninterference in internal affairs; cooperation in partnership and joint responsibility for the solution of global problems, and conflict settlement; and the balance of interests through a continuous process of negotiation.

What matters is to build such a world order of partnership. The objective is clear, but the road toward this goal is difficult and hard to survey. In view of this new, worldwide challenge, German foreign policy has also been facing new tasks. This policy is necessarily provided with an additional worldwide dimension. Politically and economically we must contribute our share toward the building of a world order of equal cooperation in partnership.

The readiness to assume responsibility by the Federal Republic of Germany does not mean that it is tempted to embark on lone actions on a national level. The foundation of German foreign policy is our incorporation in the European Community and in the North Atlantic Alliance. It is only within these two communities that we can ensure our country's survival and flourishing in peace, freedom, and socioeconomic stability. Keeping them strong and developing them further, therefore, is a foremost priority task.

Our affiliation with the European Community and with the Alliance, and our advocacy of peace, equal rights of states, international cooperation in partnership, and the implementation of human rights constitute the basic constants of our policy. They make this policy predictable to anybody.

Meanwhile, the European Community and the North Atlantic Alliance are not just communities serving an end. Rather, they are, above all, communities of values. From the very outset the European Community has considered itself the promoter of a great historical idea: the European idea of the freedom and dignity of man. It is the belief in this idea which united Europe. And we must resurrect the emotional force of this belief to overcome the present, difficult problems of the Community. More than ever before the present world situation needs a strong Community capable of action. And, inversely, Europe can ensure its future in freedom only if it consistently continues along the road of integration.

The United States is not an opponent but an advocate of European unity. It is aware that a Europe speaking with one voice is a better partner to the United States than a disunited Europe. The solid backbone of European cooperation and integration is the close relationship between the Federal Republic of Germany and France.

Just like the European Community, the North Atlantic Alliance is equally a community of values which is based on the conviction of the dignity and the rights of man. This is what makes the Alliance differ fundamentally from the interchangeable military alliances of the traditional style; this is what provides it with its vitality and its strength for overcoming internal problems and weathering external challenges. The awareness of being a community of freedom with a common destiny aborts any attempt to separate Europeans and Americans from each other. The Alliance will be able to live up to its mission of ensuring peace in the future only if all of its partners muster their contributions toward common security, and if the Europeans do not mistake the Alliance for a watchman's service for Europe. Only the will of the democracies in Europe and in North America to hold their own and defend themselves can preserve the Alliance's capability of action.

The Federal Government on the firm basis of the Alliance and the Community of the Nine will continue its detente policy whose framework it has set up over 2 decades jointly with its Western partners. If we realistically assess the options of detente policy we can neither declare it abortive after Afghanistan nor consider it superfluous in the future. It is important to realize what detente policy can accomplish and what it cannot. It does not promise to eliminate the fundamental differences in the concepts of values between East and West. Detente policy does not promise a cozy world. It does not even promise a straight progress free from setbacks. Nor is it any substitute for the will for our own defense; it rather makes it a precondition.

Detente policy must be primarily characterized by the consensus of opinion to rule out the threat and use of force as a means of solving conflicts and to eliminate causes of tension through joint efforts, or at least to defuse such tensions to a point where they will not end up in dangerous conflicts.

Detente policy requires the participation of both world powers. In view of the power-policy concepts and the ideological concepts of the one side it necessitates a combination of incentives and warnings. It must take into consideration the security interests of the other side and resist the temptation to shift the balance to one's own advantage at the expense of the other side. Balance is the inalienable precondition for any realistic detente policy.

Soviet endeavors to be recognized as a world power was an essential motive of the Soviet Union in reaching an arrangement with the United States via detente. It was in 1972 that the Soviet Union achieved fundamental recognition from the United States. Correspondingly, the Soviet Union also obtained the military means which allow it to act as a world power in the international arena. Since the late sixties its military capacity has been amplified to a point where it is now able to face the United States on an equal footing on the world level.

For a number of reasons, including the Vietnam war and Watergate, the United States has reduced its military efforts, its capabilities of looking after U.S. and Western interests in the world with military means, if necessary, since Congress and public opinion, since the Vietnam experience, tied the hands of the President and his administration. This made it possible for the misunderstanding to arise that the United States does not put up any serious resistance to unilateral gains of positions by the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union, which has never interpreted detente--in its phraseology--as a so-called "freezing of the objective historical development process," as a "protection of guarantee for decayed regimes" (Soviet Government statement of 22 May 1976), has felt encouraged to exploit the unrest and the colonial disintegration processes in the Third World for its own ends.

Afghanistan has made the West aware of where this Soviet double standard--the respect for the detente principles in the stability of Europe but their violation under the unstable conditions in other parts of the world--may end up.

In the United States the answer was an alarmed awakening. Supported by parliament and the public, the administration declared its determination to take up the challenge and to make the necessary efforts toward counteracting any further shifts of the world balance. In the eighties the destiny of man will essentially depend on whether it will be possible on a worldwide scale, as in Europe, to proceed from confrontation to a balance of interests and cooperation.

The Americans are agreed with us that the crisis cannot be solved through the transposition of the East-West antagonism to the Third World. What is just as important as ensuring the military equilibrium is the stabilization of unstable regions through the readiness for economic and political cooperation with the states of the respective regions in the world. states which are jealous of their independence. The principle that detente can work only under renunciation of the achievement of mutual advantage also applies to Afghanistan, and once again to both sides there. The Americans and the European Community, which submitted a proposal for a solution on 19 February 1980, adhere to this principle.

The Federal Republic of Germany's relations with the Soviet Union deserve special significance for detente policy in Europe. Without the treaties with the East, detente in Europe would not have been possible. Neither would the Quadripartite Agreement have materialized, nor would the Vienna MBFR negotiations have been arranged. If the foundation created in the relations of the Federal Republic of Germany with its Eastern neighbors were shaken, the detente process in Europe would be interrupted.

In this regard, the solid mooring of German policy in the Western economic and alliance system is the business basis. It is not just in our interest. It is only by detente policy's linkage between the superpowers that the development of German-Soviet relations can contribute toward stability in Europe.

The significance of Ostpolitik for the German problem is inherent in the desire to preserve through the maintenance and arrangement of contacts between people, the will of belonging together within the German nation, a will which represents a real psychological and historically effective force. It will be important in the eighties to continue this development without interruption.

What matters is to supplement the traffic agreement concluded between the two German states in 1978 and 1980--agreements which served the safety of Berlin to a special degree--with agreements in the fields of cultural affairs, science, and legal assistance and to make headway in the humanitarian sector in general and in travel alleviations in particular. We are prepared to seek additional, long-term agreements which will safeguard Berlin's needs in the eighties and nineties.

Already during the past several years, the military aspects of detente have moved into the center of East-West discussion. It is obvious that the eighties will bring the decision for disarmament or an arms race. Our successful efforts toward incorporating aspects of security policy in the final document of Helsinki proved to be correct. Our objective is unequivocal: 1. We want security on the basis of balance; 2. We want balance on as low a level of armaments as possible.

The option of making the eighties a decade of disarmament has not yet been lost, even if the developments of the past few months surely have not improved the chances for this. All efforts toward disarmament will stand a chance only if and when unilateral advantages are not sought but instead the other side's interests, too, are included in one's own considerations.

This must be applied to the continuation of the CSCE process, the institution and work of a European disarmament conference, the MBFR negotiations, and the negotiations on medium-range weapons.

It was the SALT negotiation process which introduced the principle of balance for the intercontinental strategic arms. It must be the goal for the eighties to establish this principle for the other sectors as well. The double decision of the Western defense alliance on the medium-range arms issue expresses the double objective in a classical fashion, namely: 1. balance, which is to say, no acceptance of the superiority of the other side; 2. balance on as low a level of armaments as possible.

On the threshold of the eighties the matter of the medium-range weapons thus becomes the crucial question: whether it will be possible to create a balance downward, meaning through disarmament, whether we will be forced to create a balance upward, meaning an arms race, or whether Western Europe will embark on the road of security-political dissociation from the United States through the acceptance of the growing superiority of the Eastern side.

The determination of the West to implement the Brussels decision without any restriction, which also means to negotiate without any precondition, demonstrates our will to do everything to ensure the balance and to avoid another arms race. Any doubt nourished in the West about our determination to create the balance therefore does not constitute any alleviation of the disarmament efforts but aggravates them because this doubt will nurse hopes in the East that a state of accepted superiority of the East might ensue.

If it is true that responsible security policy includes the capability of seeing the interests, anxieties, and hopes of the other side as well, then it will become clear that an essential role is played by the building of confidence. For this reason confidence-building measures will have to be an essential component of West-Eastern efforts. In this respect we are only at the beginning of the development of the existing options.

The quantitative and qualitative broadening of confidence-building measures must become a dynamic element of European arms control policy. What I mean by quantitative is that the regional sphere of application of confidence-building measures to be newly developed must extend to all of Europe as per the French proposal concerning a European disarmament conference. By qualitative I mean the maximum openness on all decisions and facts pertaining to security. Arms exports to all parts of the world must no longer be secret as they also affect European security. Arms policy decisions, the development of new weapons systems, are causes of distrust on the other side if treated as a secret matter; if treated openly they spell more predictability at any rate, and this is a precondition for building confidence.

It is easy to realize that this approach to the building of confidence demands more of the East than it does of the West since the latter even now offers a high degree of publicity as a consequence of our open society. But for this very reason the East should realize that what is at stake in the international security discussion also is the establishment of a balance in predictability.

The discussion on the TNF modernization which took place in the West especially in 1979 is an example showing the degree of predictability and calculability which the Western states offer the East out of their open structure. This element of security could be multiplied by corresponding behavior on the other side.

It is necessary to ask what course arms control policy for the medium-range weapons could have taken if the SS-20 advance armament in the East had been prepared just as transparently as has the TNF arms gap closure in the West. The positive effect could have been amplified once again if the SS-20 decision had been combined with an offer of negotiations on medium-range weapons on the part of the East.

In the past Europe had been the theater of terrible wars, and often it also was the starting point of wars carried into other parts of the world. Today it must be our goal to contribute toward the peaceful solution of conflicts in all the world. This applies to the Afghanistan crisis, to the Iran crisis, to the Middle East, and to southern Africa.

What we must do here is create models of military security which will not only provide us with stability here but which will also radiate this stability to other parts of the globe. What matters especially in difficult times is to work on the implementation of the goals of the Final Act of Helsinki and to recognize the yet unused prospects inherent in all three baskets. The CSCE process has been devised on a long-term basis. It must be kept up even if changes in climate occur in the East-West relationship. In such a situation its stabilizing function must prove its worth, even if it is only natural that the overall situation will have a promoting or a negative effect on the respective followup conferences.

It is especially in difficult times that the option to hold such conferences on a political level should be utilized. The existing consultations should be used for mapping out some concrete points in some baskets for Madrid which will make it possible to make some progress at the conference which is due to begin in November 1980.

This applies, for example, to cooperation in the field of energy and improvement in the information about economic policies in Basket No Two and to the continuous further development of humanitarian arrangements in Basket No Three: family reunion and the travel options.

What is of special significance as well is the observance of the provisions concerning the freedom of information, which deserve outstanding importance even beyond the CSCE realm of international cooperation in the development of modern information facilities.

Ladies and gentlemen, detente on the basis of equal rights and balance--this is one of the pillars in building a world order in which the states in common responsibility will secure their future in peace and welfare. Partnership cooperation between industrial and developing countries, on the other hand, is the second pillar.

The definitive powers in the Third World today are the will for independence and self-determination, the desire to implement individual identities and the striving for economic development. Only a policy toward the Third World in alliance with these forces can be successful in the long run and lead to fruitful cooperation.

The nonaligned movement is an expression of the Third World with regard to independence. The movement nonaligned at present is in a state of transition from its anticolonial establishment phase to the phase of maintenance and development of the just achieved independence and sovereignty.

The coming years will be also characterized by the dispute which has become obvious in Havana involving the alternative of political independence or leaning on the Soviet Union, which is considered by the representatives of this course as a "natural ally" of the nonaligned. The historical development which is unambiguously directed at the implementation of self-determination indicates that the trend toward independence will prevail over the trend of leaning on someone. Already in Havanathe great majority was against leaning on the Soviet Union, but also against any kind of leaning on the West. The policy of real nonalignment opposes every policy of predominance and of establishing zones of influence.

The Soviet intervention in Afghanistan has been condemned by an overwhelming majority of the Third World. The Third World feels that this intervention was aimed against it, and it does not primarily consider it an East-West problem. It demands in agreement with the West a solution of the Afghanistan crisis through a withdrawal of the Soviet troops.

The reaction of the Third World to Afghanistan shows that the policy of establishing zones of influence is bringing the Soviet Union constantly more in opposition to the Third World.

If the West, however, will act in a convincing way for self-determination and equal rights in the countries of the Third World, it can become a fair partner to the Third World. It would only lose this chance if it transfers, mirroring the Soviet policy of establishing zones of influence, the East-West antagonism to the Third World. It would also lose its chance if it ignored the legitimate claims of the Third World.

That means, among other things, if it ignored the Palestinian people's right to self-determination in the framework of a far-reaching and just, peaceful solution, or if it opposed the overcoming of colonialism and racism in Namibia and South Africa. Eventually the West would also lose the principles of fair partnership with the states of the Third World were it to let itself be misused as the protector of outdated structures. Developments in Central America will be a test demonstrating whether the West will have that insight.

Ladies and gentlemen, the concept for a Western policy toward the Third World can only be support of the independence and self-determination of the Third World. Only such a concept will have a future. It alone can preserve peace.

In this connection mistrust must be mitigated in the West and in the Third World. The mistrust of the nonaligned is based on their experience of colonial times; it is being ignored in this connection that the will for partnership today exists everywhere in the world.

The mistrust in the West has its roots in the close cooperation between nonaligned and communist countries in the anticolonial phase of the nonaligned movement. It is being ignored in this connection that this close cooperation very often has neither been sought nor desired by the people of the Third World, and that it has been forced upon them due to the shortsightedness of Western states and their denial of progress.

A long-term Western policy means renouncing the attempt to export our own political, social and economic systems to the Third World. On the contrary, it means respect for and approval of the Third World's independent way.

Next to securing and developing external independence, the determinant force in the Third World today is maintaining its identity, or--particularly in Africa--finding its identity.

Strengthening the independence of the Third World also means making a contribution to a peaceful solution through negotiations of conflicts in the Third World. The example of Zimbabwe in past months demonstrated in an impressive way that conflicts indeed can be solved peacefully and that they can be solved only in this way without chaos and destruction.

The Western concept of solving conflicts peacefully has gained credibility through the success in Zimbabwe, credibility in Africa as well as in the Third World as a whole.

Third, strengthening the independence of the Third World means supporting the trend toward regional mergers in the Third World. These mergers can contribute considerably to promoting the independence, political stability and economic development in the Third World.

A special task exists here with regard to the policy of the European Community. As an example of a successful merger of states with equal rights it is a manifold model for the Third World. Intraregional cooperation between the European Community and the mergers of the Third World can give important impetus to these mergers particularly in their first phase.

We Germans therefore have made ourselves the advocates in the European Community for such intraregional cooperation.

The cooperation agreement between the European Community and the ASEAN states, initiated by us, is an example of Europe's preparedness to maintain its opportunities and its responsibility. The same applies to the dialogue with the states of the Andean Pact which began last month. The Euro-Arab dialogue must be also activated and politically upgraded. And the dialogue which has been opened with the Gulf states must be also energetically pursued.

In Africa the first economic summit conference in Lagos has clearly demonstrated the tendency toward regional mergers. Here, too, the European Community must exploit the possibility of promoting such mergers. We are doing that super-regionally already in the Lome agreement. which envisages considerable means of assistance for the support of regional projects.

Strengthening the independence of the Third World means, last but not least--I am stressing this again--recognition and promotion of the stabilizing role of the nonaligned movement.

I would like to expressly welcome here Yugoslavia's wish to continue playing the leading role in the nonaligned movement after the death of President Tito.

It is to President Tito's credit that due to the activity of a European country such as Yugoslavia, the nonaligned movement from the day of its establishment did not have an anti-European character.

A future world system of peace and cooperation with equal rights presupposes that we consider the development of the countries of the Third World as a task involving us. Peace and welfare in our state also depends on the overcoming of famine in the Third World and the development of stability. This has been impressively demonstrated by the report of the Brandt commission.

Development assistance is a humanitarian duty. But it is also an act for the protection of our own vital interests. Between 1970 and 1978 the developing countries--even if we leave aside oil-exporting countries with their capital surplus--have achieved a growth rate of 5.8 percent annually. This is a growth rate which is lagging just a bit behind the 6 percent aim for the second development decade. But the figure 5.8 is just an average. It covers up different developments in the Third World.

Some of the developing countries--oil-exporting countries and countries which have achieved progress in the industrialization process--have achieved very high growth rates. But the poorer developing countries on the other hand are lagging farther behind; the growth rate in these countries sometimes does not even suffice to catch up with the population increase.

Also, in developing countries with a fast growth rate great parts of the populace sometimes remain practically excluded from the development. The number of the poor and the hungry increased in many countries.

In the forthcoming third development decade two things must be achieved: Development must be sped up in poor developing countries as well, so that satisfactory growth rates will be achieved; and the inclusion of all classes of the populace in the development process must be achieved in order to thus overcome absolute poverty, which means pure need.

In the year 2000 some 4.6 billion people will live in developing countries including China, which is more people than there are in the whole world today. This calls for great efforts in order to avoid a deterioration of the situation of the people in the Third World. The entire united strength of all countries is needed to improve it, of the industrial countries in the West and in the East as well as of the developing countries themselves.

In New York in August this year the UN special General Assembly will fire the starting shot for the beginning of new global negotiations between the North and the South, negotiations which will include the energy problem for the first time. It is necessary to exploit this chance to mobilize the strength of all countries in a coordinated policy for the great aim of overcoming hunger and need.

Priority must be given to increasing public development aid for poor developing countries. We hope that eventually also the communist industrial countries will take over a share of this help that will be adequate to their potential.

The oil price increases have created great balance of payment difficulties also for the oil-importing developing countries with a medium income. It will be important to make available for them sufficient means of assistance through international institutions, such as the International Monetary Fund and private banks.

As important as public assistance is for the poorer developing countries, the opening of the markets of industrial countries is of central importance for more developed countries.

In 1979 the industrial goods exports of developing countries not belonging to OPEC had almost the same value as raw material exports, aside from oil. In other words: The monopoly of industrial countries in exports of industrial goods is facing its end. Our yes or no to this development will make cooperation between the North and the South stand or fall. Closing our markets to industrial goods exports of the Third World and ignoring the change in the traditional trade structure--where developing countries supply raw materials and industrial countries supply finished products--would mean denying the developments in the Third World.

Keeping the markets open doubtless creates great problems for the industrial countries in the current difficult situation of the world economy. But we must master these problems such as the structural change.

The forthcoming global North-South negotiations for the first time are supposed to include energy problems, and thus the key problem of industrial countries and developing countries. Transition from the times of oil to other energies will call for greater efforts of all countries in saving energy: investments for coal, nuclear energy and other forms of energy. Transition will be mastered without a breach only if oil producing and consumer countries will cooperate in common responsibility.

Oil-producing countries want to develop their economy for the period after oil. They need, among other things, technology transfers, secure open markets for their future industrial exports, secure investment possibilities for their foreign currency surplus. The oil-consuming countries depend on reliable oil supplies and protection against abrupt price increases. Oil- importing developing countries in addition need help for the development of their own energy resources.

These interests can be satisfied only though cooperation, and it ought to be possible in an energy dialogue to organize a balance of interests and fruitful cooperation.

Let me stress a last point: the problem of development strategy. There does not exist one strategy that would be valid for every country; there are only many strategies which must be selected respectively on the basis of the special resources and situations in every developing country. But one thing applies to every strategy: It must be set up in such a way that it will initiate a broad development process including the masses of the poor. The division of the economy and the society into two sectors must be avoided in the developing countries: a modern sector supporting the growth rate, and a traditional sector where everything remains as it was for the people--that is, hunger and misery. Only a development process involving the masses of the poor in the long run can facilitate stable development.

A central part of such a balanced development strategy in most countries will mean giving priority to the promotion of agriculture, promotion of modern agriculture, achieving high production increases not with machines but with labor-intensive methods. Only with such a decisive promotion of agriculture will it be possible to solve simultaneously the threatening food problems in many developing countries.

Of decisive importance for the development of the international situation in the eighties will be developments in the United Nations. In the Western world the enthusiasm for the United Nations in the first decade of its existence has been replaced in the meantime by resignation, mistrust and a low opinion. A sober review shows quickly that the first positive approach was not just laurels given in advance, but the result of Western predominance in the United Nations. Soviet veto records have been confused with Western successes, and new majorities which had come about have been ignored.

A low opinion of the United Nations also in our country disregards the fact that the United Nations is not the cause of the world's problems, but that it reflects the world's problems. In view of the plurality of the international community of states, something like the creation of a world opinion emanates from the United Nations, which is becoming an ever stronger political factor due to the increasing importance of the nonaligned. It can be realized even now that political decisions in individual states of the world--although differently--take into consideration the world opinion expressed in the United Nations. Resignation or even a low opinion of the United Nations means renunciation of being involved in the creation of the world opinion.

Particularly such countries as the Federal Republic of Germany ought to undertake everything to include its opinion in the process of forming world opinion. The positive effects of the activities of the United Nations--with regard to safeguarding peace, for example--should not be underrated, despite their limitations.

The actual problem of the United Nations is the clumsiness of its structures which forces the holding of mammoth conferences on highly complicated issues. And yet rapprochement of opinion has been also achieved in such conferences, sometimes rather late, but not too late.

The question must be asked, for example, whether the present position held by the industrial countries on North-South problems, had they been maintained 10 or 12 years ago, would not have achieved considerable and constructive effects.

Several erroneous developments in the forming of the Third World's opinion on world economic problems are consequences of the earlier underdevelopment in industrial countries of awareness of problems which led to useless suggestions to solve the problem, although realistic suggestions would have had a chance to bring constructive influence to bear on the forming of opinion in the Third World.

What applies to associations and bodies applies to the United Nations: They cannot be better than their members permit. The United Nations, despite all its imperfectness, became indispensable long ago. We should therefore also in future try to activate it.

So we know at the threshold of the eighties that the new decade will bring about important changes. Every one of them; those that appear to be only of regional significance, as well, will have effects going beyond the decade. To every question we must make our contribution by taking up a clear position in order to maintain a development which will safeguard for mankind peace and a life worthy of human existence.

We will make energetic efforts for the continuation of an integration policy in Europe and against disintegration with regard to the customs community. We stress common ideas of values and agreement with regard to security interests of Europe and America as well as the determination to act accordingly, and we oppose modern anti-Americanism and the detachment of Europe.

We place a balance as an indispensable prerequisite of stability and security against the preponderance of the East with the danger of instability and eventual adaptation or even submission.

We place our efforts for a balance on as low a level of armament as possible against the danger of a new arms race. We place the cooperation between the East and the West, the continuation of detente policy on the basis of an alliance which is able to act, against a new cold war with its dangers for understanding and stability and its dangers for the interests of the German nation living in two states.

We place a Europe, which is the starting point of a peaceful solution of all conflicts in the world, against transferring the East-West antagonism to the Third World, which would bring about the export of tensions instead of peaceful solutions.

We place support for the independence and sovereignty of the states of the Third World against a policy of creating zones of influence and of predominance, which would make the Third World the starting point of worldwide tensions.

We place the concept of West-East-South cooperation in energy policy matters against the danger of a worldwide energy distribution fight.

We place our determination to overcome the North-South antagonism on the basis of our normal contribution and our responsibility for world peace against negligence for, or economic predominance vis-a-vis the Third World with the imbedded denial of moral and political responsibility.

We place our will to create through a dialogue and through negotiations a pluralistic and peaceful world system based on equal rights and partnership--versus action against each other or past each other--against conservation of old superiority structures and against the creation of new structures of one side ruling over the other.

Ladies and gentlemen, the foreign policy of the Federal Republic of Germany is urged to clearly define all its aims, to maintain constancy in their pursuance and predictability of its intentions. We will be able to go our way unambiguously only if we will always be aware that peace and human rights, self-determination and safeguarding peace will be the indispensable characteristics of German policy.

TWO LIBYANS INTERROGATED IN BONN AS 'HIT MEN'

AU241945 Rome ANSA in English 1920 GMT 24 May 80

[Excerpts] (ANSA)-Bonn, May 24--Two young Libyan nationals suspected of acting as hit men for carrying out the threat of Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi to "liquidate" his country's enemies living abroad were arrested today in Bonn and are being interrogated by West German police. The two youths, identified as 15-year-old Keni Nusbah Khalafa and 19-year-old Khaled Tagiuri, were picked up at a hotel in the capital shortly after their arrival aboard a flight to Bonn.

A young Libyan in custody in Rome has confessed his part in the killing of one of the four Libyan nationals slain in Italy with the statement that his victim, a prosperous businessman, was an "enemy of the Libyan people." Another young Libyan, who failed in his bid to gun down the Libyan owner of a restaurant in the Italian capital earlier this week, also told police that he had acted on the behalf of the Tripoli regime.

SAARLAND PREMIER ZEYER REELECTED ON SECOND BALLOT

LD231138 Hamburg DPA in German 0729 GMT 23 May 80

[Summary] Saarbrucken--Saarland Premier Werner Zeyer, CDU, who heads the only CDU-FDP coalition land government in the Federal Republic, was reelected for a 5-year term in a second ballot by the diet in Saarbrucken today.

In the first ballot on Wednesday, Zeyer had suffered a surprise defeat when--so observers believe--three members of his own CDU abstained. Today's vote was 27-23 CDU and 4 FDP--for, and 24 of the SPD opposition against.

GISCARD INTERVIEWED ON MEETING WITH BREZHNEV

LD232110 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 23 May 80

[Text] [Announcer] We now go over to the conversation with Valery Giscard d'Estaing, which is now being carried on television on TF-1 and Antenne-2. The president of the republic is replying to questions from Apul Nahon and (Gerard Saint-Paul) following his summit talks with the Soviet head of state and leader of the Soviet Communist Party, Leonid Brezhnev, in Warsaw:

[Question] Mr President, a great deal has been said and written about your trip to Warsaw. Would you please tell us why, in essence, was there this meeting with Chairman Brezhnev?

[Answer] For the following reasons: Everyone knows that there is serious international tension. Everyone knows it--you say so, and French and world public opinion is itself convinced of it. In a tense situation, the main leaders of the world must know the others' points of view exactly. You know that when we recall the catastrophes in world history in the last 50 or 100 years, many of these catastrophes were due to an absence of communication or explanation among the main leaders of the world at the time. And the object of this meeting was to have a conversation in depth with one of the principal authorities on the international scene, Mr Leonid Brezhnev, so that he would know our way of seeing this situation and of analyzing it, and so that I could also know the way he conceives and analyzes it.

[Question] Mr President, so why all this mystery surrounding the announcement of this summit?

[Answer] There was no mystery. On the contrary, we simply wanted to be sure it was held in a conversational atmosphere.

[Question indistinct]

[Answer] Conversation. If we had announced this conference 1 week ahead, or 2 weeks ahead, what would have happened? People would have said that this was a conference aimed at preparing decisions and achieving results. There would have been a mobilization of all the news media and everyone would have rushed to Warsaw. And since a conversation was what it was, we would have been unable to preserve the conversational nature of the talks. I want to tell you that, thanks to the reception from the Polish authorities and Mr Gierek, whom I thank, it was just a conversation. Those of you who were present saw that there were just a few people in a room, that nothing was going on outside, there were no crowds, no demonstrations, no attention--it was a conversation.

Moreover, look at the inconsistency--the inconsistency of the criticisms made in this respect. The same people--and you can make the comparison--are reproaching me for not going to Marshal Tito's funeral in Belgrade, forgetting to say that Marshal Tito did not come to either of the funerals of the two French presidents of the republic, General de Gaulle and President Pompidou. So people are telling me: You should have gone to the funeral to have a conversation with Mr Brezhnev. Thus, people apparently would have considered it appropriate to have talks between two wreaths and two funeral orations, for a few minutes, while the choice that we did make was, on the contrary, organized. It was a conversation in depth that lasted for 5 hours, as you know, and one that enabled us to get to the bottom of the subjects in a calm and thoughtful atmosphere.

[Question] There have been other remarks, other criticisms about the results--or for some lack of results--of this Warsaw trip. What do you have to bring back to the French people from your meeting with Leonid Brezhnev?

[Answer] Well, those who criticized it did not understand; (?for it means they did) not understand the purpose of this meeting. In international life there are two different forms of action: There are negotiations, the objective of which is to arrive at results. And there are conversations, the object of which is to exchange knowledge, points of view and thoughts. I repeat, it is very important--just think about it for a moment--it is very important to have in front of you one of the world's great leaders, to know exactly what is in his mind and to ensure that he knows exactly what we ourselves have on our minds. And the essential outcome of this conversation is that we now have a better knowledge of our reactions to the present situation, and, equally, of possible developments in this situation.

I can tell you that, on coming out of this discussion, Mr Leonid Brezhnev and I certainly know in a much more precise way what are and what would be the reactions to various possible developments in the international situation. That was the object of this conversation.

[Question] Has France's position on the core issue of Afghanistan changed, or perhaps we can say evolved, after this summit?

[Answer] No, France's position has not changed. You know that our position is that the armed intervention of Soviet forces in Afghanistan is unacceptable. We have said so from the start. I have exchanged written correspondence with Mr Leonid Brezhnev, and, naturally, I stressed this point of view to him and said that, therefore, it is necessary to put an end to this situation--it is necessary to put an end to this situation by political action, political initiative. As long as this situation continues, there will be a basic source of tension in the international situation.

[Question] Certain newspapers, particularly American ones, have spoken of France's going it alone and even of a breach in Atlantic solidarity. Just what are the facts?

[Answer] There are two things: There is that which can be explained, and there is that which is unacceptable. What can be explained is that the big countries have a tendency to believe that they have a monopoly on international relations. Some days before my discussion with Mr Brezhnev there was a discussion of the meeting between the new U.S. secretary of state with Mr Gromyko. Everyone found this to be perfectly natural. At last, people, said, an initial discussion is taking place. Yet the idea that the leader of a major independent country should also have a meeting with Mr Brezhnev arouses a sense of irritation. Why?

It is here that we come back to what is unacceptable, and this is the idea that France does not have the right or the possibility of having an independent policy without immediately being accused of disrupting Western solidarity. In what area, on what topic, in connection with which measure has Western solidarity been disrupted by this trip? [words indistinct] was a decision taken, was any action carried out that might modify or shake Western solidarity? None whatsoever--unless it is the very principle that France has conversations, and can have conversations, with whomever it wants to. And the fact of having an independent policy means especially that we can have conversations with the Soviet Union periodically. I meet Mr Leonid Brezhnev, generally, once a year. And this is one of the important means of gaining information and the establishment of data on the basis of which we conduct our foreign policy.

[Answer] Just a minute, just a minute--of certain circles and of certain political parties. You know, there are--and for me this is something basic--there are on the one hand the intelligence and the commonsense of the French people. I have not met a single Frenchman in the street who did not understand the [word indistinct] trip. Not a single one. And those that I have seen since understand that, in a situation of tension, the head of an important state--for the sake of world politics--what is important is that France not only has the right but from many points of view the duty to speak frankly with the other leaders in this international situation. Everybody understands this. And to speak with firmness, as I have done, it is known, and at the same time in an effort to seek and consolidate peace, which is at the present moment the aspiration not only of Europe but of world opinion.

So I come back once again to what I said earlier regarding independence. We often hear political speeches on the independence of French policy. But every time it is a question of acting or being, one has suddenly the impression that this independence is too heavy for some shoulders to bear. Well, as far as I am concerned, this independence does not frighten me. I must say that the day there is no longer any independent French policy is the day that there will be no more French history. The book will have to be closed, and, naturally, it is not I who will close it. And this is why I will continue to conduct an independent policy, in natural solidarity, as I have said, with those who are our partners in Europe and the world, and it is a policy that will be conducted in the service of peace and the security of France.

FRANCOIS-PONCET SPEAKS TO ASSEMBLY ON GISCARD-BREZHNEV TALKS

LD231411 Paris LE MONDE in French 23 May 80 p 8

[Unattributed report on statement to French National Assembly by French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet on 21 May: "It Would Be a Serious Political Mistake To Isolate the Soviet Union"]

[Excerpt] Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet thinks that the Warsaw meeting represents "an important and necessary stage" in the framework of France's policy of "firmness and dialogue," indicating that he wanted to "refute" the dubious and in any case erroneous interpretations given to this event by some people, some of which are surprising when you consider who is making them.

He refuted the idea that the Warsaw meeting was the result of "improvisation," and recalled that it was the result of an initiative taken by Mr Gierek adding: "In addition it is part of the continuation of a dialogue which, since the beginning of the crisis, has gone on virtually unbroken between France and the Soviet Union."

The minister then stressed the scale of the international crisis, stating: "Let us make no mistake about the fact that we are facing events whose consequences call into question the very foundations of peace. It would be a strange underestimation of the serious nature of the situation to believe that it can be tackled by normal diplomatic methods and routines." "It is clear," he continued, "that the time had come for it (France--LE MONDE note) to issue the necessary warnings now that the world is sliding down a dangerous slope. However eloquent the language of facts might be, it is likely to go unheeded if nobody dares lend his voice to it. In deciding to do so France is following its vocation."

Mr Francois-Poncet asserted that the president of the republic "wanted to throw all France's weight behind peace" and added: "There is no example of military power breaking down the resistance of a whole people when it is supported by the feeling, which the international community has, of the justice of its cause.... [paragraph continues]

"Any formula, which aimed in particular at legitimizing in some way an unacceptable de facto situation could only lead to an impasse. Any aggravation of the military intervention in the field could only increase tension...." "Afghanistan," he continued, "must not become a parade ground for weapons directed against the Soviet Union. Nor must it become a Soviet parade ground which would inevitably be a threat to others. The only way of bringing about a solution is to enable the Afghan people to freely decide their future and to bring neighboring and more distant powers to recognize their sovereignty."

Reply to Mr Muskie

The minister pointed out that Mr Giscard d'Estaing had informed Mr Carter, Mr Schmidt and Mrs Thatcher that the meeting was not intended to be "a negotiation leading to decisions" and specified: "This information was not given earlier because of unfortunate precedents, notably the case of the meeting between the four Western ministers planned last January whose nature was distorted by premature leaks which did not come from Paris." The aim of this meeting, he indicated, was "to enable two powers which have responsibilities in the world, to understand clearly each other's view on the causes of the current tensions and their reactions if these tensions were to persist or even worsen." He added: "During the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan last December it was possible to see to what extent communication had been lacking. It is important to remedy this. That is what France has done.... It is, of course, too early to assess the conclusions the Soviet leaders will draw from this for the future. I would like to point out that the French viewpoint has been explained to them bluntly and unambiguously; that they listened to it and seemed to understand it. The meeting also confirmed that the Soviet Union now seems to have a more precise idea of the scale of the crisis and a clearer awareness of the need to find a political solution to it. That does not mean that the Soviet Union views its settlement in a way which we can regard as satisfactory. It is clear, as was to be expected, that our positions are and remain very different."

Mr Francois-Poncet stressed that the criticism expressed with regard to this meeting "shows a fundamental misunderstanding of the principles behind French diplomatic action, the objectives it is pursuing and the situation on the international scene. France," he remarked, "is following an independent foreign policy. It has talks with whom it wishes, when it wishes. It does not need permission from anybody to do so. I note, moreover, that the need to maintain dialogue with the Soviet Union is unanimously recognized." Pointing out that Mr Muskie, the new U.S. secretary of state, described his meeting in Vienna with Mr Gromyko as "useful and necessary," the minister indicated: "Why should what is rightly deemed useful and necessary where Mr Muskie and Mr Gromyko are concerned become harmful or superfluous where the president of the republic and Mr Brezhnev are concerned?"

He stated in conclusion: "Trying to exclude the Soviet Union from the vital dialogue on the means of eliminating the causes of international tension means running the risk of locking international relations in a cycle of incomprehension and misunderstandings and abandoning ourselves to a blind spiral which could be fatal. Unless of course we are to consider that this dialogue should be reserved for the superpowers alone. As everybody knows, that is not France's viewpoint. However, it is not enough just to say this. This declaration would be derisory if we were to agree to submit our actions for prior approval and if we were to worry about the first sign of a 'frown.'"

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON EAST-WEST DIALOGUE

[Text] Rome, May 23 (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo today stressed that only a united Europe can contribute to a resumption of the East-West dialogue. In an interview with the Rome daily IL MESSAGGERO Colombo also criticized French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's meeting with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev in Warsaw earlier this week.

"Any initiative which succeeds in expressing, even visibly, European cooperation and a substantial unity of the West is preferable to the French president's move," Colombo said. "Europe will make its weight felt and contribute to a resumption of the East-West dialogue on two conditions: that it be united and that it consider itself an essential part of the West and not let itself be pressured by moves aimed at putting it in a position close to neutrality," the foreign minister added.

Colombo said that France's proposal for a world conference in 1981 "is very vague" and added that "the European proposal for neutralization of Afghanistan is still viable and could solve the most serious problem currently threatening peace."

With respect to the Atlantic Alliance, Colombo said that almost without realizing it, it has fallen into a position of inferiority, albeit not serious, with respect to its defensive apparatus. It is necessary to narrow this gap if we want to make our efforts for a dialogue effective.

The foreign minister said he is "a little less pessimistic about the difficulties afflicting the European Economic Community. Beyond the difference on concrete problems that the Luxembourg summit dramatically brought to the surface, I don't think there has been a wavering in the conviction of all countries that they are not only an integral part of the Community but that they must continue to be a part of it in the future," Colombo concluded.

TUNISIAN DEFENSE MINISTER CONCLUDES ROME VISIT

AU221950 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 22 (ANSA)--Tunisian Defense Minister Slaheddine Baly [as received] wound up a three-day official visit to Rome today voicing hope for increasingly solid ties between Italy and Tunisia. Baly met with Premier Francesco Cossiga, Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio and Foreign Undersecretary Aristide Gunnella.

Before leaving for Tunis the Tunisian official said that his talks with Italian Government authorities were "definitely positive." The minister said that Tunisia places particular importance on two points, "stability of nations along the Mediterranean basin and safeguarding peace in full respect of mutual values." With respect to cooperation between the two nations, Baly said he hoped relations between Italy and Tunisia will cover all fields, from economy to culture and a joint defense plan.

BERLINGUER VIEWS POSSIBLE DC RECOVERY IN LOCAL ELECTIONS

LD211527 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 16 May 80 pp 1,4

["U.B." report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 15 May speech in Milan: "These Are the Stakes"]

[Excerpts] Milan--What are we voting for on 8 June? What is the general political significance of this vote for the renewal of the local and regional administrations? [paragraph continues]

What are the political reasons which demand that we understand the full importance--the decisive importance--of this election and that we therefore mobilize to thwart the current rightwing plan, to reopen the road to change and regenerate this government?

The answer to these questions formed the core of the speech which the PCI secretary general delivered yesterday evening in Duomo Square. Some people claim, Berlinguer said, that this election campaign is not arousing the citizens' interest. Squares as full as this one, he added, in fact prove the contrary. But it is true, however, that in certain sectors of the population and the country there prevails a degree of indifference, of insufficient participation in the debate and in commitment to the issues at stake in the 8 June elections.

Already two different political prospects are clearly emerging, depending on the results obtained by the various parties, on whether some gain and some lose. One prospect is that advocated by us Communists. The other is that advocated by the Christian Democratic Party [DC] of the "preamble," that is, the alignment which formed a 58-percent majority at the DC congress and which "boasts," Berlinguer said ironically, the names of Fanfani, Forlani, Piccoli, Donat-Cattin, Bisaglia and so forth in descending order to Milan's De Carolis.

What does this group want and what is it working for? It has very specific objectives, both on the general political plans and in the context of the local administrations for which we are voting on 8 June. At the local level its explicit objective is to secure revenge for the June 1975 administrative and regional elections. That is, the intention is to cancel out the major positive innovation which those election results brought to the country's life by confirming the leftwing administrations which had already been governing in Emilia, Tuscany, Umbria and several provinces and municipalities in those and other regions and, above all, through the transfer to the leftwing forces and workers parties of the government of three more regions (Piedmont, Liguria and Latium,) several provinces and almost all the major cities (from Milan to Naples, from Turin to Rome, from Genoa to Florence and from Venice to Taranta), until then all governed by the DC or by center-left coalitions.

This then, the PCI secretary general said, is one of the things at stake at the 8 June elections. If the DC manages to regain power with its customary allies in the regions, provinces and municipalities which it lost in 1975, if it manages to succeed on this front also, its power system and government methods will once again spread throughout the country. And this would not only be a scandal, but would do real and profound harm to Italy--harm which would aggravate the damage which that system has already done and is still doing to to the Italian economy, work and culture.

Vote for Transformation

The 8 June vote must thwart this plan, must prevent the DC from regaining control of the administrations which it has lost and must confirm and if possible extend the network of democratic and leftwing administrations which are one of the linchpins to be used in action for reform and transformation which will develop and succeed in all fields of national life.

The present government is the result of two political factors which emerged following June 1979.

1--The DC congress, at which the forces favorably disposed toward a government including PCI participation, though gaining 42 percent, were defeated and at which the upper hand was gained by a majority aiming instead at a policy of division and rupture with the PCI (Donat-Cattin has gone as far as to speak of the need for a "reactionary surge");

2--The Socialist Central Committee meeting, at which a line prevailed of abandoning the struggle for a government of real democratic solidarity, a government including both parties of the workers movement.

This is why, Berlinguer said, we have a government that is not only entirely unfit to deal with the country's pressing problems but which constitutes a threat of a rightward swing.

This is a government which is incapable of establishing a foreign policy which, though within the contact of the Atlantic Alliance, can carry out a consistent autonomous initiative to facilitate dialogue, detente, arms reduction and peace.

The PCI secretary general pointed out the government's vacillations in its verdict on the U.S. raid in Iran, its stance on the Olympics issue and above all, most serious of all, the unconditional solidarity guaranteed for any further U.S. venture with respect to Iran--a kind of solidarity which evinces the low degree of national independence which characterizes the present Italian Government.

It has been stated and boasted that the United States has not asked Italian ships to sail to the Persian Gulf--that is all we need, Berlinguer exclaimed. In fact, this government has granted what U.S. Defense Secretary Brown asked, namely an increase in military spending and forces in Europe and the Mediterranean--so that the United States can concentrate its efforts in the Middle East--and stopover points for its airlifts. Indeed, all these commitments go far beyind the obligations imposed by the Atlantic Alliance, which only concern defense measures, moreover, in a well delimited geographical area. This is the way to compromise Italy's (or Europe's) vital interests in relations with Iran, the Middle East and the Third World. And it also implies abandoning what is now most important among Italy's and Western Europe's interests--that is, a task of moderation with respect both to the United States and the USSR to induce them to abandon the use of force, pressure and reprisals with respect to other states; for a resumption of the dialogue and negotiations with the aim of peacefully resolving the present conflicts and achieving a balanced arms reduction which will give everyone security. It is a dangerous fact that at a time such as this Italy has a government which has already shown that it has no real autonomy of assessment or initiative.

As for the country's internal situation, the government has not given the slightest sign of being able to deal with problems such as inflation, the imminent recession, the energy crisis, unemployment in general and youth unemployment in particular and the housing problem which conceals one of the most tragic abuses of power at the expense of young couples.

This, therefore, is an inept government, on the basis of all its activities. Its continuation in office could cause irreparable harm to the republic. This is because its foundations are small, narrow and limited and because the logic behind its formation and toward which it is being driven more and more by the DC's rightwing forces, which constitute its supporting framework, is a logic of division and rightwing swing in all fields.

PALME CONFIRMS REPORTS OF MISSION TO IRAN

NC241821 Paris AFP in English 1812 GMT 24 May 80

[Text] Stockholm, May 24 (AFP)--Former Swedish Premier Olof Palme left for Vienna today on his way to Tehran, where it was believed he would participate in a bid with two other Socialist International leaders to gain release of the U.S. hostages.

Mr. Palme said he, Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and Spanish Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez would leave tomorrow for Tehran to try to meet with Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr.

The Iranian Foreign Ministry, in a clarifying note today, said the government's position on the hostages had not changed and the new Iranian Parliament would decide their fate. The diplomats have been held since November 4.

Mr. Palme emphasized that he was making the trip as a "private person" and not as a representative of the Socialist International. He said he had no assurance that a meeting with Mr. Bani-Sadr would take place.

KREISKY ARRIVES FOR TALKS, WARNS AGAINST PRESSURE ON IRAN

AT270825 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0400 GMT 27 May 80

[Excerpts] Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky arrived in Athens from Tehran at 0215 [1115 GMT] today on an official visit. The leader of the Swedish Socialist Party Olof Palme and Spanish Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez also arrived at Ellinikon Airport with Kreisky and departed a short time later. Kreisky was welcomed at the airport by the Greek ambassador to Vienna and the Austrian ambassador to Athens and by the director on protocol of the Foreign Ministry. Kreisky will be received by President of the Republic Karamanlis and will confer with Prime Minister Rallis. The Rallis-Kreisky talks will start this morning and will continue tomorrow. Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, the ambassadors of the two countries and other officials will also attend the talks.

Shortly before his departure from Tehran for Athens the Austrian chancellor said there are certain differences of opinion between the Iranian leaders on the methods with which the Iran-U.S. crisis will be solved. Kreisky, who headed the three-man delegation of the Socialist International, said after a meeting of the Revolution Council, which he attended together with Felipe Gonzalez and former Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme, that a solution could be found if all the members of the Council are united. He added, however, that during their meetings with Iranian leaders they were given different views on the Iran-U.S. crisis.

Press Conference on Iran

AU270811 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0511 GMT 27 May 80

[Michael Kerbler report on Kreisky arrival in Athens Airport on 27 May, with recorded excerpts from Kreisky statements in English, with German translation superimposed]

[Summary] At an improvised press conference at Athens International Airport Chancellor Kreisky declared initially: [Begin Kreisky recording] "Our visit to Tehran was purely a private visit, a visit of three leaders of socialist parties--the Swedish, the Spanish and the Austrian Socialist Party. Naturally we went to Tehran with a kind of double function, being functionaries of the Socialist International as well. However, I want to make it quite clear that what we wanted was above all to establish contacts and to find out what goals are being pursued by the revolution in Iran, to understand more about what is going on in Tehran and Iran, more about the Islamic Revolution, about the goals of the revolution, the problems, about everything." [end recording]

In reply to journalists' questions, Kreisky then commented on the hostages affair and its consequences: [Begin Kreisky recording] "This was one of the many, many questions we discussed with the president, with Dr Beheshti who is one of the strong leaders of the Islamic Revolution, with liberal figures and with many other democrats. You know, I believe that the Iranians are very well aware of the dimensions of the affair. I personally feel that there will be a solution of the hostages affair some day--I cannot give you a date but I got the impression that they are fully aware that this is up to them, that it is their decision, and of course if--this I have to stress in a very clear way--if there is, if there are new pressures, yes, this would create new troubles." [end recording] "Kreisky also expressed the opinion that the Tehran leadership was interested in maintaining equidistance from both big powers--the USSR on the one hand and the United States on the other. In reply to the question whether more trips of the Socialist International would follow, Kreisky said in conclusion: I am convinced that we have now paved the way for others."

OPPOSITION REPIES TO POLICY STATEMENT DURING DEBATE

AT221935 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1825 GMT 22 May 80

[Videorecorded excerpt of statement by PASOK leader Andreas Papandreou to chamber of deputies on 22 May, followed by announcer-read summary of remainder of Papandreou statement and continued 22 May parliamentary debate on government policy statement]

[Text] [Begin Papandreou videorecording] Dear colleagues, yesterday in his policy statement the prime minister announced that he would seek to brief the Greek people and try try to achieve a democratic dialogue. Nevertheless, from the first day of his presence in the chamber he adopted a method of televised coverage of speeches in the chamber that decisively severs the chamber's political world from the Greek people because, between the people and the speaker, an ERT [Greek Radio and Television] announcer was interposed who read as rapidly as possible the notes from the minutes and the prepared speeches. It is impossible for us to understand, Mr Prime Minister, why you made this choice. I watched you on television, I watched a text which I could not follow, although I had seen you in the chamber.

Prime Minister Rallis was not able to pass any message to the Greek people yesterday. We do not care about his decision but I think we have a right to speak about our decision. For our part, Mr Prime Minister, we shall not accept the establishment of such an indirect relationship with the people. The simplest thing would be to abolish television and all of us go to reading newspapers.

Now let us deal with the government's policy statement.

It does not concern a new government. It concerns a recomposition of the Council of Ministers. It is one more government of New Democracy and it bears the entire responsibility for the economic, and national deadlocks into which it was led by its predecessor governments. The government's policy statement does not, therefore, constitute a starting point for a new policy but, on the contrary, constitutes the swan song of New Democracy and of the right. [applause]

I must admit that the term "policy statement" is surprising when it comes from the mouth of New Democracy or its representatives. In simplest terms, especially in the economic sector, there is not the slightest trace of planning, not even a trace of continuity. In 1975 Karamanlis promised the Greek people a 5-year plan. We are still waiting for it. Gentlemen colleagues, let us not forget that the plan concerns the years 1978 to 1982. It will be an outline of the past, a description of what happened in this unfortunate economy of our country, rather than a prospect for the future. However, even if the government had sought to express a policy statement it would have been difficult for it because, dear colleagues, the countdown for it has already begun. It is clear that we are marching rapidly toward elections. [applause] It is indeed true that the new government is a government of summer vacations. [end videorecording]

[Announcer] Then PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou stressed: For us, for PASOK and for the people, New Democracy always remains the political representative and agent of the interests of the economic oligarchy, foreign and local, regardless of the metamorphoses it passes through. Thus the goals of the right despite the masks it has worn at times--the Popular Party, the Rally Party, ERE [National Radical Union] and recently New Democracy--remain always: first, the conquest and appropriation of the state mechanism, the building of the state of the right with its extension into the parastate; second, its retention of power regardless of the popular will which it achieves every time by changing the electoral law, by resorting to violence and falsification which abolish or undermine democratic institutions and finally popular sovereignty; third, the absolute monopoly of mass information media.

Fourth, the formation of a patronized, government trade unionist movement led by it. Fifth, the subjugation of local administration within the framework of a suffocating centralization. Sixth, the complete dependence of the country on Atlantic centers of power outside Greece, the consequence of which is the formation of a foreign and defense policy which is not national but dependent. Seventh, the active defense of the interests of the oligarchy within the framework of an intensely antipopular incomes policy.

The leader of the opposition, Andreas Papandreou, referring to foreign policy said: The foreign policy of the current, New Democracy government constitutes a continuation and extension of the policy of the Karamanlis governments which was described by Karmanlis himself as a multidimensional policy because of the openings to Moscow, China, the Balkan and the Arab countries.

However, as we stressed from the chamber's rostrum, the country's foreign policy has remained only one-dimensional and has remained strictly within the framework of the Atlantic Alliance despite its advertised beautification. The country's new prime minister gave a sample of this during his first interview with the New York TIMES on 9 May. He stated the improvement of Greek-U.S. relations and the country's return to the NATO military wing were the principal goals of his policy . He did not forget that the [former] Foreign Minister Rallis hastened to declare from Moscow, during the visit of the then prime minister: No change has been noted in our foreign policy; Greece will not change course.

At the same time the prime minister remained silent concerning the provocative support of the unacceptable Turkish claims in the Aegean by the United States within the framework of return [to NATO] and the massive military aid by the United States and Western Germany to Turkey which upsets the balance of power in the Aegean. On the contrary, in his policy statement the prime minister proposed a serious dialogue between Greece and Turkey so that differences between them can be solved and added that each side must show respect for the other's legal rights. We wonder whether this is valid for Greece too and if so what are Turkey's legal rights in the Aegean which Greece must show respect for? And if there no such rights then what is the meaning of any negotiations when Greece is not asking anything from Turkey?

Then Andreas Papandreou emphatically stressed: It is well known that Turkey is claiming half the Aegean airspace. It is also well known that the government reacted with unending rounds of negotiations which, however, give lopsidedly emphasis to what Greece will offer. I am in a position to know, Andreas Papandreou said, that the Greek government repeatedly made specific proposals--concessions which, however, were rejected by Turkey. Under such circumstances we should not wonder why Turkey has grown even bolder. This is the explanation for the Turkish protest over the interception of its planes by Greek aircraft when Greek airspace was violated within the framework of the NATO exercise "Dawn Patrol 1980." The Turkish protest contains the following paragraph: Greece claims that Greek airspace was violated during the exercises. These claims are unfounded. During the exercises our planes did not approach Greek territory any closer than a distance of 6 miles. Therefore, the issue of the violation of the Greek airspace does not arise. Consequently it is clear, Andreas Papandreou went on to say, that the Greek Government has tacitly accepted the limitation of the national airspace from 10 to 6 nautical miles within the framework of NATO exercises.

For us, for PASOK, the Aegean status is protected by international agreements and treaties. It is not negotiable and we shall not recognize any new settlement which will limit our sovereign rights.

Regarding the issues of the continental shelf and oil the PASOK chairman said: Negotiations with Turkey are meaningful only with the following prerequisites: definition of the legal framework on the basis of the Geneva Agreement and revocation of the unilateral and illegal Turkish acts.

However, in addition to these things, he stressed, there is an additional issue of huge significance for our country. It has been learned that in Montreax in 1977 a gentlemen's agreement was reached to ban the search for oil in the Aegean by both Greece and Turkey, with the exception of the territorial waters of the two countries, until the Greek-Turkish difference has been resolved. Immediately, the Public Petroleum Corporation [DEP] hastened to deny the report. To be exact, it claimed that the administration of the DEP had never received instructions from the government concerning limitation of or preference for areas for prospecting in the Ionian sea. However, the managing director and technical director of the DEP, Mr Zakos, stated in May 1977 at the convention of the Greek Chamber of Technicians on the energy problem: Do not ask me why you can not go to the Aegean. Go to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs or to The Hague. I said that in the Aegean we have these areas of first priority, second priority, third and so forth. In the Ionian Sea we have areas of first priority, second and so forth. And they told me: go to the Ionian Sea this year and then we shall see.

Leader of the official opposition Andreas Papandreou, then referred to the issue of NATO by making the basic assertion that the government is persisting in its aim to return to NATO despite the fact that the reasons for complete and irrevocable withdrawal have not been eliminate since the brutal occupation of 40 percent of the territory of Cyprus continues. Now what does NATO offer us? Neither protection from Turkey nor protection from the north since there is no danger nor [word indistinct] nor protection in a world conflict since it is certain that we shall undergo a holocaust because of the bases. At the same time our bitter experience with NATO thus far can be tersely summarzied in the royal coup of 1965, the tyranny of the 7 years of 1967-1974, the invasion of Cyprus, the adoption of all Turkish claims in the Aegean and the unconditional arming of Turkey.

Our return to NATO is linked with concessions of national territory to Turkey, something that has forced the government to reject the Haig and Rogers plans but to accept, however, the original Haig-Davos agreement of 1978, the precise content of which, although not known to the Greek people and the national representatives, is known to 14 governments.

Within the framework of this agreement Greece undertakes an obligation to settle its differences with Turkey, in connection with operational control [in the Aegean], after our return and this is constitutes a moral commitment. At the same time, since during wartime all our forces join NATO, they certainly fall under NATO planning even during conditions of peace. That which, however, is skillfully silenced is the tragic consequences for our country in case of a clash with Turkey should these NATO demands be accepted.

In connection with foreign bases, Andreas Papandreou stated that in Greece many U.S. bases serving U.S. policy in the area are governed by two basic agreements, the agreement of 12 October 1953 and of 7 September 1956, and a large number of secret protocols. Both agreements are demeaning to our national dignity because they contain conditions that are burdensome for our national independence and transform the country into a U.S. protectorate. Meanwhile, a new agreement was initialed in 1977 which is also unknown to the Greek people but which remains in suspense and thus the old conditious remain in force. After all, there is the catalytic assurance for Greece of the New Democracy minister of defense that the bases will be retained regardless of return to NATO. The result of this assurance finally will be a holocaust in the event of a general conflagration. At the same time these bases will be used for interventions in the are irreparably exposing our country and certainly they will be used for the benefit of Turkey in case of a local war.

In connection with our great Cyprus issue the leader of the official opposition, Andreas Papandreou, stressed that the goal of our struggle is an independent, united and demilitarized Cyprus with UN guarantees of its territorial integrity, the return of all refugees to their homes and a charter that will fully protect the rights of the Turkish and Greek Cypriots.

Specifically, he said that the intercommunal talks are meaningful in connection with the formulation of the charter of the Cyprus Republic and can reach a successful conclusion only if complete demilitarization and return of the refugees to their homes take precedence. For this reason we disagree with the policy followed by the Greek Government, a policy which urges negotiations under unacceptable conditions.

Referring to the economic policy of the New Democracy government, PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou first analyzed in his speech the crisis through which international capitalism is currently passing and the similarities that may exist in regional countries like Greece. Then Papandreou proved, by comparing the country's economic situation with that of other EEC countries, that the economic crisis in Greece has much more dangerous dimensions which are due both to its structural characteristics, its dependent kind of development, and to the inconsistent, conflicting and essentially nonexistent economic policy of the New Democracy governments. Characteristically, he referred to the galloping inflation in our country, which he predicted would reach 30 percent in 1980, and to the balance of payments which appears to be the main inhibiting factor for the development of the Greek economy and the deficit of which for the year 1980 will exceed the $3 billion. Specifically about the drachma he said that its par value with the European monetary unit has dropped by 20 percent between May 1979 and April 1980.

We are truly impressed, Andreas Papandreou said, that in the policy statement no mention was made about the economic reality despite the fact that the Greek economy is on the threshold of bankruptcy. The unbearable high cost of living has made a mess of family budgets among the ordinary people. We are confronting colossal deficits in the balance of payments, a serious drop in productive investments which undermine the country's future development and a deceleration in the rate of increase of national product which now verges on zero.

The lack of any kind of planning, the nonexistent policy, the spasmodic, contradictory and conflicting measures and the constant experimentation with an incorrect course have caused this situation. The only consistency in the economic policy of the right is the class character of its policy, the confrontation of the crisis through the propulsion of the economy to recession and the policy of one-sided austerity that the government has established for the working people of our country so that the many may suffer and the few many enjoy. Also, Andreas Papandreou stressed that the antipopular, antisocial tax policy, principally the increase in the taxes paid by salaried people, inflation and the tax scale, the legal and the huge illegal tax evasion and the incentives have contributed to the plunder of the real income of the working people in our country.

Finally, he stated that the compression of the working people's emoluments and pensions and the real income of the farmers do not merely constitute a sample of the class policy of New Democracy but at the same time but effective obstacles before the increase of productive investments and the national product. Someday, Andreas Papandreou stressed, the government of the right should understand that the restraint or even the reduction of demand will not break the vicious circle of recession and inflation and this is an international experience. Only through the promotion and financing of productive investments, only through an incomes policy protecting the real incomes of salaried people, farmers and pensioners and with automatic cost of living adjustments and prices which will cover the cost of agricultural produce will it be possible to overcome the crisis and lay the foundations for rapid economic development. On the contrary, the government is again orienting itself toward the liberalization of the economy. It does not seem to have understood that within the framework of a galloping inflation and an atmosphere of profiteering this is a certain way to deepen the crisis. We again foresee that with its policy the government will cause a serious economic deterioration in the country.

Leader of the opposition and Chairman of PASOK Andreas Papanoreou concluded: The current government follows the road chosen by its predecessor governments of New Democracy. It too is a government of the right leading the country to even greater national and economic deadlocks, a prisoner of the forces and interests that support it. Its only contribution to our people can be its immediate withdrawal from power, the dissolution of the chamber and a resort to a popular vote. After all, the psychology that has been formed both within it and among the people is that it is a government of summer vacations. The road to change for our country should open. Understanding this need, our people in the next elections, whenever they may be held, will bring PASOK to power, the agent of change in the country,so that at last the great vision of change can be implemented. The hour of PASOK, the hour of our people, has arrived. We await with optimism the moment when the sovereign Greek people will entrust their fortunes to us so that the road which leads to our national independence, to popular sovereignty and to social liberation, can open.

Then Prime Minister Rallis took the stand and said that on the specific questions of the leader of the opposition the ministers of coordination and foreign affairs will give answers. Then the prime minister gave short answers to certain points on which the PASOK chairman had dwelled. Specifically, Rallis referred to yesterday's television coverage of the debate and said that it was the worst possible, but that this cancels Papandreou's charge that the government is trying to gag the opposition and not allow dialogue and expressed the hope that today's television coverage will be better.

Regarding the establishment of an office for the PLO in our country, the prime minister said that the Greek Government expects a reply from the Palestinians as to when they will be ready to open their office.

Regarding the Greek-Turkish dialogue and the interview which Rallis gave to the New York TIMES he said that relations between Greece and the United States as a rule are good except for cases when Turkey enters the picture and he insisted that the government's position is that the dialogue should be exhausted. If there is need for war, he said, we shall go that far but a discussion should be held first. It is well known that we are not prepared to sacrifice any point at all; there is no retreat from Greek positions.

Finally, referring to the Cyprus problem the prime minister said that the situation in Cyprus must be settled as soon as possible because if it goes on for 5 more years in its present form we shall have a de facto partition.

Then the Minister of Coordination Boutos took the rostrum and said that from everything the leader of the opposition has said against the government it emerges at once that, engrossed in his tendency to oppose, Papandreou refuses to admit that the Greek economy, despite the deep international economic crisis and its well-known inherent weaknesses, has demonstrated an unprecedented stability and adaptability during all the last years after the change in the regime.

Since the sudden and great increase in oil prices and raw materials of 1973-1974, the course of the international economy has been characterized by continual inflationary pressures, a strong imbalance in international exchanges, a drop in investments and an economic recession accompanied by widespread unemployment. In all parts of the world a feeling of uneasiness and uncertainty dominates, Boutos continued, with the exception of the oil-producing countries. In our case, although we had to cope with the additional problems which the imprudence of the military regime had bequeathed to us, the unjustified national adventure together with the inconstant economic policy, we manifested in the last 5 years noteworthy robustness and dynamism. After the elections in 1974, the New Democracy government set as a basic goal the development of the economy in a state of internal and external balance. This was done despite the exorbitant defense expenditure and the high rate of inflation that existed in 1974. In the 5 years of 1975-1979 the true gross national income of Greece increased by 28 percent in comparison with the 12 percent increase among EEC member states.

Gross fixed capital investments increased in our country by 27 percent in comparison to a 5 percent increase among EEC countries. The per capita national product rose from $2,165 in 1974 to $4,197 in 1979. Furthermore, as opposed to most countries, which are plagued by a high rate of unemployment, the phenomenon in our country fluctuates between 2 and 3 percent, while in Belgium and Ireland unemployment has exceeded 10 percent. The share of salaries and wages in the total national income increased from 47 percent in 1974 to 56 percent in 1979. In connection with farmers' income the minister of coordination said that the position of the Greek farmer has improved significantly. His income increased from 1975 to the present by 93 percent despite the fact that because of the unusually bad weather conditions of the last 5 years agricultural production dropped. The significant improvement of the agricultural income is due, to a great extent, to the affection of the government, which through the policy it has followed has supported the prices of agricultural produce and with various subsidies and transfers of incomes has significantly strengthened agricultural income. Essentially, the increase in agricultural income is much higher, the minister said, because agricultural employment has been reduced.

Referring to the balance of payments for the 4 years of 1975-1978, he said that it had shown significant improvement through the increase of exports and the influx of private capital. The deficit in the financial administration, he said, was determined by two factors. One was the need to promote projects of basic structure and the other the size and acuteness of the problems concerning the broader social aggregate and especially Greek farmers, whose income should be protected from the fluctuations of the domestic market and international competition.

Typical figures which show the improvement of our people's standard of living are private consumption, which has increased from 394 billion drachmas in 1974 to 965 billion drachmas in 1979, and the increase in the number of private cars from 88,235 to 815,000 in the same period. IKA [Social Insurance Foundation] pensions in the same period increased by 244 percent, OGA [Farm Insurance Organization] pensions increased by 400 percent and TEVE [Greek Craftsmen's and Tradesmen's (Insurance) Fund] pensions from 200 to 300 percent. The consumer price index increased in 1979 by 24 percent while at monthly levels it increased by 19 percent. This increase was due to the rise in fuel prices, the readjustment in agricultural produce prices, the increase in prices of imported goods and the partial abolition of subsidies.

Prospects for the development of the cost of living index until the end of the year indicate that its increase will be less than that of 1979, although it will not be as low as the original goal. For 1980, despite the fact that expenditures for fuel will increase by $900 million and despite the fact that the fluidity in foreign exchange parties will continue, the final deficit in current transactions will show a much smaller correspondingly increase than in 1979.

One of the weak spots of the Greek economy is the slackness noted in investments for fixed capital, but the situation in our country continues to be more favorable than in OECD and EEC countries, in which investments during the 5 years of 1974-1979 were 2.2 and 1 percent respectively while in Greece they reached the figure of 5 percent.

The PASOK argument that the policy and superprofits of the large multinational complexes are basically responsible for the recession of the economy and the increase in prices does not stand. In the largest country with a free economy, only oil companies showed exorbitant profits in recent years. The automobile and steel companies as well as the shipbuilding companies experienced terrible losses with resulting layoffs of employees and restriction of operations. The international economy is passing through a crisis which it will overcome as in the past.

So that investments may increase, the government will first proceed to simplify and adapt incentives for development in accordance with the systems implemented in the EEC in order that we may benefit to the greatest possible extent from the allocation of Community funds; second, to continue the efforts of the previous government for regional development and cooperation with Community funds for regional development which will cover a significant part of the expenses; third, to promote cooperation between the state and the private sector for large industrial investments and the use of coal in industry and for energy production.

Finally, plans will be promoted for the construction of an alumina plant in cooperation with European enterprises and for the construction of a plant for telecommunication materials and for railroad electrification.

With regard to inflation, Boutos said that the basic goal of the government's economic policy is to combat it because inflation shakes faith in the national currency and undermines the competitiveness of exports with a resultant drop in investment effort. The government's decision to implement a policy of stabilization for the drastic reduction of inflation is steadfast. The principal points of this policy will be the financial sector, the monetary-credit sector and the sector of prices and incomes policy. We shall combat inflation, he went on to say, by protecting the purchasing power of the working people, and the new incomes policy beginning in 1980 will be determined with objective yardsticks in proportion to the margins left to us by the balance of payments.

In the agricultural sector, from 1 January 1981 prices will be fixed by the council of EEC agricultural ministers in which the Greek minister of agriculture will participate on an equal basis from 1981 on.

Concluding, Boutos said that the prices of agricultural produce, after our accession to the EEC, will guarantee farmers a family income equal or near that of professions outside agriculture. The chamber's session is continuing.

Debate Continues

AT241329 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 23 May 80

[Excerpts] We now broadcast a very broad summary of the discussion that took place in the chamber today on the government's policy statement.

In today's morning session, which began at 1115 [0815 GMT] under [the chairmanship of] Mr Papaspirou, the first speaker was Independent Deputy from Athens Yeoryios Mavros who said that his views on foreign policy have repeatedly been put forth from the chamber rostrum. The speaker noted that on the Cyprus issue the trap of the intercommunal talks should be avoided. The seven rounds of talks have proved that Turkey does not seek the solution of the Cyprus problem but the creation of impressions that something is being done in that direction. The unending talks on Greek-Turkish differences are also a trap. The prime minister has said, Mavros added, that Greece has not asked for anything from Turkey but it is not prepared to sacrifice any of its rights. Then, Mavoros wondered, what is the use of a dialogue in good will with Turkey in order to find peaceful solutions to subjects that are not open to discussion?

With the ploy of the talks, he went on to say, Turkey succeeds in receiving abundant economic and military aid which allows it to maintain the occupation of Cyprus and its designs against Greece. Referring to his position on NATO, Mavros said that Greece had withdrawn from the NATO military wing based on the decision by a government of a broader political spectrum which the current prime minister and defense minister were members of. The reasons which dictated the withdrawal continue to exist even today in their entirety. As long as the Atlantic Alliance continues to believe that it is not meant to protect its member-states from invasions by other members of the Alliance there cannot be any discussion on the issue of Greece's return to the military wing. Speaking about economic issues, Mavros said that the anti-inflationary policy that has been implemented since the middle of 1975, which the prime minister said he would continue, has failed.

All economic phenomena are influenced by psychological factors and naturally inflation is no exception. However, the psychological repercussions are due to the public's lack of confidence in the government and its ability to control inflation.

Prime Minister Rallis replied to Mavros by saying, among other things, the following:

On the Cyprus issue the worst thing that can happen is the prolongation of the current situation, because this will lead to a de facto partition. The Turks desire this prolongation and if, for instance, we reach 1990 without anything happening, the Cyprus problem will have been forgotten.

Referring to Greek-Turkish differences, the prime minister said that the most important problem is the continental shelf, and the Geneva agreement defines the general principles for the continental shelf but mentions that demarcation takes place through negotiations. Negotiations, however, Rallis stressed, do not mean concessions and I am sure, he concluded, that nobody, whether he belongs to the government faction or to the opposition, is willing to make concessions on Greek rights.

Mavros replied and said that Turkey more than Greece needs a solution to the Cyprus problem because it has become involved in an adventure. Mavros proposed that the Greek Government denounce Turkey for not moving toward an agreement and for seeking to extract Greece's signature to legalize faits accomplis.

Then PASOK Chairman Papandreou spoke and said that the prime minister is wrong when he states that the worst solution for the Cyprus problem is the continuation of the current situation. The worst solution would be the legalization of the occupation. Dialogue is dangerous because it transfers the problem and ratifies the Turkish position. Papandreou claimed that the Greek Government must not trust UN Secretary General Waldheim, who is playing the U.S. game and is promoting Turkish interests.

In reply to the PASOK chairman, Rallis said that Greece and Cyprus expect Waldheim to ascertain who is responsible for the failure to begin or the suspension of the dialogue. Consequently, we expect that the UN secretary general will do his duty be making a statement should the dialogue fail to produce results. What I have said, Rallis continued, coincides, in meaning at least, with the things Papandreou has said. In a brief interruption National Defense Minister Averof said in connection with the operational control of the Aegean that the issue is controversial because some people claim that military aircraft are not required to submit a flight plan when they intend to fly over international airspace. We, Averof said, claim the opposite but there is no relevant international rule and in each case the domestic law of each country is applied. When exercises are being held, we have planes permanently patrolling the Aegean skies and when a violation is noted they intervene, not only against Turkish violations but against every fighter plane of any country. EDIK [Democratic Center Union] Chairman Zigdhis then spoke and said among other things that the appearance of the new government in the chamber was toneless and insipid. The new prime minister assured us, he said, that his government is the continuation of the previous one. However, we do not need to be reminded of this. On everything he has said and on everything he has failed to tell us, EDIK has to make the following observations: First, Rallis reiterates the need for national consensus and a mild political atmosphere so that the country may cope with the critical state of the international situation and the sharpness of the economic and social problems on the domestic front. His government, however, like the previous one, insists passionately on the policy of polarization which may well lead us to civil war. Proof of this is his persistent stand first on the system of reinforced proportional elections, second on the polarizing regulations of the chamber and third on the policy of corruption of the political world through bribery and blackmail of deputies and cadres. Basically this policy is aimed at EDIK, which represents rejection of the division of the Greek people into Marxists and anti-Marxists, that is, into two factions ready to tear each other apart because thus the right thinks it can hold on to power.

The government is proud because the regime is functioning in an exemplary manner. Of course this is true from the viewpoint of formalities but, in substance, this is not so. The president of the republic was elected with the ballots of bribed and blackmailed deputies and the prime minister was elected chairman of New Democracy with the ballot of one deputy who falls into this category. In addition to all this, with the Constitution of 1975 and the superauthority given to the president of the republic, we shall be led into a direct constitutional crisis as soon as a majority opposing the president of the republic has been elected in the chamber. It is imprudent to cultivate this danger, especially in view of the international crisis. For this reason, EDIK submits a proposal for the amendment of the Constitution, an initiative that should have been taken by the government.

Referring to Rallis' statement on the significance of briefing the Greek people, the EDIK chairman said that from everything Rallis has stated it appears that the state mass information media will remain news agencies for government propaganda. Even the press, whether of the government party or of the opposition parties, is dependent [on the government] because of the economic system. The press will continue to present the viewpoints of both the government and the opposition as the government wants them presented. Characteristic of the government's wish to keep the press in subjugation is its haste to increase, since the day before yesterday, the price of newspapers by 50 percent. Especially at a time when it claims that it is fighting inflation. Rallis' government, like the previous one, seems to have adopted the corruption of economic and political life as an organic weapon for maintaining its power. The most official proof of this is given by the letter of former Deputy Minister Protopapadhakis [a New Democracy deputy who wrote to Karamanlis a few days ago complaining of nepotism and corruption among New Democracy ministers]. However, Zigdhis continues, I must recall still more figures. In his report Zolotas [governor of the Bank of Greece] mentions that liquid fuel in 1979 cost $814 million more than in 1978. This increase, however, does not correspond to the increase in the crude oil price and the difference in the two increases represents a plundering of the Greek people because of the oil policy of the government. There are ministers against whom charges were made but elementary political sensitivity does not exist. Even the day before yesterday, an attempt was made to bribe an EDIK cadre with a directorship which would pay him 50 thousand drachmas per month. Thus the policy of corruption continues so that Greece may end up like the Egypt of Farouk or the Ethiopia of Haile Selassie.

Continuing, Zigdhis reiterated that the current government is a continuation of the previous one but with a new leader and the question arises: Why was Rallis preferred over Averof? The most convincing answer is that because the signing of a new Zurich-type agreement is impending for the return of Greece to the NATO military wing and the solution of differences with Turkey it was considered preferable to sweep Averof aside. In view of his well-known position, he would have rendered the agreement suspect from the very first moment and would have caused a furor. With Rallis as prime minister it is hoped that this signing will be less painful for the government. However, the error is that Mitsotakis is foreign minister and the first shouts of anguish were heard from Cyprus concerning his appointment.

The only sector in which the government wants to appear innovative, Zigdhis went on to say, is the economic sector. It tried to create impressions by removing the two ministers of the 1978 [party] expansion [Karamanlis' attempt at that time to enlist deputies from center parties like Mitsotakis and A. Kanellopoulos, whom he appointed as ministers of coordination and economics, respectively] who were called to save us from inflation and now are being used as scapegoats. I will not occupy myself with the practical remedies being announced for the cure of inflation, the stagnation in investments and the one-sided austerity. I will only reiterate that the primary cause for galloping inflation is a deficit-producing financial policy. I will not deal with the educational reform but I will stress that all declarations regarding the Greek people's health constitutes ridicule of the unitary agent for health.

International conditions are explosive and they create dangers for the country's existence. The economic situation abroad is deteriorating and domestically it has reached the explosive point.

Unmoved, the government persists with the policy of polarization in order to guarantee its survival and, I must stress, in this policy it has the help of Greeks who believe in doctrines and are satisfied with slogans.

Concluding, Zigdhis said that in view of the government irresponsibility, EDIK addresses itself to all responsible Greeks, not only of the center but also of the right and the left, and calls on them to declare a categorical no to the policy of division. Finally, he stated that he will not vote for the government.

After Zigdhis, the secretary general of the KKE [Exterior], Florakis, spoke referring first to the international situation saying that world peace, especially in the areas neighboring our country, is threatened. The reason for this crisis, he added, is due to the policy of the United States and NATO which, by using the events of Afghanistan and the arrest of the U.S. hostages, as a smokescreen, are seeking to topple the Iranian Revolution and dominate in the Middle East area. Florakis then said that the Greek Government must take the initiative for the defense of peace and respond to the initiatives and efforts of other countries, such as the socialist countries, which serve peace.

The speaker asked the Greek Government to categorically reject the installation of nuclear missiles in our country because the tactics of silence on this important issue can be interpreted as an intention to facilitate U.S. aggressiveness. Referring to the country's relations with NATO, Florakis wondered why the Greek Government abandoned its previous categorical statement regarding a complete and final withdrawal from the NATO military wing since the reasons which prompted the withdrawal have not been eliminated.

On the Greek-Turkish differences, the KKE [Exterior] secretary general said that peaceful negotiations with Turkey may open the road to a nationally beneficial solution only if they are held outside NATO supervision and on the basis of international legality and respect for our country's national independence and territorial integrity. The speaker then referred to the issue of the bases and said that this issue and the NATO issue constitute basic composite elements in the country's spirit of political-military dependence. Then he spoke about the Cyprus issue, saying that because of its Atlantic orientation the Greek Government cannot effectively support the Cypriot cause.

Speaking about the economic situation, he stressed that the reason for its deterioration lies principally in the dependent and irrational development of the country to the benefit of foreign and local monopolies. The reasons can also be found in the same government policy of austerity for the working people and unaccountability for the monopolies. All figures concerning our economic situation lead to the conclusion that the gap which separated Greece from developed capitalist countries has grown wider in recent years.

Florakis then said that the government did not refer to the internal regime and especially to the issue of democratic freedoms and rights which increasingly are limited and trampled upon. He described as scandalous, undemocratic, one-sided and distortional the information disseminated by mass information media. Finally, Florakis asked that the KKE [Exterior] be recognized in the chamber as a party because no trick or regulation can conceal the fact that the party which is third in parliamentary strength is not recognized while other parties with only one deputy are recognized.

Immediately afterward, the chamber adjourned for 2 hours and resumed its session at 1800 [1500 GMT] in the evening.

In the evening session the first to speak was KODISO's [Party of Democratic Republic] Pesmazoglou, who first called on the government to open television and radio to public discussions among party leaders. Referring to the policy statement, he said that it does not contain any specific positions on great national issues.

On the Cyprus problem no actions have been announced concerning a strong international denunciation of the continuing Turkish occupation of Cyprus which constitutes an international anomaly similar to the invasion of Afghanistan. On the Turkish demands against Greece, Pesmazoglou wondered what actions our country would take if the Greek Armed Forces are not recognized as having the right to control and protect the Aegean Sea and airspace. Pesmazoglou refuted the claim that significant progress has been made in the Greek economy and said that the government does not dare reveal the truth about the deterioration of the economic situation. Nothing in the policy statement, he said, justifies the restoration of an atmosphere of trust and the proper operation of the state so that sound private initiative can be strengthened and supported.

He continued: The government said it will continue the policy it inaugurated in the middle of 1980 [as heard] for the fight against inflation but since then inflation has doubled and the purchasing power of workers, employees, pensioners and small and medium-sized businessmen has been unacceptably limited.

The specific tax measures which the government announced with its policy statement mean nothing more than a tilt to the right because they concern only the few who are economically well off. With regard to the credit measures that were announced, although they are in the right direction, they are not combined with a system of organizational and economic supports for the modernization and development of craftsmen's businesses and other small and medium-sized enterprises. The government measures inevitably will lead to the expansion of economic inequalities.

The minister of foreign affairs [Mitsotakis] then spoke, saying that it is natural for the present government to be a continuation of the previous ones since it is based on the same majority and the same party, which only changed its leadership in an exceptionally democratic way. Then he refuted Papandreou's charge that the government depends on decision-making centers outside Greece, adding that the government is governed only by national criteria.

In connection with the Palestinians, the foreign minister said that he himself, in a telegram, had invited them to open an office in Athens similar to the ones they have in Paris and Brussels. He also defended the multidimensional policy of the Karamanlis government, stressing that good relations had been established with all countries of the world without disturbing our basic political orientation. Papandreou's stance toward dialogue raises questions, he observed. If dialogue is precluded then what will remain? War? Dialogue does not endanger either Cypriot or Greek rights. We did not agree on the Aegean by holding a dialogue and therefore we resorted to international arbitration. We should not forget that Turkey is a Mediterranean country and has territorial waters in the Aegean.

On the Cyprus problem Mitsotakis said that Papandreou asks that dialogue cease and the withdrawal of the Turks from Cyprus come first. It is a fact that the United Nations resolutions demand the withdrawal of the Turks without, however, [the UN] being in a position to implement it. At the same time, the same resolutions ask for an intercommunal dialogue. In Cyprus there is unanimity on the doctrine that Nicosia has the initiative for handling the Cyprus question with Athens providing support.

As regards NATO, Mitsotakis said, the PASOK chairman wonders why the government wants to return to the Alliance's military wing. I will recall two things: First, since the establishment of NATO, peace between the East and West has continued for 30 years and, second, what other possibility is there for the preservation of our country's security? Greece's participation in the Alliance allows it to control and defend its own resources, not alone but with the support of its allies. What does the PASOK chairman wish? A Greece without a defensive support that would suffer the fate Cyprus did 6 years ago or Afghanistan did 5 months ago? The government does not share this viewpoint. However, in the efforts for Greece's return to NATO the Turks are constantly objecting. We insist on the Haig-Davos agreement which restores the status of 1974 to the Aegean.

The issues in suspense, which are left for settlement after our return to the NATO military wing, also existed in 1974. In any case, our country will not make concessions. We insist on the 10-mile airspace. Our reaction to all violations has been consistent and clear. We have not permitted the Turks to establish precedents.

In connection with the bases, Mitsotakis said that, given current facts, the agreements which determine the status of the bases are not satisfactory and for this reason their revision has been sought. This goal has ended in an agreement that was initialed in July 1977 and which for well-known reasons has yet to be signed.

The leader of the official opposition spoke immediately afterwards and he read the text of a Greek-Turkish agreement which he said was relevant to the flight of military aircraft in the Aegean airspace and the existence of a line of contact between Larisa and Eski Sehir. Then Papandreou expressed wonder as to why Greece does not denounce Washington for the great help it is giving Turkey, which creates the danger for a change in the balance of forces in the area and for the U.S. role in the Cyprus issue. The leader of the official opposition also stressed Greece's responsibilities toward Cyprus as a guarantor of its territorial integrity and independence.

In reply, Prime Minister Rallis said that the text which Papandreou read was the result of talks between the delegations from Greece and Turkey which dealt with this issue. There was nothing reprehensible in it, he said, nor was any effort made to conceal the text. With this text, he added, we assured Turkey that it will not be attacked by us.

Replying in connection with the line between Larisa and Eski Sehir, National Defense Minister Averof said that it had been established in order to prevent incidents in the Aegean area.

The parliamentary representative of the National Party, Spiros Theotokis, referred to the policy statement and said: The new government has not concealed from the national representatives that it is a continuation of the previous one under another name. However, even if the admission had not been made, there is the text of the policy statement which reminds us more of a report and less of new political [word indistinct]. Under such circumstances the Greek people are in no way enlightened. They are merely informed, with obvious displeasure, that Rallis, as prime minister, will continue the dismantling of education which he began as a minister, that he will continue the game of being both inside and outside NATO, that he will not put an end to the multidimensional foreign policy and that the social mania will continue.

The prime minister has reiterated that his government's policy will be neither more to the right nor more to the left. I am afraid, however, that this does not encourage either the old friends of the New Democracy party or its other possible friends, because its old friends, that is, the nationally minded Greeks, certainly want a policy to the right and its other possible friends, if they want the government's policy to be more to the left, have various other parties to vote for so that their policy can be exercised.

The government attributes the misery of our economic affairs to international conditions. If that were the case, however, our currency should have maintained its correct parity with the other European currencies. This, however, is not the case. Our drachma has dropped greatly in comparison with European currencies. In addition, I can also observe that the measures which the government promises to take will not change the status quo that has been created and which in the ultimate analysis is a status of party intervention in financing. Thus, party favorites live a comfortable life while the many are asked to live austerely.

On the Cyprus issue the government states it will tread the old road, that is, it will merely continue to be the defense lawyer without actively intervening in the search for a satisfactory solution to the problem.

As regards Greek-Turkish relations, the government states that it seeks a goodwilled dialogue with Ankara but at the same time it does not declare for all to hear that Greek-Turkish differences are an invention of our neighbors created only to gain benefits at our expense.

The government is proud because, thanks to the measures taken by the previous government, sufficient fuel has been guaranteed for the current year. If, however, the previous government 6 years ago had utilized the abundant lignite deposits of the country the situation at present, from the viewpoint of energy, would be improved.

The government also spoke about an increase in hospital beds but did not say one word about nationalization of health services. On this point the government has ignored its own social mania.

The National Party also considers to be abnormal the functioning of our democratic system. In addition to the many instances in which numerous undemocratic and unparliamentary events have occurred, we have a supreme ruler who is a responsible person with no responsibilities because on the one hand he is constitutionally the irresponsible regulator of the regime while on the other hand at the same time he is politically responsible since he can, at his own discretion, convene the Council of Ministers under his chairmanship and consequently participate in political decisions which abolish his constitutional irresponsibility.

The natural result of our opinions of ours is that the National Party will not vote for the government.

Government Victory in Confidence Vote

I VRADHINI SCORES U.S. MILITARY AND POLICY

AT271457 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 27 May 80 p 2

[From the "Evening" column: "Disregard of Promises"]

[Text] It appears the State Department has a peculiar idea on the question of behavior toward its allies. It has refused the extension to Greece of the "extremely favoeable conditions" under which U.S. military aid is supplied to Turkey under the excuse that this would be a "bad precedent." However, is there a worse precedent than this?

It is well known that any favorable treatment of Turkey thwarts the balance of power in the area. It is also well known that the United States has promised to preserve this balance of power, even if at the ratio of seven to 10.

Now they reveal to us that "Turkey is an exceptional case" for the United States of America. This is the reason why it must be favored. This position, however, means the breaking of promises and this leads to a shaking of the confidence between nations and not just between governments.

It is, however, likely that the United States today deliberately ignores the strategic value of Greece and the fact that Turkey in recent years has expressed expansionist views against Greece. There appears to be no other excuse.

PRIME MINISTER REPLIES TO RALLIS ALLEGATIONS

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that Turkey has never favored the idea of threatening its neighbors--including Greece--but that suspicions and fear could lead governments to wrong directions. He added that he hoped and wished that the new Greek Government would not make such a mistake. Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel made this statement at a news conference held in Ankara at the Office of the Prime Minister today to report on the performance of his government during the 6 months it has been in power.

Referring to Turkey's relations with Greece, Prime Minister Demirel said that during discussions of his government's program, the new Greek Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis had used the word "war" and added that if this is not a slip of the tongue then it is very unfortunate. He continued: It is a well-known fact that Turkey wants to solve all its problems with Greece through peaceful means and negotiations. As in the past, our government is still ready to participate in talks based on good will and mutual understanding. However, statements by Mr Rallis seem to be of a nature that cast doubt on the existence of such a stand. Statements by Mr Rallis on the [Aegean] airspace, his request for an arms balance, his allegations on the Dedoconese Islands, the special conditions he requested if Greece is to join the NATO military wing and his demand for a unitary state in Cyprus are elements that block the way to negotiations.

Demirel said that his government was far from contemplating any kinds of aggressive plans or ideas and that there was no reason for Greek concerns and anxieties.

Referring to economic developments, Demirel said that the shortage of numerous basic commodities had ended and that the shortage of cooking oil and electric lamps would be eliminated in June.

DEMIREL REITERATES OPPOSITION TO AFGHAN INVASION

TA231627 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 23 May 80

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has said that no one can oppose resorting to the people regarding the presidential elections. He said: Those who are opposed will be responsible for this crisis. If they are opposed, let them propose a way out.

Demirel, who held his routine weekly meeting with acting President Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil, replied to reporters' questions upon emerging from the Cankaya Mansion. A journalist recalled a statement RPP leader Bulent Ecevit made to the effect that the decision not to participate in the Olympic games was tantamount to bringing politics to sports. The journalist asked Demirel his view on the issue. In reply, Demirel said: There is no law that says politics should not be involved in sports. If one has no opposition to the invasion of Afghanistan then that's an entirely different issue. The invasion of Afghanistan closely concerns Turkey. Turkey has reacted to the invasion. This reaction cannot be ignored by saying: What can be done? If Afghanistan is invaded, so be it. Let everyone be concerned about his own problems. Our reaction is continuing. This is our way of expressing it. We are against the invasion of Afghanistan.

In reply to a question on whether or not he would put forward his candidacy in the event a direct presidential election is held, Demirel said he did not intend to be a candidate.

TURKES CALLS FOR MEASURES AGAINST AFGHAN-STYLE COMMUNISM

TA251839 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 25 May 80

[Excerpts] The General Council of Turk Mensucat-Is [Turkish Textile Workers Union] affiliated with MISK [Confederation of Nationalist Labor Unions] met in extraordinary session for the third time in Ankara today. Speaking at the meeting, Nationalist Action Party leader Alpaslan Turkes said that his party will continue to struggle against those who consider unions the tools for realizing communist revolutions.

Referring to the invasion of Afghanistan, Turkes said: There are attempts to stage a similar plot in Turkey. Therefore, we are opposed to communism. We should take every measure against communists who wish to transform Turkey into another Afghanistan trampled by the Red Army. We do not covet any foreign soil. We, as the Turkish nation, wish to live freely and independently.

ECEVIT REPEATS OPPOSITION TO SOVIET INVASION

TA231739 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 23 May 80

[Excerpts] [Speaking at a news conference in Ankara today] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit said that his statement concerning the Olympic games was wrongly interpreted by Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel. Noting that the RPP was, from the very beginning, opposed to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, Ecevit said that even countries which reacted very strongly to the intervention had kept the issues of sports and politics separate and that they had decided to participate in the Olympic games. Ecevit also said that the government amended the directive on arms because of its impotence in preventing anarchy.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE NOT CONSULTED ON BOYCOTT DECISION

[Text] The Turkish National Olympic Committee has unanimously decided to inform the International Olympic Committee that Turkey will not participate in the 1980 Moscow Olympic games. In a statement at the national Olympic committee meeting, Committee Chairman Burhan Felek expressed his regret over the fact that the government had taken the decision not to participate in the Olympic games without consulting the Olympic committee.

In a statement after the committee meeting, Committee Secretary General Turgut Atakol recalled that the committee was set up to facilitate athletes' participation in the Olympic games. Noting that they had not received the necessary information from the Physical Education Directorate General on the grounds that they were not sufficiently prepared, Atakol said that a unanimous decision was made to inform the International Olympic Committee that Turkey will not be able to participate in the games because it has not completed preparations from a technical aspect.

VOTCP SCORES DECISION TO BOYCOTT MOSCOW OLYMPICS

TA240959 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 24 May 80

[Text] The Demirel government made a decision in line with U.S. imperialist orders. The participation of Turkish sportsmen in the 1980 Moscow Olympics has been banned. By bowing to the decision of U.S. imperialism's antipeace Carter administration to boycott the Moscow Olympics, the Demirel government has once more proven his pro-American policy.

The imperialist United States and its lackeys are thus attempting to sabotage sports relations, which are a symbol of peaceful existence and friendly relations. This satellite decision by the Demirel government has provoked wide reaction among sportsmen and democratic forces.

NSP OFFICIAL SAYS TURKEY ASKED TO BREAK WITH ISRAEL

TA231834 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 23 May 80

[Text] National Salvation Party deputy leader Sevket Kazan said that statements made by Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen, who participated in the Islamic countries' foreign ministers conference, clearly showed the government's views on the Islamic Conference.

In a statement in Ankara, Kazan expressed his regret over the fact that Erkmen had returned to Turkey before the end of the conference, noting that the Islamic Conference was a warning against American and Soviet imperialism as well as against Zionist plots. Kazan said that Turkey was secretly asked to sever its relations with Israel. He added that Erkmen's statements revealed the uneasiness he felt regarding this request.

DEMIREL PROPOSES AMENDMENT TO END ELECTION IMPASSE

[Statement by Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel upon emerging from the Cankaya Mansion following his weekly meeting with Acting President Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil on 23 May--recorded]

[Text] Is Turkey seeking a president? Yes. Has the Turkish Grand National Assembly succeeded in electing a president in over 70 rounds of voting during the last 60 days? No. Who has the natural right to elect a president? The nation. Whom does the Grand National Assembly, which is trying to elect a president, represent? The nation. Where does the Grand National Assembly derive its power? From the same source. What is wrong with resorting to the nation? Is any one afraid that the nation will make the wrong choice? Do you want to solve the presidential election issue? Yes. However, you cannot solve it given the current foundation.

It has become clear that the issue cannot be solved through accusations, slanders and threats. Then, let us go to the source of the power. Let us go to the people. Let the people elect. If the people elect the president, why should this be a dictatorship? There is no difference between a parliamentary election and a people's election. The authority of the president will remain the same. The qualifications will remain the same. His duties will be the same. In other words, the authority will be the same as those of a president elected by the parliament. The election of a president by the people does not mean that his authority will be extended. We are not advocating a change in the system. The method followed--the one based on the Grand National Assembly--has not opened the door for us. The key does not open the door.

What do you propose to do? Do you propose to break the door down or do you propose to change the key? One has to change the key and open this door. There is nothing more natural than resorting to the nation. This is a very democratic move. The people will punish those who have turned against them regarding the presidential election issue. These are the same people who, when necessary, claimed that they stood by the people. The people will say: If the parliament cannot succeed then let us elect a president. The administrators' duty is not to exacerbate difficulties but to solve them. Let us go to the nation. The people have always been right. This issue will also be solved in the best manner.

The draft bill is ready--the constitutional amendment bill. Of course, the Justice Party does not have the majority to pass a bill regarding a constitutional amendment. However, if they [the RPP] know of a better way to solve the problem, let them tell us. No one has come up with another solution. Is it not better for the people to elect a president rather than for Ecevit and I to get together to elect a president? There is no difficulty. We have already lost 60 days. If we pursue the same method we might lose another 60 or 80 days. Then, you will start blaming the regime, the assemblies and the parties. There is no [word indistinct]. We proposed to alleviate a shortcoming. The people will be the final answer. Why are you running away? The people are capable of solving impasses. Since we are at an impasse, let us resort to the commonsense and conscience of the people.

Ecevit Opposition

[Statement by RPP leader Bulent Ecevit at news conference in Ankara on 23 May--recorded]

[Text] As you can see, it has become clear that the aim [of Demirel] is to bring the presidential elections issue to an impasse and therefore force a constitutional amendment. It is no longer a secret that there are also other constitutional amendment proposals waiting to be endorsed. One might claim that the assemblies were under pressure when previous presidential elections were concluded through dialogues. The 1973 presidential elections were held despite various pressures on the assemblies. Those pressures were surmounted.

It is also impossible to comprehend Demirel's logic that a president cannot be elected because of a lack of enforcement provisions. Responsible politicians and parties should not perform their constitutional and democratic duties only when faced with certain enforcement provisions or sanctions. We should not need any enforcement provisions or sanctions in order to perform our constitutional duties and to make the parliament function.

Honorable Demirel has said: Should the president be elected by the leaders of the two parties or by the people? This is pure demagogy. Party leaders do not elect presidents. Dialogues between party leaders in the past have not resulted in the election of a president by the leaders. A dialogue is a method used to facilitate conciliations among parties--a requisite of democracy. A democracy cannot function smoothly without dialogues.

I refuse to accept Demirel's interpretation that our objection to a constitutional amendment is tantamount to running away from the people. On the contrary, he and his party are running away from their duties, the Constitution and the Turkish Grand National Assembly. Demirel claims that the election of a president by the people does not mean a transition to a presidential system. However, everyone is aware that it is almost impossible to stop--either de jure or de facto--a transition to the presidential system following the direct election of a president. This is especially the case in countries where democracy is not deeply rooted. Such a transition might--in exceptional cases--be avoided only in countries where democracy and the tradition of democratic reconciliation are deeply rooted. As I pointed out earlier, there are other intentions behind this wish for a constitutional amendment concerning the presidential elections. It is no secret that there are constitutional amendment preparations which will cause democracy to degenerate, which will change the essence of the Constitution and which will abolish social rights, freedoms and workers' rights.

Proposal Submitted to Ecevit

TA240949 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 24 May 80

[Excerpt] Prime Minister and Justice Party Leader Suleyman Demirel visited RPP leader Bulent Ecevit and discussed the issue of the presidential election. The meeting, which began in Ecevit's office at the parliament at 0900, lasted 1 hour and 15 minutes.

In a statement after the meeting, Ecevit said that Demirel submitted the proposal to amend the Constitution with the aim of changing the rules regarding the election of a president. Ecevit noted: As I stated yesterday, I pointed out that I do not consider it necessary to amend the Constitution and that I find this risky. I also expressed the impression that the views and inclinations of the RPP parliamentary groups are in the same direction. However, I told Demirel that I would submit his proposal and its arguments to my party's parliamentary group meeting on Wednesday morning, that we would discuss this subject at the meeting and that I would inform him of the outcome. Therefore, I hope that we will meet again with honorable Demirel on Friday or sometime later.

Party Leaders Consulted

TA241747 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 24 May 80

[Excerpts] During separate talks he held with leaders of political parties which have a group in parliament, Prime Minister and Justice Party leader Suleyman Demirel discussed the issue of presidential elections. Demirel briefed the party leaders on a constitutional amendment that will allow the president to be elected by the nation. Demirel held his first talks with RPP leader Bulent Ecevit today.

At 1700 Demirel visited National Salvation Party leader Necmettin Erbakan in his parliamentary office. In a statement following the 1-hour meeting, Erbakan said that he had rejected Demirel's proposal of a constitutional amendment on the nation electing a president. Noting that it would take almost 3 months to ratify the constitutional amendment and hold the presidential elections, Erbakan said that electing the candidate of a minority president through this process could result in the representative of a minority becoming the president of all Turkey. Erbakan added that he could not support a proposal that would submit the nation to 3 more months of high cost of living and terror incidents.

Erbakan continued: Instead of wasting 3 more months, the parliament should make efforts to achieve common grounds for electing a president as soon as possible. It would be easy to make a constitutional amendment of three words declaring that the candidate that receives most of votes--and not the majority of votes--becomes the president if it is agreed that the candidate of a minority should become the president through a proposed constitutional amendment.

Demirel met with Nationalist Action Party leader Alpaslan Turkes at 1800 after his talks with Erbakan. In a statement after the meeting which lasted 30 minutes, Turkes said that they had always supported the idea of the nation electing a president. Turkes added: the nation electing a president will provide him with more enthusiasm and security in his work and will satisfy the electors who will be able to elect the president they want from among the candidates. That is why I told Demirel that we were in favor of this idea.

UN CONFERENCE ON KAMPUCHEAN REFUGEE PROBLEM BEGINS

Pre-Conference Meetings

OW260159 Tokyo KYODO in English 0134 GMT 26 May 80

[Text] Geneva May 25 KYODO--Chinese Deputy Foreign Minister He Ying said Sunday withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Cambodia is the first step toward solution of the refugee problem. The United Nations last November called for an immediate pullout of the Vietnamese from Cambodia. In his meeting with Japanese Foreign Minister Saburo Okita, he also said it is necessary to back the ousted regime of Premier Khieu Samphan since it has been "gaining strength" in its struggle against the Vietnam-installed government of President Heng Samrin.

Okita and he are here to attend a U.N.-sponsored international conference on Cambodian refugees opening Monday.

Meanwhile, Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila, in a separate meeting with Okita, said food and medicine for Cambodians should go via the Thai border and not Phnom Penh, which is under control of the Heng Samrin government. "That is preferred in terms of cost and security," Sitthi was quoted as saying. Sitthi and Okita also agreed that it is crucial to send seed rice and agricultural machines into Cambodia before the forthcoming rainy season.

Okita said foreign ministers of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations hailed a decision by the Japanese Government to extend $100 million to help Cambodian refugees.

Japan Pledge of Aid

OW261101 Tokyo KYODO in English 1023 GMT 26 May 80

[Text] Geneva May 26 KYODO--Japan pledged Monday to extend $100 million in grant aid for fiscal 1980 to help Cambodian refugees and economic assistance worth $260 million to Thailand, the country most seriously affected by the influx of the refugees. The pledge was contained in an address made by Japanese Foreign Minister Saburo Okita at the international conference on relief for Cambodian refugees, which opened here Monday.

The Japanese aid worth $100 million would consist of $60 million to be used for the refugees in holding centers in Thailand through the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and $20 million in rice assistance. An additional amount of $20 million would be contributed to relief programs of the Thai Government and international organizations such as UNICEF, Okita explained.

Japan had made contributions amounting to some $90 million during fiscal 1979 as regards the Indochinese refugees.

As for the bilateral assistance with Thailand to help reduce the refugee burden, Okita said: "My government will implement assistance programs in the forms of loans, grants and technical cooperation totaling $260 million during the current fiscal year."

In his speech, Okita stressed the need to ensure an effective distribution of relief goods to the Kampucheans "who are in real need" and urged all parties in the Kampuchean conflict to cooperate with the relief activities of international organizations. In this connection, Okita expressed hope that the international organizations would implement measures to increase their monitoring capabilities in Kampuchea by stationing more resident staffs within the war-torn country.

Okita also expressed Japan's support for the Thai proposal for strengthened encampments along the Thai-Kampuchean border and for the appointment by the United Nations secretary general of a special representative to be stationed in Thailand to coordinate implementation of the international assistance.

Noting that the fighting in Kampuchea and the outflow of refugees were having most undesirable effects on peace and stability in Asia, Okita strongly hoped that all foreign forces in that country would be immediately withdrawn. "Japan believes that no action should be condoned which would further aggravate the situation in the land and threaten the security of Thailand," the Japanese foreign minister stated.

In referring to the importance of solving the Vietnamese and Laotian refugee problem, Okita urged Vietnam to "continue to honor its undertaking to stem the flow of refugees."

The Soviet Union and Vietnam failed to send delegates to the Geneva conference.

Thai Delegate's Address

BK270447 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 1300 GMT 26 May 80

[Text] The 2-day UN conference on humanitarian aid to Kampuchea opened in Geneva this morning. Australian Foreign Minister Andrew Peacock was elected chairman of the conference. Following the UN secretary general and the Malaysian foreign minister, who is chairman of the ASEAN Standing Committee, Foreign Minister Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila, head of the Thai delegation, addressed the conference.

In his address Air Chief Marshal Sitthi said: We are now facing difficult and complicated problems concerning humanitarianism and the survival of the Kampuchean nation and its people both inside and outside the country. These huge problems are results of the food shortage, the difficulties in sending and thoroughly distributing food to the Kampuchean people, and difficulties in Kampuchean agriculture.

Thailand is located nearest to Kampuchea. Although Thailand has not taken sides with either conflicting party, it is now confronting difficulties which are the result of the fighting in Kampuchea. Since the foreign armed intervention in Kampuchea at the end of 1978, about 170,000 people have illegally entered Thailand. This does not include hundreds of thousands of other refugees from other Indochinese states who have arrived in this country since 1975. There are presently about 130,000 Indochinese displaced persons in Thailand despite the resettlement of many of them to third countries through the cooperation of international agencies.

A simple solution to this problem is that the Kampuchean people, mostly farmers, should be allowed to return to their farmland to produce food for their survival and to revive the country's economy. This can be achieved only when peace returns to Kampuchea and when the Kampuchean people attain their inalienable rights which must be recognized by all parties. There can be no durable peace if foreign troops remain in the country. A durable solution to the Kampuchean problem must be found.

This conference is being held because of the massive famine in Kampuchea. Due to its geographic proximity and for humanitarian reasons, Thailand and the Thai people, who are traditionally kindhearted and uphold humanitarianism, have cooperated with the international community in relieving the hardships and difficulties of Kampuchean people.

The Kampuchean crisis could be detrimental to Thailand's security. The influx of Kampuchean civilians into Thailand has affected about 200,000 Thai people along the border. These Thai people have to move to new places to live and work. The Thai Government has allocated about a 160 million baht emergency fund to help them although Thailand is still a developing country and is affected by the world's current economic recession.

Thailand is now providing temporary refuge to about 170,000 Kampuchean people and cooperating with international agencies in distributing food to about 200,000 Kampucheans along the common border and in sending food and crop seeds to the people inside Kampuchea both by air and land. Thailand will not allow any country to take advantage of the hardships of people of any nation for military purposes or use food supplies for bargaining or demanding recognition of a government in return. International agencies must not allow themselves to fall under any political pressure.

In view of the ongoing fighting along the Thai-Kampuchean border which often results in the shelling of Thai border areas, with cooperation of special officials assigned by the UN secretary general, food distribution to Kampuchean people at the Thai border must be improved to ensure safety. Thailand appreciates assistance to the Kampuchean people from foreign countries and agencies. This reflects their humanitarian consciousness and helps Thailand relieve its burden. International communities must jointly share the burden and responsibility and seek a durable solution to this problem at its root--stopping the armed conflict in Kampuchea and respecting the fundamental rights of the Kampuchean people.

In so doing, the Thai delegation proposes the following action be taken:

1. Financial and material assistance for Kampuchean people both inside and outside Kampuchea must be continued.

2. Supplies of rice seed must be allowed to reach the hands of Kampuchean people by the most expeditious routes.

3. All parties concerned must be called on to render more cooperation and effective assistance to international relief agencies.

4. Food distribution and transportation systems must be improved to enable supplies to reach the intended recipients more rapidly, effectively and economically.

5. Existing encampments for Kampuchean illegal immigrants and those to be constructed at the Thai-Kampuchean border should be regularized and improved to ensure safety for the civilians and indiscriminate distribution of food and medical supplies.

6. Increased international assistance should be rendered to the Thai people along the border who have been displaced by the influx of Kampuchean illegal immigrants.

7. The UN secretary general should appoint special representatives to be stationed in Thailand to coordinate the assistance work for Kampuchean people and periodically report to him on the situation.

'SETBACK' FOR BRANDT'S NORTH-SOUTH CONFERENCE PLAN

AU231236 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 23 May 80 p 2

[Engelbert Washietl dispatch from Bonn: "North-South Summit at the Earliest in 1981: Setback for Brandt's Plans"]

[Summary] Bonn--"There will not be anymore 'North-South summit' meetings this year, nor even any regional meetings to discuss the relationship between industrialized and development countries. That is the sobering result of the talks held Wednesday evening [21 May] between SPD chief Brandt, Mexican President Lopez Portillo and Chancellor Kreisky at Gymnich Palace near Bonn. The next tentative date for a summit meeting is early in 1981. Thus a special session of the UN General Assembly this summer will have to make do without the impetus Willy Brandt meant to provide for it."

At an Italian restaurant that he visited after the talks together with Willy Brandt, Kreisky said in a talk with journalists: "North-South dialogue? There is not any. That's just the problem." Both Brandt and Kreisky left no doubt: "There will be no breakthrough this year", but they would not give any assurance that such a "breakthrough" would be achieved next year.

Brandt originally wanted 25 prominent Third World figures to participate in the envisaged summit conference, but it seems to be difficult to make a selection since the Third World countries would all like to participate themselves. After Kreisky and Lopez Portillo, whom he had asked to organize a summit conference this year, had failed to achieve that and were not able to bring about as a compromise several regional conferences either, Brandt is withdrawing to the position of motivating spirit, leaving the practical efforts to Kreisky and Lopez Portillo who are now looking for another two prominent figures to help them. Those four, should the summit conference materialize after all, are then to act as its cochairmen.

Kreisky Comment

AU231237 Vienna KURIER in German 23 May 80 p 3

[Report by "P.P.": "Kreisky in Bonn: Dialogue Postponed"]

[Summary] After his talks with SPD Chairman Willy Brandt and Mexican President Lopez Portillo on 21 May, Chancellor Kreisky declared in Bonn that the "small North-South summit meeting" planned for August this year will not materialize but that instead a "big North-South summit meeting in Mexico City" will be prepared. "Obviously because he is skeptical about the success of such a conference, Kreisky insisted that that not only he and Lopez Portillo but also another two government chiefs--whose names were not given--are to be persuaded to act as cochairmen."

"According to Kreisky, the planned conference, in which primarily Lopez Portillo takes an "ardent interest", is to be a "working meeting" at the of which a resolution with concrete proposals is to be adopted. Although the initiative comes from the Socialist International, the conference is not to be held under its aegis."

ROESCH FAVORS FRENCH 'MIRAGE 50' OVER U.S. PLANE

AU231044 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 23 May 80 pp 1-2

[Georg Possanner report: "Roesch Against Army Experts; Will 'Mirage' Purchase Solve Nuclear Waste Problem?"]

[Summary] Vienna--"A confrontation between politicians and experts has developed on the question of the [planned] purchase of interceptor planes. Defense Minister Roesch, who today--Friday--will end his official visit to France, is said to have come out clearly in favor of the French 'Mirage 50', whereas the 'interceptor project group' set up by the National Defense Council rejects this type as outdated and is going to recommend the purchase of the American F-16/79. This emerges from an interim report of the project group which held its first meeting on 14 May."

According to the report, the General Dynamics F-16/79 appears to be best suited as regards both technical performance and operation costs. An exact cost-performance analysis will be worked out by the project group to back up its recommendation to be submitted to the National Defense Council session at the end of June. The "Mirage 50" is described in the interim report as a relatively old model, one generation behind the F-16/79 and inferior to the latter in every aspect of performance. Even if the F-16/79 were to cost as much as the Mirage 50--which it does not--it would have to be recommended, the experts declare. Flight tests have not been possible with either model so far, because the "Mirage 50' does yet not exist in the interceptor version but only as a fighter-bomber, and the F-16 is not available with the desired General Electrics engine. Contrary to earlier reports, the army's chief test pilot, Lt Col Bernecker, has therefore not accompanied Roesch to France.

Roesch's preference for the "Mirage 50" is essentially due to French reciprocal business offers which reportedly even extend to the question of interim and permanent storage of nuclear waste. Under the current contracts with the French Cogema Company, Austria would have to take back the nuclear waste materials from fuel reprocessing. This clause might possibly be eliminated if Austria were to purchase the "Mirage 50"--and that would be one of the main prerequisites for putting Austria's Zwentendorf nuclear power plant into operation.

GENSCHER, ANDREI ON VALUE OF CSCE MEETING, GERMANS IN ROMANIA

LD271558 Hamburg DPA in German 1435 GMT 27 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Romanian colleague, Stefan Andrei, have emphasized the importance, in the wake of current international crises, of the CSCE review conference which is due to take place in Madrid this autumn. It was learned after a 3-hour talk between the two foreign ministers that Genscher would like to see the Madrid meeting point the way to a European disarmament conference.

In a dinner speech Genscher said that the negotiating package approved by NATO in December 1979 was one of the most broadly conceived disarmament efforts since the end of World War II. He concurred with the view of the Warsaw Pact states that the nations of Europe were interested in the earliest possible start and success of negotiations on medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe. Talks between the United States and the Soviet Union should begin without further delay or preconditions with the aim of achieving a balance of medium-range nuclear weapons at a lower level of armaments.

On German-Romanian relations, Genscher expressed the hope that those Germans in Romania who want to join their relatives and spouses in the Federal Republic could continue to count on the understanding of authorities in Bucharest. Ethnic Germans who want to stay in Romania ought to be able to preserve their national character.

The Romanian foreign minister will confer with Genscher again tomorrow and meet Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Frankfurt.

Press on Minority Issue

DW280817 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 28 May 80 p 1

[Commentary signed Rm.: "How Are Matters To Continue?"]

[Text] In the flood of international visits by ministers, 50 percent of which could probably be eliminated without doing any harm, there seems to be one which makes obvious sense: the visit by Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei to Bonn. Romania, which is living dangerously as an outsider in the East bloc, must watch out even more after the Soviet coup de main in Afghanistan. The Soviet Politburo knows that the people in its East European outer court do not want to have anything to do with this war. The Soviet Union, therefore, looks even more to discipline in the camp. Ceausescu has even less room for maneuver than before.

What can the West do for Bucharest? Not much, but it should not neglect the little that is possible. Everything will help Romania which will counter the impression that the country is isolated in the world, half forgotten and not particularly esteemed; everything that would upset the possible Soviet calculation that a blow against Bucharest for the purpose of "normalization" would leave the West rather unconcerned. There is little the West can do to improve internal difficulties in Romania, such as economic difficulties, for example; Ceausescu does not want any interference in this matter either. But it is necessary for Foreign Ministers Genscher and Andrei to discuss one of these which also concerns Bonn: the desire of Romanians of German origin to emigrate. This is gradually becoming explosive. It is bad enough that things have reached that point. The two governments succeeded in reaching an understanding about the emigration of part of the ethnic group to the Federal Republic. However, no one has yet thought of what can be done to prevent so many Romanian Germans from wanting to emigrate at any cost.

The first person in Bonn to deal with the matter seriously was Genscher. He was not able to work miracles in Bucharest either, but it would still be a lot if his renewed dialogue with Andrei were to lead to a point where the question is no longer pushed aside as to what Romania plans to do with its German minority. Will the wish to leave continue to gain more and more ground or will better living conditions for the minority gradually contain that desire? In the event of the former, the Federal Republic would have no choice but to resign and just negotiate with Romania on exit figures; in the event of the latter it could offer Romania support.

GENSCHER, OKITA DISCUSS IRAN, SOUTHEAST ASIA

[Text] Bonn--In connection with the Afghanistan crisis, the Federal Republic and Japan will support the Middle East countries in their efforts for economic and also political stability. This was stressed by Federal Foreign Minister Genscher and his Japanese counterpart, Saburo Okita, in Bonn today. Both ministers emphasized the importance of the fact that at their conference in Islamabad the Islamic states once again expressed themselves strongly in favor of a solution of the Afghanistan conflict in the spirit of the UN resolution.

In their exchange of views, described as "intensive and far-ranging," Genscher and Okita also discussed the economic sanctions introduced against Iran by the European Community and Japan. Okita furthermore briefed his Bonn counterpart on Japan's assessment of Vietnam's policy. Both ministers stressed their desire to continue the close and fruitful cooperation with the ASEAN group of Southeast Asian states. A further subject was the preparations for the world economic summit in Venice at the end of June to be attended by the heads of governments and foreign ministers of the Federal Republic and Japan.

The Foreign Ministry stresses that the quick succession of German-Japanese talks demonstrates the determination of both countries to intensify their coordination and cooperation on a worldwide scale.

EXCHANGES WITH PRC IN SCIENCE, EDUCATION TO BE EXPANDED

LD231342 Hamburg DPA in German 1239 GMT 23 May 80

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Republic and the PRC plan to extend their exchanges in the science and educational sector to vocational training. This was agreed by PRC Education Minister Jiang Nanxiang in his talks with Federal Education Minister Schmude.

At the end of his week's visit to the Federal Republic the Chinese minister told a news conference in Bonn today that China is prepared to learn from the Federal Republic also in the sphere of vocational training. During the Cultural Revolution many vocational training schools in China were closed. Now this sector of education has to be built up again. For this purpose Chinese vocational experts and teachers will come to the Federal Republic. Specific agreements will probably be concluded in the fall.

Jiang Nanxiang and Schmude also reached an understanding on greater German assistance for the development of Tong-Ji University in Shanghai and on an intensification of the exchange of scientists and of university parterships. According to Schmude, just under 200 Chinese scientists are at present in the Federal Republic for further studies. The first 100 students from China are expected later this year. Some 35 Germans are also studying at Chinese universities and colleges.

Jiang Nanxiang has invited Schmude to visit China.

AGREEMENT REACHED ON MILITARY AID FOR TURKEY, GREECE

LD231554 Hamburg DPA in German 1508 GMT 23 May 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--Following temporary differences of opinion between Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer, the Federal Government has agreed on specific amounts for special military aid for NATO partners, Turkey and Greece. Accordingly and following a resolution of the Bundestag Budget Committee, this year the two countries will receive from Bonn, as part of the Western support program for NATO's southeast flank, DM170 million. It was learned today that the Federal Government has agreed to make during the following 3 years further payments of DM200 million, 190 million and 100 million.

The Foreign Office said that aid for Turkey alone will amount to DM600 until 1983, and that Turkey will receive the German battle tank Leopard-1 to modernize its tanks. In addition, the Federal Republic is to supply some 250 Milan-type antitank systems. According to the Foreign Ministry, this year the Federal Republic is to provide economic aid to Turkey amounting to $295 million as part of the OECD program.

SOUTH AFRICAN TRAVEL BAN ON RIGHTS ADVOCATE PROTESTED

LD271002 Hamburg DPA in German 0900 GMT 27 May 80

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government has protested against the ban imposed on the South African human rights champion, Neville Alexander, to travel to the Federal Republic. The Foreign Ministry disclosed today that State Secretary Guenther van Well had summoned South African Ambassador Kurt von Schirnding to convey Bonn's severe criticism of the measure to the South African Government.

Neville Alexander, a former scholarship holder at the Alexander von Homboldt Foundation, was to have addressed the 4-day international cultural symposium due to open in Bonn today. Although the South African Government had already given him permission to travel, he was unexpectedly detained at Cape Town Airport on 24 May as he was about to depart.

State Secretary van Well stressed the shock and anger of the Federal Government at the arbitrary action of the South African Government which would arouse indignation among the German public and was likely to jeopardize bilateral relations. Van Well emphatically told the South African ambassador of the urgent desire of the Federal Republic that Alexander be allowed to participate in the symposium without delay.

COMMENTATOR ON KREISKY-PALME-GONZALEZ TEHRAN VISIT

DW271037 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 27 May 80 p 10

[Commentary signed Fr.: "The Three in Tehran"]

[Text] Had the three emissaries from the Socialist International--the Austrian, the Swede and the Spaniard--expressly called their visit to Iran an attempt to mediate, it would have been senseless right from the start concerning the only point that would have made sense: ending the suffering of the hostages. Since last November when the fanatics and criminals who are euphemistically called "students" deprived more than 50 members of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran of their freedom, the scale of possible help has been tested. The intervention made with the backing of international law--something that has been heavily and continuously violated by Iran--has failed. The Iranian leadership does not care about the new decision of the International Court. Complete sanctions suffer from the interests of the Western economy, and a regime like that in Iran does not have to take possible effects into consideration very much. The three travelers--it is interesting that one of them comes from a NATO country--may possibly have concentrated their talks on the new parliament and its majority. They may have tried to convey the insight to the people in power and the possible parliamentary participants that the desired independence from East and West will be complicated by continuing the affront vis-a-vis the West, and that the desired balanced situation will in the end become impossible.

PRESS NOTES MOSCOW'S 'ILLEGAL' PROTEST OF KOHL, STRAUSS SPEECHES

DW231057 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany
0505 GMT 23 May 80

[Press review]

[Text] STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN writes: Moscow's lodging of a protest with the Western powers against the speeches by Kohl and Strauss at the Berlin CDU congress is objectively unjustified and, hence, a premeditated political affront. For it is a foregone conclusion that Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin says nothing, absolutely nothing that might concede to the Soviets a censorship of public opinion in West Berlin. And the Soviet argument that nothing may be said against the Soviet Union in West Berlin because of the detente character of the Quadripartite Agreement is outright absurd.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG stresses this point: It goes without saying that the Soviets, too, are aware that their note of protest to the three Western allies concerning the CDU congress in West Berlin is totally unfounded legally and that it will be answered accordingly. So what was it that caused them to become diplomatically active despite this clear state of affairs? On the one hand, this step might be judged as an attempt at interpreting the Quadripartite Agreement to excess, meaning an attempt to enlarge their own political possessions by claiming a nonexistant law as existent after all. On the other hand, the note might also be seen as an attempt to exert influence over the Bundestag elections, an attempt which probably will be followed by others.

The HESSISCHE-NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE, published in Kassel, writes: Paper does not blush, and the interpretations by the Soviets time and again herald audacious imagination. Granted, what the two chairmen of the CDU and the CSU said about Moscow's strategy was not particularly gentle whispering. The events in Afghanistan did meet with sharp response and the beginning of the election campaign let many a word sound more shrilly than usual. This conceded, however, it just will not do that the Soviets appoint themselves censors and determine what is said or written outside their sphere of power. It is particularly good because the Bonn parties and the Western allies reacted so promptly.

MANNHEIMER MORGEN reports: The heavy artillery used by the Soviets against the Berlin speeches of Strauss and Kohl is part of the intimidation attempts with which Moscow now and again tries to achieve Federal German good conduct. Despite the Quadripartite Agreement, Berlin still is the preferred point for Eastern needling and for threatening gestures. Naturally one can also consider the Soviet note as a flanking contribution to the election campaign in the Federal Republic. The rejection of the move by the Western allies and the backing by Bonn of a free statement of political opinion was prompt and clear. Fearful yielding would only encourage Moscow to carry on.

NUERBERGER NACHRICHTEN stresses: The Soviet move is significant in connection with the forthcoming visit of the chancellor to Moscow. It seems that Helmut Schmidt was to be reminded of the value of peace in the middle of Europe, and of the possibilities the Soviet Union has to play with the security of West Berlin, which belongs very much to peace. The partners of the Berlin agreement are also being reminded of the situation. It will depend on their future attitude whether next to all other crises in the world there will be also a new Berlin conflict.

KOELNER STADT-ANZEIGER maintains: Little is to be said about the formalities of the Soviet protest. The Kremlin probably did not want to object to the CDU congress itself since it has said nothing against the SPD congress last December. Today one tries instead to encourage the Western powers to do some censorship work. Although some of them may not like Strauss, they could not do that favor to the Kremlin even if the Afghanistan incident had not happened.

LE MONDE: AFGHAN REBELS 'MAIN LOSERS' AT ISLAMIC CONFERENCE

[Editorial: "The Islamic Conference and Moscow"]

[Text] After more than 5 days of debate in Islamabad the Islamic Conference finally adopted a more conciliatory final communique on the Afghan question on Thursday, 22 May. In January following the invasion of Afghanistan, the Muslim countries, stunned by what had happened, had suspended the Kabul regime from the conference and demanded the withdrawal of the Soviet forces. Today, while maintaining this demand--which the steadfastness front countries and the PLO, who were absent in January, would have liked to see omitted--the conference has decided to set up a special committee with the job of carrying out the appropriate consultations with a view to solving the Afghan crisis.

The committee, which comprises Tunisian conference Secretary General Habib Chatti and the foreign ministers of Afghanistan's two neighbors, in other words the Iranian Sadeq Qotbzadeh and Pakistani Agha Shahi, will have the power to form a delegation which will establish contact with the Kremlin. An international conference could also be convened. An appeal has been made to the nonaligned movement to help promote an "all-embracing solution."

To maintain its unity the conference, although largely dominated by moderate countries hostile to the USSR, had to take account of the presence of Steadfastness Front representatives. The PLO--disappointed to see the Afghan affair overshadow the Jerusalem question--did all it could to convince the participants that it was important to distinguish between "friends and enemies" and that the United States and the Soviet Union could not be placed in the dock side by side. "Carter is our enemy," the Palestinian delegate declared. "He cannot be Muslim in Afghanistan when he has constantly and is still fighting Islam in Palestine and Iran." The PLO refused to recognize the existence of "Soviet imperialism" in Afghanistan.

At Mr Qotbzadeh's instigation the participants tried to take an "equidistant" stance between the two superpowers, one being criticized for its policy in the Middle East and Iran, the other for its intervention in Kabul. Nonetheless they called on Tehran to "continue to work for a solution to this crisis (the U.S. hostages) in the spirit of Islam." They also denounced the presence of Soviet and Cuban troops in the Horn of Africa and condemned Israel and Egypt.

The main losers at Islamabad were the Afghan rebels. Although included in the Iranian delegation in a spectacular way, they did not obtain the observer status they were seeking. The Mojahedin, who are divided, have in fact been placed virtually on the same footing as Mr Babrak Karmal's pro-Soviet government, as "interested" parties with whom the special committee will be able to have discussions. This is not much consolation for them while, for Mr Karmal, declared "persona non grata" in January, the door is now slightly open.

The Afghan rebels--who complain in addition that they have not received a cent or any weapon from any "fraternal" country--could not have been satisfied with this new line. This line is a far cry from the intransigence of the January resolution which now looks like empty words in view of the conference's obvious desire to open dialogue with the Kremlin. The Kremlin is bound to be pleased at the results of this meeting which was stamped with "realism" in face of the fait accompli.

L'HUMANITE: U.S. SEEKS NATO BUILDUP DESPITE PARITY

LD271039 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 14 May 80 p 10

[Max Leon article: "A Dangerous Game"]

[Text] Five months to the day after the Brussels session which decided on the deployment of 572 U.S. nuclear missiles in West Europe (Pershing-2 missiles and long-range ground-launched cruise missiles) the NATO headquarters is once again the scene of spectacular activity. The meetings between defense ministers and military chiefs are following each other in rapid succession. Generals and spokesmen are adding up "revelations" on the alleged Soviet threat.

"We are entering a period of high risk," General Zeiner Gundersen, the chairman of the NATO chiefs of staff committee, said. On the basis of dubious CIA estimates of the USSR defense effort in the past 10 years this general concluded that this improved capability "can be described as disturbing." Are the United States and its 12 European partners in the Atlantic pact military organization really in an inferior position? The Western strategists are so unconvinced of this that they are negotiating with their East bloc counterparts to maintain and even reduce to a lower level the equivalence of forces between the two military organizations.

Successive Washington governments--until Mr Carter's--have been so aware that strategic parity has been established between the United States and the USSR since the end of the sixties that they drew up and signed a series of agreements with Moscow: for instance a treaty in 1972 limiting antiballistic missiles to prevent a potential aggressor from making itself invulnerable to its victim's response. In 1972 they also signed the first SALT agreement limiting strategic arms which was replaced in June 1979 by a formal treaty known as SALT II. At the express request of Presidents Brezhnev and Carter, this treaty, signed in Vienna, makes provision for the two countries to extend their efforts to reduce parity to a lower level during negotiations on a SALT III treaty. Parity is, therefore, an undisputable fact as is the overall equivalence between the two alliances, despite the very great diversity of arms and their performances. Any attempt by any group to gain supremacy, and especially on the "European theater" where 12,000-13,000 nuclear warheads are concentrated. [sentence as published]

Why are the NATO leaders dredging up myths about the "Soviet threat" yet again? They have to justify to U.S. and West European opinion a constant increase in military credits (more than 3 percent per year in real terms). They need to counter the socialist countries' proposals for negotiating gradual disarmament, particularly at a time when the Warsaw Pact members have just reaffirmed the defensive nature of their alliance. They need to increase "discipline" within NATO where different interests and the echo of the people's opposition are causing friction and reservations.

Furthermore the United States has not abandoned its efforts to establish mechanisms which would automatically draw its partners into a conflict and to alter the existing overall parity by obtaining even limited military advantages.

This American game is dangerous. Even though the French Government is not officially represented at the current Brussels session it is disturbing that a Pentagon leader was able to praise its role publicly yesterday by saying that "France is one of the pillars of the Atlantic Alliance."

BERLINGUER ON PRC VISIT, USSR, FOREIGN POLICY

LD271337 [Editorial Report] Rome L'UNITA in Italian on 17 May carries on pages 1 and 21 a 2,000-word Ugo Baduel report on a speech delivered by PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer to workers at the Breda Factory in Milan and the Milan L'UNITA 19 May 2,400-word Baduel report on Berlinguer's 18 May speech in Genoa. Both speeches, part of the PCI campaign for the 8 June local elections, cover generally the same ground as Berlinguer's 15 May address in Milan's main square.

The 17 May L'UNITA report concludes with a brief summary of Berlinguer's remarks to Milan's local television station. With reference to the recent allegations of terrorist activity made against Christian Democratic Party (DC) Deputy Secretary Donat-Cattin's son Marco, Berlinguer said he would "certainly" resign if placed in a similar position. In answer to NOVOYE VREMYA's recent attack on his PRC visit, Berlinguer says: "We did not feel manipulated. Of course the Chinese have their own goals and our goals are different in party, but both sides were well aware that the important things was the full resumption of relations between our parties." Asked "whether the PCI prefers Tito's or Brezhnev's policy," Berlinguer replied: "As far as the world's major issues and relations among communist parties are concerned we are closer to the stances of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia than to the CPSU's." He also denied recent charges of secret PCI funding.

In Genoa Berlinguer renewed his attack on the present Italian Government and "the damage it is doing to Italy," but denied any intention--as asserted by Socialist Secretary Craxi--to "radicalize" the polemic during the election campaign, claiming that the PCI was merely pointing to "the facts" of the government's record. With regard to Italian foreign policy, Berlinguer said: "While some countries--which certainly nobody could suspect of being at all pro-Soviet--are rejecting the U.S. diktat, the Italian Government does not hesitate to follow without a hint of national dignity those U.S. directives, which are provoking an irreversible crisis not only in the Olympics but also the future of many international sporting events." Berlinguer says, with regard to Afghanistan that while "we immediately clearly condemned the intervention, calling for the withdrawal of the USSR's troops from that country and pointing out the USSR's--as well as the United States'--share of responsibility in the detente crisis, when has the DC or its governments ever adopted similar stances with respect to the United States?"

PCI'S PAJETTA QUIZZED BY NEAPOLITANS AT CAMPAIGN RALLY

LD231409 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 18 May 80 p 22

["M.T." report on PCI Directorate member Gian Carlo Pajetta 17 May address at Naples rally: "Christian Democratic Party (DC) Wants To Surrender Italy to U.S. Extremism"]

[Text] Naples--"I have just come from a small country which has managed to defend itself primarily by defending its own independence against interference by all the major powers. We regard Tito's Yugoslavia as an example: There, by that coffin, we discovered the validity of our stances, the certainty that it is possible to realize what other people call utopias, renunciations and compromises."

Comrade Pajetta's brief opening remarks met with prolonged applause. Then the dialogue between the citizens and Communists began in Matteotti Square. A long line of people gathered in front of the rostrum. Young and old party members clutching pieces of paper awaited their turn to ask Comrade Pajetta whether it is true that China is changing, whether it is true that the USSR is entirely responsible for the international climate of tension, whether it is true.... With 27 questions to answer, Pajetta had to stop from time to time to take notes.

"Comrade Pajetta, why does China say war is inevitable?"

"I come from Montecalvario, a neighborhood where sport is something they show you on television. If the Italian Government decides not to go to the Moscow Olympics, we will not have even that. What will you do to prevent this?"

"Will your form of socialism meet the same fate as Allende's?"

"Why have you criticized the USSR so much over Afghanistan?"

"You talk about peace and participation, but the decisions will be taken by the 'big shots,' the diplomats, not by us...."

By now the square was crammed full of people and surrounded completely by red flags alternating with multicolored peace flags. Pajetta noted down all the questions and then began his series of answers.

"In China we did not discuss the inevitability of war with the Chinese comrades, but what can be done right away for peace; and we reached agreement with them on this."

"We must go to Moscow, but not because sport has nothing to do with politics but because the Olympics are the passport for peace and brotherhood and because if we turn down this path we will eventually refuse Iranian oil and break off diplomatic relations with the USSR. And then what will be the dividing line between peace and war?"

"Like Allende's Chile? That depends--not only on world events, but also on you and us and our ability to establish roots among the masses and to win new friends."

"Socialism is built by conquering the peoples' hearts and minds, not their mountains. I do not know how much the Soviet Union has gained by entering Afghanistan but I am very well aware of how much the cause of socialism has lost. Our position is clear: Immediate negotiations for the troops' withdrawal for a free and independent Afghanistan."

"It is not true. Peace and war do not depend on the 'big shots.' They cannot act without your consensus and they set their sights on war when they believe they can mislead us and take our decisions for us. Remember that we will be voting on 8 June. Will it be just to change the local councils? Or will it also be to avoid lending strength to the sector of the DC which wants to 'surrender' the country to U.S. extremism?"

ROME OPERA TO HAVE RECIPROCAL 1981 PRC TOUR

[Text] Rome, May 28 (ANSA)--The Rome Opera is to be the first Western opera house to send a company to China in return for a visit here by the world-famous Beijing Opera. The announcement was made here yesterday evening by Italian Tourism and Entertainment Minister Bernardo D'Arezzo, who said the Rome Opera's visit has been scheduled for 1981. The exchange--the Beijing Opera is currently on tour with performances here and in Palermo, Sicily--has been organized under the Italo-Chinese cultural agreement signed last October and was finalized during the recent journey to China of the Rome theater's superintendent, Luca Di Schiena. According to D'Arezzo, the exchange was an "exceptional historical event, not only because it allows us to come into contact with artists of world value, but also because it shows that the Beijing Opera's presence in Italy represents an opening that will not remain isolated".

D'Arezzo also told the reception in honor of the Chinese troupe that the exchange was not just a question of art, "but also reiterates an ancient wisdom that we Europeans recognize in you". "Even if different political systems divide us, there will be no way of breaking our determination for peace and liberty for which we are both fighting, just as we are fighting for civil progress and the salvation of the peoples". The leader of the Chinese delegation Zhang Jun Ha stressed the Beijing Opera's visit as a sign of deep Italo-Chinese friendship and because it offers "a great occasion to exchange experiences and stimulate cooperation between the artists of our two countries".

ANDREOTTI COMMENTS ON KILLING OF LIBYANS, MORO ASSASSINATION

[Text] Rome, May 27 (ANSA)--Italy's former prime minister, Giulio Andreotti, spoke out on the recent killing of four Libyan nationals in Italy and filled in some background on the kidnapping and killing of Christian Democrat Party Chairman Aldo Moro in the Spring of 1978 in an interview appearing in the new issue of the Italian weekly, ESPRESSO.

Referring to the four Libyan expatriates killed in Rome since the beginning of the year, thought to have been victims of Libyan gunmen sent out to "liquidate" the enemies of the Tripoli regime abroad, Andreotti urged that "insistent, articulated steps be taken with the Libyan authorities to put a halt to this". According to the former prime minister, who is currently the chairman of the lower house foreign affairs commission, Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi "might not be as unreachable as is thought. One must discuss untiringly with Al-Qadhdhafi and, really, he does feel a degree of gratitude to Italy". Andreotti went on to reveal that a few years ago "the Italian secret services quickly and capably stepped in to avert a plot against the Libyan regime, organized and fully developed by those who opposed it. Their staging base was an Italian port on the Adriatic Sea. They never arrived in Libya and I imagine that Al-Qadhdhafi was pleased", he said.

Moving on to the issue of the kidnapping and slaying of the DC party chairman and former prime minister at the hands of Red Brigades urban terrorists, Andreotti said that "we turned to (Yugoslav President Josip Broz) Tito who quickly and generously spoke to other heads of state" in connection with possible Red Brigades links abroad. "The fact is", Andreotti continued, "that the marshal spoke also to Al-Qadhdhafi but without result. Qadhdhafi said that he had no contact with the Red Brigades and that he could do nothing. He sent me a letter expressing solidarity with Mrs Moro".

Speaking of the idea of an exchange of a "sick and imprisoned" alleged member of the Red Brigades for the Christian Democrat statesman, the former prime minister recalled that during the 55 tense days separating Moro's capture and the day he was found shot to death in a parked car in downtown Rome, "the government maintained a position of principle: Exchanging one single person would have meant coming to terms with the enemies of the republic". Andreotti also pointed out that the "sick and imprisoned" individual involved was transferred to a Naples penitentiary, "to a city where he had his own doctor and where he had been asking to be transferred. This was a sign of our part. We were awaiting a sign from the Red Brigades. None came. There was the killing of Moro", he concluded.

RUSSOMANNO FOUND GUILTY IN RED BRIGADES CASE

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, May 24--The deputy chief of Italy's internal security service, Silvano Russomanno, was found guilty by a Rome court today on the charge of "assisting in revealing official secrets" and sentenced to two years and eight months imprisonment for having given a Rome newsman a copy of parts of a police interrogation of an alleged Red Brigades terrorist.

The newsman, Fabio Isman, of the Rome daily IL MESSAGGERO, was sentenced to one year and six months in prison after guilty findings were returned on charges connected to his part in the publication of the secret documents. The publisher of MESSAGGERO, Vittorio Emiliani, was fined 400,000 lire (about 450 dollars) and was instructed to refrain from the publication of sub judice documents.

The case wound up today began in early April when Russomanno delivered to Isman a copy of statement obtained from the alleged former head of the Turin Brigades unit, Patrizio Peci, dubbed the "penitent terrorist" since he started cooperating with the police following his capture in February. Peci's confession and subsequent statement have allowed Italian police to make a series of spectacular arrests in the ongoing battle against terrorism and have cast considerable light on the phenomenon.

The public prosecutor maintained that the newspaper publication of Peci's statements damaged the cases being built by investigating magistrates and permitted terrorists still at large and those flankers whose subversive connections are still unknown to neutralize a part of the current anti-terrorist offensive.

POLICE DISCOVER RED BRIGADES HIDEOUT IN ROME

[Text] A new hideout of the Red Brigades was discovered this morning by the carabinieri. It was located in the Nuovo Salario quarter [of Rome] in an apartment block in the Via Antonio Silvani. It was an important logistic base of the Red Brigades, used in support of terrorist actions throughout central Italy. The carabinieri found the RPG launcher which was used to kill Lieutenant Colonel Varisco of the carabinieri. Two arrests were made but details are kept strictly secret because the operation is still underway. The equipment found at the base includes numerous Italian and foreign automatic and semiautomatic weapons, silencers, explosives, fuses, hand grenades, bulletproof vests and disguises.

SUSPECTS INTERROGATED IN CONNECTION WITH NAPLES SLAYING

[Text] Naples, May 20 (ANSA)--Police in Naples are still seeking to identify two of the four self-proclaimed members of Italy's Red Brigades terrorist organization captured here yesterday after a Christian Democrat regional councillor was shot and killed. The names of two of the quartet, nabbed after a shootout and car chase following the killing of 49-year-old Pino Amato, were reported as Bruno Seghetti, 30 years old, of Rome, and 26-year-old Teresa Romeo from a town near Naples.

Sources in the southern Italian port city pointed out that the slaying of the Christian Democrat Party official was the first serious strike by Red Brigades urban guerrillas in Naples. They recalled, in this connection, a statement attributed to the self-confessed Red Brigade leader, Patrizio Peci, now in prison and cooperating with police, according to which the Brigades group in the southern city "has been in training at least since the end of 1979". Most of the organization's terrorist activities have been centered in the cities of northern Italy.

The anonymous telephone caller who spoke to the Naples bureau of a Rome newspaper yesterday and claimed responsibility for the killing for the Red Brigades also threatened new and bloody terrorist acts.

[Apparent text of 16 May French Socialist Party-Spanish Communist Party [PCE] communique]

[Text] On the occasion of his visit to Madrid, French Socialist Party First Secretary Francois Mitterrand held a conversation with PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo this Friday afternoon. This conversation, which took place in a very cordial atmosphere, broached the most worrying European and international issues and the dangers threatening peace. The meeting confirmed the usefulness and importance of developing dialogue and exchanges of views among parties belonging to the European workers movement.

It was deemed desirable what initiatives could be adopted in favor of detente [phrase as published], and particularly in order to help prepare the Madrid CSCE conference under the best conditions.

MINISTRY OF INTERIOR ISSUES NOTE ON ARREST OF ETA MEMBERS

LD252234 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 25 May 80

[Text] This afternoon the Ministry of the Interior issued an official note concerning the arrest of four alleged ETA [Basque Fatherland and Liberty] members last Friday at Madrid's Barajas Airport.

The note reports that the four detainees are Basque refugees detained first by the Dutch Government and taken by Dutch police from Amsterdam to Madrid. The alleged terrorists were carrying false documents.

The four detainees arrived in Amsterdam this week from Aden, the capital of South Yemen, where they took part in a terrorist training course alongside another eight ETA members and a number of Palestinian PLO dissidents. They are implicated in several terrorist attacks in the Basque Country carried out between 1978-79. Jose Manuel (Arzallus) specifically is implicated, according to his own statement, in the murder of the forest ranger, Ramirez (Quintero), in Lazarza. The central intelligence brigade is carrying out inquiries and more arrests are expected in the next few days.

CALVO ORTEGA REJECTS CHARGES OF SUAREZ 'AUTHORITARIANISM'

LD231043 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 17 May 80 p 12

[Mary Merida interview with Union of the Democratic Center (UCD) Secretary General Rafael Calvo Ortega: "Government Approaching 20 May Debate With Intention That It Be Broad and Thorough and, Above All, That It Make Things Very Clear"--date, place not specified]

[Excerpt] Suarez' Authoritarianism With UCD

[Question] It has been repeatedly said that Prime Minister Suarez exerts a great deal of authoritarianism on the UCD. To what extent is this true?

[Answer] I believe that it is not true. Suarez does not exert any authoritarianism on the party. In fact, the debate at the latest Political Council meeting was very broad and open; each member of the council presented his theses and criteria which were discussed for several hours, thus demonstrating that such an assertion is in no way justified.

[Question] Nevertheless, Prime Minister Suarez' leading role within the party does seem overwhelming.

[Answer] I do not believe so because the Standing Committee deprives the prime minister of power since all its other members have widely ranging opinions on all important topics and it is the committee as a whole which decides in the final analysis. The fact is that, judging from the talks that I have already had with the executive secretaries, I do not see that anyone has been subjected to any kind of authoritarianism by the prime minister.

UCD "Families"

[Question] So what is happening to the UCD? What is the reason for its internal crisis? What are the problems being discussed within the party? To what extent are the differences among its various constituent "families" distorting its proper functioning?

[Answer] I believe that the UCD has all the same problems as any other political party and the fact that it is the ruling party does not mean that it has any fewer. On the other hand, it has no major problems but only small ones proper to its dynamics. I believe that the "families" aspect has been exaggerated: There are merely areas of more or less firm agreement on specific topics. But its component political "families" are all excellent UCD members who have worked and are still working for the good and the interests of the party. Furthermore, I do not believe that there is any crisis at this time when thousands of membership applications have been held up, thus showing that there are thousands of people who want to join the UCD. It seems illogical to me that so many people should want to join a party in a state of crisis.

[Question] Mr Calvo Ortega, I understand that as the UCD's newly appointed secretary general you are not going to make trouble for your own party but, nevertheless, you will not deny that the governing party's internal tensions have been evident recently and that the discrepancies among its various factions are also evident.

[Answer] You see, the UCD, like all parties with internal democracy, has some members who differ and have different opinions from others on particular topics. But, not only is this not negative but, on the contrary, I feel it is positive because it enriches the variety of viewpoints and makes it possible to take decisions with a broader outlook. Following a polemical debate, things can be seen more clearly. What cannot be expected is that it be an absolutely uniform and absolutely homogeneous party; this cannot be and must not be expected. It is another matter that once the collective will has been formed and decisions taken, every member is obliged to respect them since, moreover, voting in the Congress of Deputies and Senate is absolutely en bloc.

Anxiously Awaited 20 May Debate

[Question] How do you view the 20 May Congress of Deputies debate and the prime minister's address to parliament?

[Answer] I believe it will be an interesting debate and one which the prime minister will approach in the best possible frame of mind and willingly, moreover. Suarez wants the debate and the UCD wants the debate. Irrespective of anything that may be said, we are the first to want this debate.

[Question] Well, perhaps that is because you are sure of winning it, isn't it? Will it perhaps bring anything new to the Spanish Government's political outlook and effectiveness in resolving the many unresolved problems or will it merely be a dialectical government-opposition debate to see who emerges victorious?

[Answer] Of course I am absolutely sure that Prime Minister Suarez will emerge victorious despite the opposition's attempts to prevent this--but that is another matter. The fact is that excessive expectations have been created regarding this debate, but there is no doubt that the government will issue a forceful reply to any kind of argument raised by the opposition, who are in fact the ones interested in creating this hullabaloo over the debate. On the other hand, I do feel it is quite right for them to try and draw the maximum advantage from this and any other circumstances because that is what opposition parties are for. But it does not worry me because, at the same time, it is a wonderful opportunity for the government to present its stance on very important issues--the autonomies, for instance--in sufficient detail and to a large audience.

Autonomies

[Question] Will the autonomies be the major topic of the debate?

[Answer] Yes indeed.

[Question] And what is the government's real stance in this connection?

[Answer] The autonomies are a matter of state in which I believe the UCD's action demonstrates an awareness of the fact that the autonomies presuppose a difficult and laborious process which demands a great sense of responsibility.

[Question] Will we not be disappointed by this debate?

[Answer] Well, perhaps because it has been given disproportionate expectations. The public, which is not very used to parliamentary debates, might be somewhat disappointed and feel cheated to some extent. But I repeat that it will not be the fault of the debate but a result of the excessive importance attached to it. But obviously the government is approaching this debate with the intention that it be broad and thorough and, above all, that it make things very clear. And I repeat that the government wants it to take place.

Assessment of Situation

[Question] Mr Calvo Ortega, you have been a minister in Suarez' Cabinet and now you are secretary general of his party. What is your assessment of the country's political situation in general and of the formulas or measures being put forward for resolving the major problems now facing us Spaniards?

[Answer] One should not make generalizations and I believe that there are three major issues or problems facing the country to which thorough and satisfactory answers must be found. These are the autonomies, the economic crsisis, and the so-called "rule of law," especially with regard to the citizens' security. We have already discussed the first of these and, as I have told you, it will be the major topic of the coming parliamentary debate. As for unemployment, you are very well aware that it is a general problem which exists in all democracies and is a matter of social responsibility; therefore, a government cannot be blamed because the responsibility lies with the employers who are, by definition, the job creators, and the trade unions, because if their pay demands are excessive they can create unemployment. The responsibility lies also with the public administrations if they increase current spending too much so that investments suffer; finally, it is the responsibility of society as a whole--and this is not just a figure of speech because an egoistic and disunited society creates unemployment (consider the problem of moonlighting). And the government also has its share of responsibility inasmuch as it must create the preconditions for investment.

The citizens' security is the third major topic of concern to the government and it is a very difficult one. But I believe that, despite the terrorism, good results are now being achieved though the spectacular results we would all like cannot be expected in the short term.

"We Are Moving Forward"

[Question] But are we regressing instead of progressing, or are we standing still?

[Answer] We are moving forward and this is a fact. What we must not do is expect democracy to resolve all of the country's problems--which are numerous and difficult, moreover--at once and right away; but we are absolutely determined to resolve them.

[Question] Finally, Mr Calvo Ortega, have you detected what has been termed an attempt to "unseat" Prime Minister Suarez from the government on the part of not only the opposition but also certain sectors or members of your own party?

[Answer] Nobody in the joint bodies has questioned Prime Minister Suarez' leadership and nobody has even remotedly considered this "unseating" to which you refer. As for the opposition, it can try what it likes. In passing, I will tell you that I see the UCD as a strong party which has outright progress and continuous expansion.

MINISTER QUESTIONED ON RAMIFICATIONS OF SAUDI OIL ACCORD

LD271217 Copenhagen BERLINGKSE TIDENDE in Danish 14 May 80 pt 1 p 1-2

[Johannes Bundgaard report: "Denmark Could Find Itself Politically Bound by Oil Contract: Energy Minister Poul Nielson Will Account for State Oil Trade"]

[Text] Denmark's state oil purchases in Saudi Arabia have been made under conditions that could be exploited politically. Denmark must not bring Saudi Arabia into discredit in any way under the terms of the contract. Saudi Arabia alone will decide whether any discredit has been brought on it and has the right to suspend the contract without any form of compensation.

The contract, which also conflicts with Denmark's shipping and EEC agreements, was signed by the Danish Oil and Natural Gas Company. This does not, however, transfer the full responsibility from the government, claim three Folketing members who until now have been trying unsuccessfully to get some light thrown on the oil contract and the conditions contained in it.

The conditions of purchase that can be used politically are found in the confidential English-language contract's eighth article, point 1c. An unauthorized diclosure of the contents indicates that the point states that neither the Danish Government, government departments or other agencies may behave in a manner that will bring discredit on the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, its government, government departments or agencies in the international oil world, "or in any other manner whatsoever."

Under the same article's second point it states that if Saudi Arabia's state oil company, PETROMIN, should determine that there has been any breach of contract on the part of the purchasers, PETROMIN has the right to "suspend or terminate" the contract. Denmark, as purchaser, will not be entitled to any form of compensation for the loss from Saudi Arabia.

Only a few days after the state Danish Oil and Natural Gas Company had signed the oil purchase contract negotiated by Energy Minister Poul Nielson it was reported that the contract contained the possibility of political exploitation, and that it was in conflict with Denmark's shipping agreements and with agreements with the EEC.

Folketing members Ole Bernt Henriksen (Conservative), Arne Christiansen (Left Socialists) and Annelise Gotfredsen (Conservative) therefore demanded an explanation of the contract with documentation from the energy minister in the Folketing Industry, Market and Energy Committee. The Progress Party demanded a debate of enquiry of the whole matter. The debate will be held in the Folketing today. The minister will not only be asked to put the contract before the Folketing committee, but he will also be told that he bears full responsibility for the contract.

Even though the energy minister declared in a note on 22 April that the contract was drawn up after he had finished his negotiations, and even though its contents are binding on the government and its departments, the minister does not consider himself responsible. This is clear from his statements on the radio yesterday after the Danish Shipowners Association had pointed out that the contract breaks Danish shipping policy and international agreements.

He said: "In my capacity as minister I have not signed any contract which gives preference to Saudi Arabian vessels with regard to the transport of oil to Denmark. However, this preference is contained in the standard contract that Danish Oil and Natural Gas has signed. So there is no question of a Danish Government agreement, but rather of a private agreement between Saudi Arabia and a Danish oil company." The minister also added: "I can well see that this seems like flag discrimination, and that it thus is in conflict with Danish shipping policy, but it is one of the conditions for the purchase of oil in Saudi Arabia."

Those members of the Folketing who have pursued the matter from the beginning are of a different opinion: Annelise Gotfredsen (Conservative): "It is as clear as crystal. The minister is responsible. He has even gone so far as to get the Folketing to find a state guarantee of 1 billion kroner to cover his state company's losses, if it suits Saudi Arabia to suspend the contract."

Ivar Hansen (Left Socialists): "We must find out exactly what the relationship is between the minister and the state-owned company. It was not the intention to give the minister a blanket organization when the Folketing agreed to set up a special oil-purchasing company."

Ole Bernt Henriksen (Conservative): "The minister, as both negotiator and minister, is fully responsible. He represents the state, which owns the company. The person who represents the majority shareholding in a company has all the power in that company, and also full responsibility. He cannot talk himself out of that."

PAPER HITS GOVERNMENT'S LACK OF POLICY ON OLYMPICS BOYCOTT

[Editorial: "Dodges on the Halfway Line"]

[Text] Sports Minister Lise Ostergaard will, it is stated, give an account of the Danish Government's attitude on Danish participation in the summer Olympics in the Folketing on Tuesday. But how can she give an account of something that the government simply does not have? Seldom have we seen a Danish Social Democratic government vacillate more on a question of foreign policy, not even counting the period in office of the present foreign minister, and that says a lot.

The government has neither an attitude nor a standpoint on this matter. Since January, when President Carter made nonattendance at the summer Olympics in Moscow a political action, the Danish Government has muddled through its unrealistic belief that governments do not mix politics with sport. If Denmark was to stay away from the games in Moscow, it would be because our sportsmen did not think it fitting to participate this year--but the government could not have any views in the matter. It could go so far as to provide a service to give the sportsmen orientation on what governments and parliaments in other countries in our circle had to say to their sporting organizations on the political unsuitability and danger of going to Moscow this year, but it would not have any advice of its own to add.

Not unless it had to. Only if the American no and the Norwegian no and German no were followed by so many others, that it was starting to get embarrassing, would it be able to find an attitude and offer an opinion. Only if the EEC foreign ministers could jointly agree on a boycott, would the Danish foreign minister be able to reach agreement with himself and his sports minister and pass on a request to the Danish Olympic Committee.

Who does the government really think that it is fooling? Does it think that, as the last government to say no to Moscow, it would win the American Government's eternal gratitude as the brave little ally, which conquered its idealistic scruples at the eleventh hour and showed its solidarity? Or does it think that the Russian Government would recognize the Danish no to be so hesitant and reluctant that it would count as a tiny yes in Danish-Soviet relations? Or does it really think that it can dodge its way forward along the halfway line to a little indulgence from both sides? If it does, it is fooling nobody but itself.

OLOF PALME INTERVIEWED ON RESULTS OF TEHRAN VISIT

LD271920 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1600 GMT 27 May 80

[Text] Olof Palme, chairman of the Social Democratic Party, is now back from his trip to Iran made together with two other socialist leaders--Kreisky and Gonzalez--over the Whitsun holidays. This afternoon there was a press conference at which Palme described the meeting with Iranian leaders. A decision to free the American hostages must be left to the Iranians themselves; sanctions and acts of violence will only delay a solution, Olof Palme said. He also reiterated that the purpose of the trip was only to gather information. Our reporter attended the press conference: [Begin recording] [brief Palme statement indistinct]

[Question] The three social democrat leaders tried through their trip to break Iran's isolation and understand the revolution, and this is why they were able to meet such eminent persons. But did they achieve anything concrete, Olof Palme?

[Answer] We achieved contacts which did not exist earlier. This is the first visit of this kind. It was the first time that anyone was able to meet all the political sides in Iranian society. Whether this will be of significance for the future, (?we) of course do not know. It would be nice if it were.

[Question] Could this gradually lead to freeing the hostages?

[Answer] Whether we can make a contribution to this process that would lead to the solution of the question, today it is much too early to say.

[Question] In which ways can it have been a contribution, then?

[Answer] Well, through opening ways of contacts, to show that there is positive interest in Iran and its revolution in the rest of the world, that we do not strive to isolate Iran. That there is a desire to respect their independence [words indistinct].

[Question] What about those who took part in this visit? Have you gained anything from it?

[Answer] No, [word indistinct] those who went [word indistinct] partly personal interest and partly the fact that two of us represent nonaligned countries, which have similar problems in defending their independence, and the third--two of them in fact--have fought against dictatorship [passage indistinct].

Mr Palme, Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and Spanish Socialist chief Felipe Gonzalez discussed the hostages issue with top Iranian religious and political leaders during their 24-hour visit.

The Swedish socialist said that he was convinced that the process of securing the hostages' release was well under way and should succeed, if "force is not used."

Mr Palme said contacts should be kept up with Iranian leaders and warned that isolating Tehran could retard the freeing of the hostages. He also said that he did not believe economic sanctions against Iran would work.

"The Iranian leaders do not want their country to be isolated," he said. Mr Palme added that the Iranians were determined to preserve their country's independence of the East and the West.

According to Mr Palme, the three-man Socialist International delegation did not go to Iran as mediators. "Our aim was not to propose concrete solutions," he said, "but to inform ourselves and to make contact with Iranian leaders."

AKEL RESOLUTION CENSURES KIPRIANOU'S 'IMPERIALIST' POLICIES

NC251140 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 25 May 80 pp 1, 6

[Text of resolution adopted by the AKEL Central Committee and Central Control Committee at a plenum held in Nicosia on 20 May 1980]

[Text] The plenum of the AKEL Central Committee and of the Central Control Committee, which met in Nicosia on 20 May 1980, having discussed a motion by the Politburo on "the developments of the Cyprus problem after the fourth regular plenum and our duties," and bearing in mind an introductory address by Secretary General E. Papaioannou, adopted the following resolution:

1. UN Secretary General Waldheim's serious and persistent efforts to ensure the resumption of the intercommunal talks in a meaningful, constructive and sustained manner have been dominating Cyprus' political developments during the period since the fourth ordinary plenum of the Central Committee and Central Control Committee, which was held on 25 January 1980.

Acting on the bases of the Security Council and General Assembly mandates, the UN secretary general has submitted various proposals to both sides in an attempt to reach a common ground for resuming the intercommunal talks. Unfortunately, all of these efforts have failed thus far, the result being a continuation of the deadlock and stalemate in the Cyprus issue, with all the dangerous consequences encompassed in such a state of affairs.

2. The responsibility for the failure of the UN secretary general's efforts and the continuing deadlock lies heavily upon:

(a) Imperialism, particularly the U.S. ruling circles and NATO. U.S. imperialism and NATO have their own firm objectives in Cyprus and the area in general: These circles are actually interested in solving the Cyprus problem in a way that would serve their own goals, which is why they are undermining the method of the inter-Cypriot talks. They want to derail the Cyprus issue from the UN framework. They find ways of torpedoing every attempt for a peaceful, just, mutually acceptable and viable solution to the Cyprus problem. They are pursuing a Cyprus problem through Camp David-type talks.

(b) The Ankara government in particular and the chauvinistic circles of Turkey in general. These circles, which enjoy encouragement from the imperialist element, aim at consolidating, stabilizing and legalizing the faits accomplis caused by the invasion and occupation. They are also using the Cyprus issue to distract the attention of the Turkish masses from the explosive economic, social and political crisis that is scourging the country. This is why they maintain such a policy, which is not conducive to resuming or conducting substantive and constructive talks.

(c) The reactionary leaders of the Turkish Cypriot community and the chauvinistic and extremist circles of TMT [Turkish Resistance Organization] and Denktas' National Unity Party. The reactionary Turkish Cypriot leaders and those circles supporting them are following the Ankara-dictated policy, which serves their interests as well as the more general interests of imperialism and of Ankara's leading military-political chauvinistic circles. The direct objective of the Turkish Cypriot leadership is the declaration of a separate Turkish Cypriot independent state.

(d) The president of the republic and his government. Although the responsibility of the president and his government cannot be equated with that of imperialism, the Turkish Government and the Turkish Cypriot leadership, it should nevertheless be stressed that the president and his government are not free of responsibility for the failure of the UN secretary general's efforts.

(e) Those political and other circles that do not miss any opportunity to declare nationalistic, extremist slogans, behave ironically, cultivate mistrust for the talks and even oppose them. The tactics of these circles shake the confidence of the democratic and Turkish Cypriot masses in the intentions and sincerity of the Greek Cypriot side and actually strengthen the policy of the reactionary Turkish Cypriot leadership, the Turkish Government and the U.S.-NATOite imperialists.

The plenum of the AKEL Central Committee and Central Control Committee believes that, within the framework of the UN secretary general's efforts that date back to last August, there have been real possibilities for resuming the intercommunal talks.

Unfortunately, unsuitable handling, lack of courage and indecision on the part of the president of the republic as well as various other expediencies resulted in nonutilization of the possibilities for resuming the intercommunal talks.

There was a real possibility for resuming the intercommunal talks last October when, as stated in Dr Waldheim's 6 December 1979 report to the Security Council, "Mr Denktas informed my special representative on 1 October of his acceptance of these proposals (which the secretary general's representative submitted on 23 August) as a basis for resuming the intercommunal talks." (Ref KHARAVYI 7 December 1979)

This opportunity was rejected by President Kiprianou, whose reaction, as stated in the same report, "was critical of the substance and particularly the time when the Turkish side adopted this position."

The resumption of the intercommunal talks was also possible if our side had handled in a better way the various proposals and formulas submitted by the UN secretary general in February, March and April 1980.

3. While the deadlock in the Cyprus issue continues--a fact that creates a serious danger for an anomaly and the imposition of unacceptable solution--the unity of the patriotic democratic forces keeps on weakening even further and the internal front continues to present wide unbridgeable gaps. As has been established by the fourth ordinary plenum of the Central Committee and the Central Control Committee, the cracks in the internal front and the deterioration of unity among the patriotic democratic forces are basically due to the radical disagreement over the line and tactics to be followed in the struggle for salvation and vindication and for a peaceful, just, mutually acceptable and viable solution of the Cyprus problem.

4. Our party--with full sense of its responsibilities toward the people, their struggle and the future of Cyprus and in its desire to contribute both toward promoting a Cyprus solution based upon the charted line and tactics and toward restoring and strengthening the internal front--has repeatedly submitted its concrete views on these matters in personal contacts and meetings with the president and in letters and memoranda to him. In its latest memorandum to the president, dated 3 March 1980, our party outlined in detail and with all sincerity and clarity its views on all aspects of the Cyprus issue, the points of line and tactics in the struggle, the role which the president should play for unity and also its views on several other burning issues on our internal front.

The plenum regrets having to establish that the president failed to make the correct appraisal of, and response to, the positions and suggestions of AKEL and particularly of the memorandum by the party Central Committee. His letter to the Central Committee, dated 19 April 1980, avoids answering the serious issues that we raised.

5. The party Central Committee is concerned over the fact that the situation on the internal front has deteriorated even further. The breaches have become even wider. The opposition of the masses to the government and the president has acquired broad dimensions because of actions and omissions by the government over a series of burning problems which are of great interest to and deeply touch the peoples.

A series of actions and decisions, mistakes and omissions by the government and the president personally creates a truly explosive situation, causes feelings of disappointment and indignation among the people with the result that the personal reputation of the president and that of his government have been greatly damaged.

Such decisions and actions are:

a. The government decision to close the issue of the purge with the dismissal of 61 persons from the civil and education services, the army and the police granting them fat "lump sum" compensations and full pension.

b. The latest promotions in the police force, where through a general assessment, coupists have been promoted at the expense of democratic and dedicated policemen.

c. The failure of the president and the government to implement the president's declaration on stamping out unlawfulness and on the illegal possession of arms by various subversive and other groups.

d. The imposition of antipopular taxation.

e. The failure of the authorities to take drastic measures from the beginning in cleansing the cooperative movement.

f. The manner in which the government and the president are handling the very serious issue of rapprochement between Greek and Turkish Cypriots. In this issue, the president and the government confine themselves only to declarations without proceeding with the adoption of any measure to realize their declarations.

6. The plenum establishes that, during the course of this entire period, our party has in every respect maintained a responsible attitude toward the president of the republic.

Fully aware of its responsibilities toward the people and their future, placing the more general interest of the struggle for salvation and vindication above narrow party and class interests and guided by the congress decision on our attitude toward the president of the republic and his government, our party has exerted every effort to create all the prerequisites that would allow not only the continuation of an honest cooperation, but also the strengthening of unity among the patriotic democratic forces.

Within the framework of this policy our party has approved of, and rendered its support to, every positive action or statement made by the president of the republic in the interest of the people and our liberation, antioccupation and anti-imperialist struggle. On the other hand, our party has on many occasions criticized both "privately" and openly, sometimes strongly but always constructively, the government and the president for their actions or omissions which clashed with the interests of the people and the struggle for a peaceful, just, mutually acceptable and viable solution to the Cyprus problem. For a long time our party has made it clear to the president that it will not accept any deviation from the line and tactics of the struggle charted by the national-ministerial council, the Makarios line and tactics. [paragraph continues]

It has also warned that in such an event it would not hesitate to dissociate its position because it would not like to be co-responsible for a course that only has tribulations in store for the Cypriot people.

7. The plenum establishes that despite our party's persistent efforts and warnings, the president of the republic has unfortunately not shown the required adherence to the charted line and tactics. While he gives verbal assurances that he agrees with the line and tactics, he has not followed up these assurances with deeds. In addition, he is not following the line and tactics with any consistency. It is the assessment of the plenum that the president of the republic has failed to respond to the requirements of the Cypriot people's struggle and has failed to play a leading role in uniting and rallying the patriotic, democratic and anti-imperialist forces. At crucial times, when it was essential to show resoluteness and a constructive approach to open the road to the intercommunal talks, the president showed reluctance and indecision and failed to handle things in an appropriate manner that would help the resumption of the talks. For all these reasons, we regret to say that it becomes imperative for AKEL to dissociate itself from responsibilities.

8. Exploiting the president's weaknesses, DISI [Democratic Rally Party] has embarked on a campaign to undermine and destabilize the situation and projects itself as the party which, with the help of the West, can solve the Cyprus problem. The much advertised meetings between DISI leader [Kliridhis] and the deputy leader of the National Unity Party, Mr Cagatay, as well as Kliridhis' visit to the occupied areas have undoubtedly been designed and facilitated with the aim of projecting DISI and its leader as the saviors of Cyprus. However, the wide masses of the Cypriot people cannot have any trust in DISI and its leader because it is the party that offers political shelter to coupists, that opposes the purge and that generally militates against the interests of the wide masses. Moreover, its doctrine that only the West can find a solution to the Cyprus problem both shows that its policy is identical with the aims and pursuits of U.S.-NATOite imperialism and converts DISI into a bridgehead of imperialism.

9. The critical period which the Cyprus issue is passing through and the need to overcome the deadlock and stalemate have brought about the following serious duties for our party and the people's patriotic democratic forces:

(a) Constant and persistent projection of the line and tactics approved by the national-ministerial council and resolute rejection of all views or actions--whatever their source --that clash with this line and these tactics.

(b) Firm insistence on a Cyprus solution based on the Makarios-Denktas and Kiprianou-Denktas agreements as well as on the relevant UN resolutions. A resolute defense of these agreements against any distortion or undermining while fighting against any inclination toward adventurous actions and unrealistic and utopian solutions of the Cyprus problem. Steadfast insistence on the line for an independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus.

(c) We must promote the need for unity and exert concrete and persistent efforts to forge, strengthen and rally the people's patriotic democratic forces on the basis of the national-ministerial council line and tactics as a minimum joint program in the common struggle for a peaceful, just, mutually acceptable and viable solution to the Cyprus problem--a solution that would not serve the interests of the U.S.-NATOite imperialism in any way but rather those of the Cypriot people as a whole and of the anti-imperialist struggle in general.

(d) While exerting every effort to unite and rally the patriotic democratic forces, we should simultaneously and determinedly confront and uncover the pro-NATO policies and propaganda, the propaganda for double enosis as well as demagogy and adventurism whatever their source.

(e) In the struggle for the salvation of Cyprus, we must firmly insist on and promote step by step the rapprochement, cooperation and joint struggle with our Turkish Cypriot compatriots who desire a Cyprus solution based on an independent, sovereign, territorially integral, nonaligned, biregional and federal Cyprus that is free of foreign troops and bases, and that is peaceful and prosperous for all its inhabitants--Greek, Turks, Armenians, Maronites and Latins.

(f) Making a correct calculation of the dangers of adventurous acts and the creation of unrest and anomaly by our people's imperialist enemies and their stooges, we must maximally increase our vigilance to foil any dark designs to subject Cyprus to U.S. NATOite imperialism by imposing unacceptable solutions to the Cyprus problem.

Our party--faithful to the line and tactics charted by the national-ministerial council, and firmly adhering to the intercommunal talks as the most appropriate method in the present circumstances--calls upon the patriotic democratic forces to systematically and resolutely play their role for unity and against strife in the common struggle for salvation and vindication. Our party is ready and extends a hand of cooperation to all the patriotic democratic forces for the success of such a struggle.

Decision 'Came From Moscow'

NC260750 Nicosia TO THARROS in Greek 26 May 80 p 1

[Text] According to our authoritative information, President Kiprianou's trip to Moscow --if it ever were to materialize--has been completely cancelled following AKEL's decision to remove its confidence in the president. According to our same authoritative information, the Soviet Government will send a letter to President Kiprianou in a few days in which it will note that the standing invitation for his trip to Moscow is no longer valid. Meanwhile, we have learned that well-informed circles close to AKEL report that the decision to remove the party's confidence in Mr Kiprianou came from Moscow. We are informed that the reason for this was Moscow's displeasure with the policy that Kiprianou was following toward the Soviet Union.

Kiprianou: No Reason To Resign

NC260657 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 26 May 80 p 8

[Correspondent's dispatch]

[Text] London, 25 May--During his contacts today with Cypriot personalities in London, President Kipri nou referred to AKEL's recent resolution and emphatically stressed that there was no reason for him to resign.

He said: "I will indefatigably exert every possible effort so that the struggle of the Cypriot people will succeed. On my return to Cyprus tomorrow, Monday, my first concern will be the reshuffle of the government."

Mr Kiprianou also referred to the case of Mr Sofianos, adding that he would be the first "to be sacked." He concluded: "The reason that he has not yet been sacked is that I was pressured by AKEL."

Relationship to Turkey, U.S. Plans

NC261452 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 26 May 80 p 1

[Editorial: "The People Must Speak"]

[Text] The AKEL charges against the president and his government--about indecisiveness, weakness, mistakes, omissions--are obvious to all those living in this country.

The reference [in the AKEL resolution]--to the various domestic problems--the economic problem, the question of the cooperative movement and the purge--is only marginal.

A significant question that determines the AKEL stand is that of the talks. AKEL holds Ankara, imperialism and Denktas responsible for their long interruption but it also bring charges--even heavier ones--against the Cyprus side and it acquits Mr Waldheim.

Such a stand is a great gift to the United States because it relieves Mr Waldheim of all responsibility since he has been repeatedly caught acting on behalf of the United States.

Now the interventions through Waldheim will be further facilitated. He has been granted a certificate by AKEL to the effect that it would not be wrong for him to promote the American plan.

Waldheim holds a certificate to the effect that his adoption of the Denktas and Ankara views is an objective stand and therefore we must accept them without discussion.

For example, when Waldheim says that in his view the two sides agree on the question of bizonality, we must consent, despite the fact that Denktas' interpretation of bizonality provides for an actually separate state, for the actual partitioning of Cyprus, for the legalization of occupation.

When Waldheim tells us that the two sides agree on the issues of security for the Turkish Cypriots, we must outbid him. That is, now with the presence of the Turkish occupation army it is the Turkish Cypriots who are in danger. This is what Waldheim wants to tells us, and AKEL agrees with him. The threats about the perpetuation of occupation, the prevention of the refugees' return to their homes, the issue of missing persons, all this is again a question of security for the Turkish Cypriots.

But in such a case what is occupation? What is the question of security for the Greek Cypriots?

The AKEL positions not only cover up the contradictions and the awkward positions of the UN Secretary General but also serve as a very strong argument for the United States, Ankara and Denktas.

The AKEL positions vindicate the argument that both sides are to be blamed for the Cyprus deadlock, are equally responsible for the Cyprus tragedy and are equally responsible for the continuation of occupation.

But in such a case our side--not Ankara, not the Turkish occupation troops--must make further concessions in addition to the ones we made in the past.

This is not a policy that appears for the first time; it has been favored in the past by Waldheim, the United States, Ankara, Denktas and Kliridhis but now it finds supporters on our side, provides them with arguments and makes our struggle more difficult.

Such an approach justifies the American and Turkish allegations that the Cyprus problem is not a question of invasion and occupation but an intercommunal problem. But this view serves to remove the Cyprus problem from the international field and to place it within the Western framework.

AKEL blames the Greek Cypriot side for the deadlock and the stalemate in the intercommunal talks. Does AKEL sincerely believe that there is a hope for progress and that we push it aside? But if it does not believe in such a thing, why does it seek a dialogue for the sake of dialogue? By doing so it solely serves Turkey and the U.S. plans.

The AKEL stand creates a number of practical problems for specific issues. Now everyone must speak and everyone must take a stand. Things are very grave and finally the people must be asked to pass their final verdict.

Naturally, the other questions--like that of the cooperative movement--must not be set aside, because such an action would be a great gift to all those who want to conceal scandals or illegal actions.

ATAKOL RETURNS FROM ISLAMIC CONFERENCE IN ISLAMABAD

RALLIS REPEATS CALL FOR 'DIALOGUE' IN RESPONSE TO DEMIREL

AT271230 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1120 GMT 27 May 80

[Text] Replying to yesterday's interview with Turkish Prime Minister Demirel, Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis made the following statement:

I wish that Demirel had read with more attention and good will not only my policy statement but also the interjections made during the debate in the chamber of deputies both by myself as well as by the foreign minister. If he had paid more attention he would have concluded that we clearly and unreservedly declared our devotion to the peaceful processes of dialogue on the basis of international law because we believe that the use of force must be rejected. I greatly fear, however, that we have different views on what negotiations mean. The Turkish prime minister does not agree with our views on the islands, on air-space and so forth and he states that this excludes the course of negotiations. If we had agreed with his views in advance, then naturally dialogue would have been unnecessary. For us dialogue means an honest, logical attempt made with good will toward discovery of common ground in the differences between the two countries. When this is proven impossible then a peaceful international process should be sought which would lead to a solution in accordance to international law and international practice. If the Turkish Government shares this view it will find us willing to jointly proceed along this course.

Comments on Other International Issues

AT271823 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1800 GMT 27 May 80

[Text] In his press conference with representatives of the foreign press, press agencies and radio and television networks, Prime Minister Rallis stated that Greek-Turkish differences can be solved through dialogue and that if dialogue fails then there is the international process. Clarifying what he had stated in the chamber of deputies on this issue, the prime minister stressed that differences can be solved through international processes and that war is unavoidable only when there is no understanding or when there is some clash.

Replying to another question on the continental shelf, he stressed that its delineation is necessary and he referred to the Greek-Italian agreement as an example.

In reference to the question of our return to NATO's military wing, he said the government insists on the Haig-Davos agreement which guarantees the independence and integrity of the country in addition to the goals of the Alliance. At this point the prime minister added that there is no new formula and that the counterproposal which was submitted 3 months ago, as is well known, was rejected.

On U.S. bases in Greece, Rallis observed that the issue is totally related to the latest U.S.-Turkish defense agreement which the government is now studying.

Answering a question on the Cyprus issue, the prime minister stressed that our appeals to the UN Security Council and General Assembly were logged in our capacity as a guarantor power but that the relevant resolutions are not being implemented.

In conclusion, referring to Balkan cooperation, the prime minister said the policy of the Karamanlis government has had spectacular results and that out relations with Yugoslavia, Romania, and Bulgaria have reached the highest point in their development since 1974.

TO VIMA REPORTS TURKISH VIOLATION OF AIRSPACE

AT241531 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 24 May 80 p 1

[Text] A new provocative act by Turkish military planes was noted yesterday at noon west of Mitilini, this time with the obvious goal of testing the alertness of the Greek air defense system.

At 1400 [1100 GMT] three pairs of Turkish fighter planes of the most modern type entered international airspace west of Mitilini (an area which, like the entire Aegean area, falls under the Greek Flight Information Region) without submitting a flight plan and flying only 150 meters above sea level so that they would not be spotted by Greek radar.

Nevertheless, the Greek military authorities spotted the Turkish planes and immediately Greek fighter planes took off and, after identifying the Turkish planes, forced them to depart.

It is expected that the Greek Government will protest to Ankara today while the new provocative Turkish act raised many questions yesterday in Athens.

The prevailing impression is that, in addition to testing the Greek air defense system (it is well known that radar does not spot flights at a low level), Ankara was trying to check the reaction of the new Greek Government.

In any case, the Greek side believes that this new act constitutes a deliberate provocation but it is unable to explain why the Turks wanted to create a new incident when a debate was being conducted in the Greek chamber on the policy statement of the new government.

This new provocative Turkish act is in addition to a number of violations not only of the Greek Flight Information Region but of the Greek national airspace by Turkish planes, which are intended to actually dispute the Greek 10-mile national airspace.

As is well known, only 15 days ago during the NATO "Dawn Patrol 80" exercises, Turkish planes violated not only the 10-mile limit but also the 6-mile limit of Greek airspace with the result that successive demarches were made by the Greek Government to Ankara.

'SOURCE': POLICY STATEMENT REVEALS INDEPENDENT FOREIGN POLICY

AT251300 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 25 May 80 p 22

[Text] The Allies should know that Greece is not prepared to return to NATO under conditions which would harm its national interests, an authoritative government source warned yesterday when it was asked to comment on Prime Minister G. Rallis' statement, which was made the day before yesterday in the chamber, that "nobody is entitled to take Greek foreign policy for 'granted'."

The source, which is very well informed, explained that this statement by the prime minister constitutes the government's reply to opposition accusations resulting from the principle that "we belong to the West."

Of course "we belong to the West"--the source said--and certainly it is not our intention to change camps and join the Third World or the East bloc, but this does not mean that we do not have an independent foreign policy in every direction. Above all, our foreign policy is determined by our national interests.

This is proven--the authoritative source added--by our stance toward the NATO problem. It proposed unacceptable terms for our return. We did not accept them. Of course we want to return to NATO, but if the conditions are unacceptable we shall not sign the agreement. That is, there has been refusal not acceptance because acceptance would have caused damage to our national interests. Specifically, this instance proves that we "are not tied hand and foot" to the declaration "we belong to the West."

The same source clarified that independence in our foreign policy is followed in every direction, whether to the West, the East or the Third World.

Diplomatic observers commented on the above and expressed the viewpoint that: "The current government, like the previous New Democracy ones, has made the decision to follow an independent foreign policy based on national interest as the only yardstick."

Specifically, however, regarding the outstanding problem of our return to the NATO military wing, the same observers expressed the view that one can comfortably claim that most probably on the NATO problem a new line has been charted. The Greek side is not convinced that NATO cannot overcome Turkey's veto and consequently if NATO wants Greece to return it will do what is necessary to settle this problem.

In confirmation of this viewpoint the same observers recalled the prime minister's statement the day before yesterday in the chamber "that it is now up to NATO to bring about a successful conclusion to the negotiations" for a special relationship with Greece.

I VRADHINI SUPPORTS RALLIS STATEMENT ON NATO, BASES

AT231418 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 23 May 80 pp 1, 2

[From the "Evening" column: "Not Granted"]

[Text] That part of the government's policy statement which received the most attention and which prompted the most comments by political and diplomatic observers was the one which referred to the government's foreign policy. Nobody is entitled to take Greek foreign policy for "granted", Prime Minister G. Rallis stressed.

What is the meaning of this position? The policy statement itself helps provide a true interpretation. As has been observed, foreign policy depends to a great extent on the international conditions. In the international area the perpetual flow of affairs constantly creates new situations and for this reason requires constant adjustments. Thus, the government will constantly adjust its course in accordance with developments and will make the necessary corrections in its course. The only things which should be taken for granted and which will be steady in this case is the government's dedication to serving the long-term national goals of this country's independence, integrity and security.

Perhaps an example would help provide greater clarification. A significant element of Greek defense policy is our country's reliance on the Western security system. For this reason the Greek Government's goal is to establish a relationship with NATO which will allow us first to have control over our national forces and second to completely cover our security in the event of war. This special relationship is favored by both the NATO military leadership and the Alliance's members except for Turkey, which seeks to take advantage of the negotiations to solve to its own benefit issues that existed before Greece's withdrawal from NATO and thus indirectly promote its own aims.

Consequently, a Greek intention to conclude a special relationship with NATO exists. Furthermore, the basis exists, agreed upon with the NATO military leadership and with Alliance members--except for Turkey--on which Greece can negotiate (the well-known agreement or arrangement between Haig and Davos). In any case, Greece's return to the NATO military wing cannot be taken for "granted," because it is up to NATO, even now, to bring about a successful conclusion to the negotiations. A Greek desire for the special relationship is not enough to insure its implementation because it is not a goal to be achieved at all costs.... It is on the basis of the prerequisites that it will be ultimately judged whether the conclusion of the special relationship serves the long-term national interests--the country's security, integrity and independence.

The same things are valid with regard to the conclusion of a new agreement to settle the status of U.S. facilities in Greece. This agreement is linked with the Greek-NATO negotiations and it will be examined within the same framework and under the same perspective. It will also be examined in light of the recent U.S.-Turkish defense agreement and with a yardstick that is based on the need to maintain the existing correlation of forces between Greece and Turkey.

POLICY STATEMENT CITED AS ADMISSION OF TURKISH NATO 'VETO'

AT2416160 Athens ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS in Greek 24 May 80 p 12

[From the "Judgements and Comments" column: "Admission of Failure"]

[Text] The government's policy statement states that, despite the fact that the NATO military leadership and the Alliance's members favor the conclusion of a special relationship with Greece, the relevant efforts collide with the reaction of Turkey--"which seeks to take advantage of the negotiations to solve to its own benefit issues that were unresolved prior to Greece's withdrawal and thus indirectly promote its own aims...." The admission is complete. We have made Turkey a regulator of an important sector of our foreign and defense policy because when the Karamankis government, in which G.I. Rallis and Evangelos Averof participated, decided on our withdrawal from the NATO military wing it did not know or did not take into consideration the fact that we were arming Turkey with a "veto." And it makes one wonder where Karamanlis based his optimism in February 1978 when he publicly assured the people that within 4 months the special status of Greece's relationship with NATO would be settled. Once again we had not taken into consideration the fact that Turkey would blackmail Greece and the Alliance with the "veto" it had secured thanks to our hasty decision.... From whom will the national representatives demand an accounting for this failure in foreign policy? Karamanlis is now president, but his collaborators continue his policy....

AKROPOLIS RAPS PAPANDREOU CRITIQUE OF POLICY STATEMENT

[From the "Laconic" column: "Unproven Claims"]

[Text] If we are to believe Papandreou our country is governed by a government which "sells out" its sovereign rights and wealth to foreigners without gaining anything in return, which has diminished the national sensitivity compared to PASOK which, as is well known, claims the monopoly on patriotism; which insists on representing only some capitalists although the cohesive majority of the Greek people follow and support it; and, finally, which does everything it can to displease those who vote for it. Unfortunately, however, for the PASOK chairman, parliamentary dialogue does not favor him at all because he receives an immediate reply to the things he says and public opinion can draw its conclusions objectively because it is not exposed to his propaganda monologue. This happened the day before yesterday in the chamber. All those who watched the discussion of the government's policy statement had the opportunity to see that Papandreou criticized the government policy with slogans and made a number of arbitrary claims. He did not feel the need to substantiate his statement with figures, numbers and facts. On the contrary, the answers he received from the government were heavily documented, for instance the reply to his basic propaganda myth on which he bases the slogan of "one-sided austerity", that is, his claim that inflation is caused by large industrial enterprises because they constantly increase their profits. From the evidence the government brought forth, it emerged that the profits of 2,944 companies dropped significantly between 1975 and 1978 because of inflation. Specifically they dropped from 6.6 percent to 4.4 percent. It was logical that this would happen since inflation increases the cost of production and leads to the limitation of consumption. Papandreou must bring forth evidence to prove the correctness of his claim, otherwise he is merely being demagogic.

RIZOSPASTIS LAUDS KKE (EXTERIOR) REPLY TO POLICY STATEMENT

[Editorial: "Clear Goals"]

[Text] The debate on the policy statement in the chamber has revealed a lot about the various parties' policies.

In the first place it became apparent that, on the basis of the same bankrupt policy, New Democracy is trying to beautify the situation, limit the continuing reduction of its influence and stabilize its positions. For this reason it utilizes the possibilities which the presidency of the republic can create for it. In the name of a "calm political atmosphere" it seeks to make opposing social and political forces depend on or submit to its policy.

According to the prime minister, the Greek working people are prospering, while according to the minister of coordination, although prospering, they are complaining and everything is at fault! Therefore, let them not struggle to protect the working people's income because in doing so they will disturb the "national consensus" and "calm political atmosphere"!

After all, for a long time the government together with the entire bourgeois press has done everything it could to divert the people's attention from their problems by "talking about the presidency...."

Furthermore, the government uses in a disorienting manner--this became obvious from the debate in the chamber--a tendency which sometimes influences even the forces of the opposition: That is, relating our national issues solely to the Turkish factor or to the relevant settlements on return to the military NATO. This downgrades the imperialist role and sometimes makes it easy for the government to avoid the essential popular and national issues.

With the statement in the chamber by KKE [Exterior] Central Committee Secretary General Comrade Kharilaos Florakis, our party, in a complete comparison with the government's positions, clearly outlined its proposals for the different policy which the country needs.

It made it clear that the KKE is struggling for democratic normality but will not negotiate for it with policy concessions. It demanded recourse to elections through the simple proportional system and, as Comrade Florakis stressed, even if the government ultimately retains the plunderous electoral law, the people will find a way to foil the plunder of the progressive forces' votes.

The working people, the fighters of the left and of progress, with their vote for the KKE will break the barriers of discrimination and the electoral law and will decisively strengthen the KKE so that it may become the guarantor of democratic cooperation and change.

In view of international and internal developments and prospects, it is imperative to strengthen the KKE role in struggles and in political life. This is increasingly understood by the working people, the democrats and the patriots of our country.

PAPANDREOU STATES HOPES FOR GREECE AFTER NATIONAL ELECTIONS

AT271500 Athens TA NEA in Greece 27 May 80 pp 1,3

[First in a series of an unspecified number of reports on an exclusive interview granted by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou to TA NEA correspondent N. Antonopoulos: "Papandreou Talks on the Eve of His Visits to Europe: Europe Is 'Escaping' From U.S. Control"]

[Excerpt] The world stage is changing. The ability of the United States to intervene in the internal affairs of other countries is decreasing while Western Europe is escaping from American control to an increasing degree and follows its own separate foreign policy.

These conclusions were reached by the leader of the majority opposition party and PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou in an exclusive as well as important interview to TA NEA in which he spoke on his problems today, prospects of the future, and his goals and aims in the new phase of our political life which will end with the new elections.

[Papandreou] After these elections the country will enter a course "during which the monocracy of the right will come to an end." The chairman of PASOK stressed with optimism the "good omens opening up for the country," adding: "In every instance I believe that very soon the opportunity will be provided to the democratic and progressive forces to open up the horizons for a new course for the country."

A. Papandreou attributes particular significance to international developments as they are evolving today based on the direct dangers which threaten world peace.

While he expresses his optimism that in the end humanity will avoid "the great clash" he stresses the need for large-scale initiatives by Europe for the purpose of salvaging detente.

These positions of A. Papandreou at the same time gain special significance at this moment when his departure is imminent--early next week--for Italy where he will have important talks with the Chairman of the Italian Socialist Party Ricardo Lombardi and Secretary General Bettino Craxi; and with Secretary General of the Italian Communist Party Enrico Berlinguer, whom he had the opportunity to meet for the first time during Tito's funeral in Belgrade.

After his visit to Italy, Papandreou will visit--the date has not yet been fixed--Spain for talks with the leaders of the Spanish Socialist and Communist parties. European socialist leaders Mitterrand of France, Craxi of Italy, Gonzalez of Spain and Soares of Portugal have also extended an open invitation to Papandreou to attend a joint meeting to examine problems pertaining to European security.

After the 3-day "storm in the chamber of deputies" the 3-day holiday weekend would have been an opportunity which a politician could exploit for some relaxation--particularly if this politician is Andreas Papandreou who dominated the 3-day debate with his presence. It would naturally have been hard for him to devote this period of relaxation to a "marathon interview" as the following interview developed. It was an interview which lasted many hours over 2 days at Castri [Papandreou's home] without preannounced questions and "off the record" comments.

This was an open, honest discussion which naturally became revealing as Professor Papandreou yielded the role of the political leader and, in turn, assumed the position of a severe analyst or a social visionary.

This was a discussion which started with a personal "flashback" to 20 years ago when economics Professor Andreas Papandreou returned to Greece without thinking that one day he would be next door to authority, at a time when he judged things under strictly scientific criteria. Today this scientific knowledge, coupled with political experience, gives a hopeful message: Despite the dangers which exist today, perhaps the most dangerous post-war period, humanity will in the end avoid the large--and fatal--clash.

In the interim, where the analysis of the entire 20-year period illuminates today's political and social developments, there is once again a plentiful optimism--or rather the certainty--that in the end "the peoples' forces will open up the horizons for a new course for the country." This is a conviction that is based upon a pure, realistic, scientific analysis of today's political situation and the contradictions inherent in the continual and daily political clash:

"The people know it, the people have already acquired the maturity to know that we will not make miracles. We do, however, have the means and the method to overcome all of today's dead ends. We will overcome them...."

With assurance Papandreou points the way it will be done: "with firm steps but also with wisdom, which will most of all rely upon the people themselves with whom we will have a broad dialogue on every measure we will adopt as a government so that there may be agreement and acceptance by the people."

There is no doubt that in Papandreou's thinking today there is a maturity--something which became self evident in his last appearance in the chamber of deputies but which is also confirmed during this interview in one sentence which may also condense his political philosophy:

"You cannot proceed any faster than what the people want."

NAP DEPUTY LEADER SAZAK KILLED IN ANKARA

Reaction From Leaders

[Summary] Following the killing of Gun Sazak, a Nationalist Action Party [NAP] deputy leader and former minister, all access to Ankara, the capital, was put under the surveillance of security forces and operations were undertaken for the apprehension of the assailants.

In a statement to newsmen in Ankara, State Minister and Acting Interior Minister Orhan Eren expressed his regret over the incident and said "security forces have important leads that will allow the apprehension of the culprits. I am convinced that we shall succeed. All security forces in Turkey will remain in a state of alert until the assailants are caught. I call on citizens to keep calm, to not be provoked, and to cooperate with the security forces."

"In a news conference in Istanbul, NAP leader Alpaslan Turkes said that Sazak was murdered by those plotting for internal strife in the country. He added that this plot could only be foiled through a coolheaded, patient and calm stand. Turkes said that as in the past the struggle would be waged within the framework of the law and regulations."

Acting President Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil, Senate Deputy President Mehmet Unaldi, National Assembly President Cahit Karakas as well as Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel, RPP leader Bulent Ecevit and National Salvation Party leader Erbakan deplored the despicable killing of the NAP deputy leader and expressed their condolences.

DEMIREL CONCEDES ACTING PRESIDENT SHOULD NOT APPOINT SENATORS

[Text] Pointing out that the authority of Acting President Caglayangil to appoint new senators to replace the five senators from the Presidential Quota Group whose terms have ended was questioned, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that since this issue has become the subject of dispute the acting president should not appoint these senators. Demirel was speaking at a news conference held at the Office of the Prime Minister today to report on the performance of the government during the 6 months it has been in power.

Replying to a question by a journalist, Demirel said that he believed that the acting president had all the authority of an elected president. He recalled that in 1966, then Acting President Ibrahim Sevki Atasagun appointed Cevdat Sunay as senator from the Presidential Quota Group. Pointing out that later Sunay was elected president by the Assembly and served in this post for 7 years, Demirel said: If there is a question about the authority of the acting president to appoint senators from the Presidential Quota Group, and if there are those who are afraid or concerned about such an action, I would first consider this as a lack of respect for the post being filled by Caglayangil. I regret that the authority of the acting president to elect five new senators has become the subject of a dispute. Since this has happened it is only natural that, though the final decision on this subject lies with Acting President Caglayangil, it is my view as the prime minister and the Justice Party leader that Caglayangil should avoid appointing these five senators.

DEMIREL DISCUSSES CURRENT ECONOMIC PROBLEMS WITH PRESS

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel presented information on government activities at a news conference in Ankara today. Pointing out that the authority of Acting President Caglayangil to appoint new senators to replace the five senators from the Presidential Quota Group whose terms will end was questioned. Demirel said: Since this issue has become a subject of argument, honorable Caglayangil should not appoint these five senators.

Demirel also recalled the word "war" was used by the new Greek Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis when he was expressing his views on Turkish-Greek relations and said that this is very unfortunate. The news conference, held with the aim of giving information on the government's activities during the past 6 months, began at the Office of the Prime Minister at 1030. Various ministers and parliamentarians also participated in the news conference attended by some 100 foreign and local journalists. During the first part of the news conference, Demirel explained the conditions in the country in November 1979.

Demirel said that the problems existing 6 months ago have been surmounted and that Turkey has the money to meet its needs in 1980. Noting that the stability measures taken on 24 January 1980 were favorably received by OECD countries and that these countries undertook to extend loans worth $1,161 million to Turkey, Demirel recalled that the World Bank extended a loan of $600 million, the Saudi Government $250 million and the IMF $1.6 billion. He added that OECD countries agreed to postpone the payment of debts and their interest due in 1980. Demirel said: The Central Bank, which had to be locked in November 1979, has now reopened. We have made a [foreign currency] transfer of over a billion dollars--excluding transfers for oil--in 1980. Demirel said that Turkey paid some $1.5 billion for oil in 1980 and thus reactivated its tractors, plowed its fields and resumed production in its factories. He noted that refineries have been working at an 85 percent capacity for the past 5 months. Noting that the amount of refined oil being imported to Turkey has decreased, Demirel said that Turkey has now become a gasoline exporting country.

Demirel said: If our refineries continue to produce at the current capacity we will produce more gasoline than we need. We currently have a surplus of some 100,000 tons of gasoline. An agreement will be signed on 28 May regarding the export of this surplus gasoline. We will earn some $35 million from this export. The May 1979 Turkey with gasoline lines has been transformed into a gasoline exporting country in May 1980. Demirel added that Turkey was entering June with a stock of 500,000 tons of crude oil, 200,000 tons of mazut and 400,000 tons of fuel oil. He said: We have no place to store gasoline. There will be no oil shortage in the country as long as we remain in power.

Demirel then cited information on work which is being carried out to meet Turkey's defense requirements. Noting that Turkey needed $800 million annually to keep its defense power at the desired level, Demirel said that the United States extended $250 million of the required amount. Demirel added that the FRG agreed to extend military aid of DM600 million.

OFFICIALS CONTINUE DISCUSSIONS ON CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Demirel Comments on Contacts

TA242046 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 24 May 80

[Text] After he met with National Salvation Party leader Necmettin Erbakan and Nationalist Action Party leader Alpaslan Turkes on the issue of the proposed constitutional amendment regarding the presidential elections, Prime Minister and Justice Party leader Suleyman Demirel replied to questions by journalists. Demirel said that he told Erbakan that the best way to democratically elect a president was to call on the nation and that Erbakan's view that the candidate that received the most--and not the majority--of votes in the parliament should be elected president was very risky and might yield an unpredictable result. Demirel said that Turkes had expressed his support for the nation electing the president.

Demirel continued: This is a search. The aim is to consult and to present our solution to the problem and to listen to the views of other parties and groups in the parliament. It is a struggle in a bid to find a solution. The parliament must be saved from being the subject of various accusations and threats. There is no point in blaming the parliament and the democratic system if no results are achieved. Demirel added that he would continue to support the motto that, whatever the nation decides, it decides best.

Demirel will meet with officials of the Senate Presidential Quota and National Unity groups on Monday on the subject of the election of the president.

Ecevit Defense of 1961 Constitution

TA261756 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 26 May 80

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has said that considering the 1961 Constitution as a reactionary constitution is as wrong as opposing it emotionally as a result of related suffering.

In a message he issued on the occasion of 27 May Freedom and Constitution Day, Ecevit pointed out that the 1961 Constitution was not opposed to any person, party or class. He said: On the contrary, this Constitution is based on an objective assessment which holds the deficiencies of the rules and institutions that regulate the functioning of the state and the system responsible for the sufferings between 1950 and 1960 and notpersons and governments. However, those who are nervous about the large dimensions this Constitution has added to our democracy, to liberties, to social and political rights or in clearer terms, about the power it has given to the people, have always tried to instigate emotional reactions in order to create public opinion against this Constitution.

Ecevit pointed out that those who were trying to completely change the Constitution and to restrict democracy had attempted efforts, especially when they were in power, to prove that Turkey could not be governed by the democratic freedoms this Constitution ensures.

Ecevit stressed that the economic model the government was trying to implement in Turkey for the past few months envisaged the concentration of economic and political power in a few hands through capital accumulation at the expense of the crushing, the exploitation and the impoverishment of the people. He added: This economic model is completely incompatible with the social rights and planned development guaranteed by the 1961 Constitution. In this respect it is natural that the timing of this anachronistic economic model of exploitation coincides with the plots to radically change the Constitution. However, it is impossible to make the Turkish people, who are so conscious of their liberties and rights, agree to compromise them.

GOVERNMENT AUTHORIZES OFFICIALS, OTHERS TO CARRY ARMS

[Excerpts] In a statement at the end of the Council of Ministers meeting today, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel announced that the government decided to expand the scope of the regulations on the carrying of weapons. The decision was made upon the proposal of the Interior Ministry. Demirel said that, according to the amended regulations, headquarters and provincial administrators of political parties represented in parliament will be allowed to carry weapons. Demirel said registered lawyers, retired officers and noncommissioned officers, notaries and retired judges and prosecutors will as of now be able to carry weapons, and that governors and district governors will be authorized to issue permits for the weapons.

In reply to a question by a journalist, who recalled RPP leader Bulent Ecevit's remarks about the threats of fascism and Nazism and asked the prime minister for his views on the subject, Demirel said that the primary threat to Turkey is communism. Pointing out that it is necessary to stifle this nearest threat, Demirel continued: No one should misunderstand. We are loyal to the Turkish Republic. When we say the threat is communism, we do not wish to protect or underestimate other threats. We are mentioning the existing threat. Demirel added that no one can say that the RPP party protects--ideologically or otherwise--other threats to Turkey. He said his party is the opponent of Turkey's enemies.

OPEC FINANCE MINISTERS MEET IN VIENNA

Aid Fund Capital Expanded

AU281518 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 28 May 80 p 8

[Summary] Yesterday's meeting of the 13 OPEC finance ministers at Vienna's Hofburg Palace dealt with loans for poor developing countries, but it is hardly doubted that the oil price avalanche launched by Saudi Arabia was also discussed, at least between the official talks. In Vienna the finance ministers sought agreement on the financial expansion of the OPEC aid fund for developing countries that was set up in Vienna in 1976. Since that time, it has gradually been expanded to $2.4 billion. Last December, in Caracas, the oil ministers suggested that the funds capital be raised to $4 billion.

Saudi Price Increase Rumored

AU281520 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 28 May 80 p 6

[Excerpt] On Tuesday 27 May the OPEC finance ministers met for talks about the OPEC aid fund. According to oil experts, Saudi Arabia might announce a new and drastic oil price increase in Algeria on 9 June. It might amount to $5 or even more. The reason: Riyadh has realized the complete failure of its efforts to bring about a return to uniform oil prices, and therefore it can no longer continue its policy of relatively low prices combined with excess production, but will have to capitulate to the "hawks" of the oil price cartel.

WEST EUROPEAN COMMUNIST PARTIES TO MEET IN BRUSSELS

[Text] The Belgian Communist Party has confirmed the information published by the Swedish Communist paper NY DAG according to which invitations have been issued to a meeting this fall, in Brussels, of the Danish, West German, Spanish, Italian, French, and Belgian communist parties. INTERNATIONAL FORUM ON DETENTE, DISARMAMENT OPENS

AU281258 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 28 May 80 p 4

[Unattributed report: "Dialogue on Problems of Disarmament and Detente"]

[Text] Vienna--Topical tasks of preserving and strengthening peace are in the focus of attention of the international forum "Dialogue on Problems of Disarmament and Detente" that opened in Vienna on Monday [26 May].

The agenda of the Vienna meeting contains the following items: development of the process of detente and disarmament, measures to strengthen confidence between states and ways of reducing armament, the need for ratifying the SALT II treaty and for proceeding to the SALT III negotiations, the danger to peace in Europe that has developed in connection with the deployment of new U.S. medium-range nuclear missiles on the continent, and measures for insuring the success of the Vienna negotiations on the mutual reduction of armed forces and arms in Central Europe and the forthcoming Madrid meeting, in the interest of disarmament and detente on the European Continent.

The forum was addressed by H. Stanka, vice chairman of the Austrian Coordination Committee for Relations With Peace-Loving Forces, by Romesh Chandra, chairman of the World Peace Council and of the International Forum for Relations Between Peace-Loving Forces, by the U.S delegate Stolberg, and others.

In his speech USSR chief delegate Afanasyev, USSR Supreme Soviet deputy, pointed out that the present international situation remains tense because of the adventurist actions of the U.S. Government. There is a concrete danger of a return to the policy of the cold war. At the same time, he continued, there a number of promising factors: Very recently there was a summit meeting between Leonid Brezhnev and Giscard d'Estaing in Warsaw, as well as meetings of the USSR, U.S., French and British foreign ministers in Vienna.

Historical experience shows, he said, that such meetings and contacts serve the cause of peace and cooperation, that they promote the deepening of mutual understanding and give hope for the continuation of the East-West dialogue.

SED's Feist Address

AU281259 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 27 May 80 p 5

[ADN dispatch: "Worldwide Dialogue in Vienna to Help Secure Peace"]

[Summary] Vienna--A worldwide dialogue for disarmament and detente was opened in Vienna on 26 May. The 3-day meeting is attended by about 100 parliamentary deputies and representatives of 63 political parties with different political affiliations, and of nonstate organizations from 39 countries. The GDR is represented by SED Central Committee member Manfred Feist, Peace Council Chairman Prof Dr Guenther Drefahl, and CDU People's Chamber Deputy Christine Wieynk.

"Speaking on behalf of the GDR delegation, Manfred Feist dealt with the delaying of the SALT II ratification by the Washington Senate and with the Brussels NATO missile decisions. Both have had a very negative effect on the process of detente, the speaker declared. 'Obviously even some members and functionaries of European social democratic parties have been deceived by the demagogic formula of the so-called double-decision of Brussels and the lying declaration of intent by the Carter administration that it wants to ratify the SALT II treaty,' Manfred Feist stressed. However, irrespective of certain differences of opinion on other issues, what is needed now is joint action by all peace forces against the implementation of themissile decision, he said."

At the opening of the meeting, World Peace Council Chairman Romesh Chandra stressed that there is no alternative to disarmament and detente.

MARTENS OUTLINES POLICY IN 20 MAY STATEMENT TO PARLIAMENT

LD270759 Brussels LE SOIR in French 22 May 80 p 2

["Dv. report on 20 May Belgian Government statement in Parliament: "'Times Are Difficult'--Mr Martens Preaches Realism"]

[Excerpts] Mr Martens stated that the government does not underestimate the scale of the difficulties confronting our country. But it is determined to act swiftly and with cohesion and determination in order to restore confidence and carry out a dual priority task, that is, reform institutions and meet the major challenges of the present day by creating employment, safeguarding achievements in the social security sphere, improving the economy and controlling public finances.

As far as state reform is concerned, it soon became clear in the course of the negotiations which led to the formation of the government that there is a broad consensus among government parties with respect to the new political structures of the Flemish, French-speaking and German-speaking communities and the Walloon region. However, there still are considerable differences of opinion with respect to the way to resolve the Brussels problem. Therefore, the discussion must be continued.

The government will immediately submit to the Chamber and Senate proposals aimed at amending some 10 articles of the Constitution in order to create a constitutional framework for the envisaged reform. The aim of this reform is to grant regional and communal entities considerable autonomy in the cultural, individual identity and regional spheres. These matters will be dealt with by autonomous councils and executives. Furthermore, the financing system provides for such autonomy in the financial sphere without prejudice to an indispensable solidarity.

The government is convinced that rapid implementation of the new structures could constitute an important factor in the restoration of confidence among our country's communities.

Restoring Major Balances

At a later stage the government will also submit proposals for a revision of the Constitution and bills aimed at Senate reform. However, the distribution of prerogatives between the Chamber and the Senate will first have to be submitted to Parliament for fundamental discussion. Within the framework of this reform, it will also be necessary to ensure the stability of the government and Parliament.

Furthermore, a big effort will be made to gradually restore the equilibrium of our balance of payments, thus ensuring that the parity of the Belgian franc is maintained. This effort presupposes a reduction in the energy bill, a reorientation of domestic expenditure, a better equilibrium of our balance of services, an improvement in our performance with respect to exports and control over public finances.

The prime minister also recalled the need to stabilize the budget and promised to reduce taxation, especially as far as the future is concerned. From 1981, a fundamental change in the tax system applied to individual entities will be made. Its aim will be to gradually reduce taxes and more fairly distribute the tax burden, two-income households, single-income households and the number of children in a given household [sentence as published]. The fiscal consequences of this cadastral equalization will be mitigated in certain areas.

Promises Concerning Social Matters

The main objective of the government's social policy will be to improve the position of the underprivileged members of our society. From 1 January 1980, funds totaling 2.3 billion will be assigned for this purpose. Legislation ensuring a connection between social benefits and welfare will be implemented. Furthermore, credits amounting to 1 billion will be assigned to improve pensions. The maintenance of the system of indexing wages and social benefits to consumer goods prices has been confirmed.

The government will soon formulate proposals concerning a fundamental reform of social security and, after consulting with its social interlocutors, will submit a draft outline law to Parliament.

There is also the question of education policy and that of foreign relations, which raises three major problems--the building of Europe, detente versus defense and North-South relations.

The Chamber will start discussing the above statement on Wednesday and will continue the discussion on Thursday. Since the majority has, in fact, 177 seats out of 212, there can be no doubt as to the result of the voting. Indeed there are more ministers and secretaries of state than opposition members....

Parliamentary Debate on Statement

LD281009 Brussels LE SOIR in French 23 May 80 p 2

["Dv." report: "The Debate on the Government Statement Followed by a Dozen Deputies and...by a Spectator"]

[Text] After 5 hours of debate Wednesday afternoon [21 May], the sixth in a series of 54 deputies addressed the house. Nothing new until then, everything having been said during the government negotiations and the congresses of the six coalition parties. Thus there was must indifference, a dozen deputies and a single stray spectator in the public gallery. The same atmosphere was to continue until 2200 hours.

You could have ascertained, if one may say so, that the Christian People's Party (CVP) had confidence, albeit highly cautious confidence, in a government led by one of its own kind.

"This is a government of national unity," Mr Leo Tindemans was to remark. "It was indispensable," he said. In fact, a special majority could still have been found outside of a coalition in 1970. This is no longer the case. Calling to mind the Brussels problem, he observed that it would be fine if the city wanted to be a national capital. And how attractive that center would be, he added, if it also wanted to be a European and international one. Given the particular problems, depopulation, immigration and economic difficulties, a very subtle plan of total revival was needed.

The CVP president was also to speak of financial problems, of the urgent need for an economic and social plan, of the necessary equilibrium in the balance of payments, of the energy policy, fiscal reform and the European ideal.

No Confidence

The French-speaking Front-Walloon Rally (FDF-RW), the leading opposition party, is not confident. This is what was outlined by Mr Basile Bisopoulos and Mr Leon Defosset. For the former there was another inspiration in the first Martens government statement. The depreciation in 1 year is remarkable, he said.

He added: Now just one party is satisfied, namely the CVP. The other five are hesitant and uncommitted. And this emphasizes the Flemings' victoriousness. In fact, he said, the whole sectorial policy remains national. Economic and financial solidarity do not exist. Brussels is being treated in a wholly unacceptable way. True regionalization is further away than ever. We must thus draw up a list of our resources, establish an economic plan, work out who pays what and remodel social security.

For the latter, this overcrowded Cabinet bodes ill for the economies otherwise judged indispensable. As for federalism, what the government proposes is a caricature and a pretense for it. There is the same retreat, moreover, on social matters. There has practically been a U-turn on institutional reforms.

Speaking at the end of the evening, Mr Guy Brasseur noted that the Socialists had fallen into a double trap, that of the Liberals on economic matters, that of the CVP on the institutional list.

Do Not Forget Brussels!

Mr Herve Prouhon, leader of the Socialist group, explained why his party is supporting the government. But, he emphasized, the Socialist Party (PS) would review its position if they had not managed to find a valid solution for Brussels and the communes where the problems exist before next year's parliamentary vacation. In this matter the speaker proposed a dialogue among the Brussels citizens who would put their conslusions to the government.

On behalf of the Flemish Socialists, Mr Frank van Acker regretted that our community worries should hinder any financial, economic or social policy. Public opinion, he said, does not understand that the politicians cannot find an acceptable solution. However, there are many other things to be done. There is the crisis, the energy supply, industrial administration and, above all, a firm budgetary policy, without forgetting social security.

Very Costly for the Flemings

The Volksunie (VU) position was developed by Mr Vic Anciaux and Mr Jaak Gabriels. For the former, the government is already collapsing under internal divergences, particularly those of the CVP. He believes that, for the Flemings, it is excessive to have to pay such a torrent of billions [of Belgian francs] for scarcely 10 percent of real autonomy. For the latter the statement contains nothing but ambiguities.

The two new leaders of the Liberal groups, Mr Etienne Knoops and Mr Freddy Vreven, outlined their parties' positions. They have agreed to accept their responsibilities, they said. On the community level they are asking for a solution to the Brussels problem. On the economic and social level, the tax reductions and the desire finally to carry out a clean-up given them great cause for hope. In the foreign policy domain, they reaffirmed their adherence to Europe and warned against the neglect which calls to mind the Munich spirit.

After a break in the session the half-dozen members still present heard the Social Christian Party's "yes" justified by Mr Jean le Hardy de Beaulieu, and the Communists' "no" by Mr Marcel Levaux then again by the VU.

Incident in the Chamber This Morning

The session began with an incident. Mr Defraignes opened the session at exactly 1000. There was no minister present. He waited patiently for 10 minutes then adjourned the beginning of the debate until 1030, remarking: The government should learn to be on time.

ROMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS WITH GENSCHER, SCHMIDT

Disarmament Conference Favored

LD281442 Hamburg DPA in German 1418 GMT 28 May 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--Bonn and Bucharest support a disarmament conference in Europe. This common line was shared in Bonn today by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Romanian opposite number, Stefan Andrei. In their view, the followup meeting to the European security conference, planned for November in Madrid, should be held at the foreign ministerial level and have the authority to call such a disarmament conference.

The Romanian foreign minister, who invited Genscher to visit Bucharest, was received this afternoon in Frankfurt by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt for an exchange of views.

Apart from the Madrid followup meeting, the two foreign ministers also discussed questions of arms control and disarmament, the North-South dialogue and the nonaligned movement.

At his meeting with Andrei in Frankfurt, Chancellor Schmidt expressed his satisfaction at the development of German-Romanian trade. At the end of their 90-minute exchange of views, a government spokesman in Bonn said that the two sides had agreed to extend cooperation in the economic sphere. According to the spokesman, the talks also dealt with current international problems.

AGERPRES Report

AU282018 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1838 GMT 28 May 80

[Text] Bonn, (AGERPRES), 28/5/1980--The Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei was received on May 28 in Frankfurt am Main by the Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, within the official visit he is paying to the Federal Republic of Germany.

During the interview they noted with satisfaction the positive, ascending course of the relations between Romania and Federal Germany on political, economic, technico-scientific, cultural and other planes and expressed their common wish to intensify the collaboration between the economic cooperation in production, third markets included. They also exchanged views on current problems of international life.

They stressed that in the current conditions of a worsened international situation, the major task is to concert the efforts of all states and governments for preventing the deterioration of the international political climate, the resumption and continuation of the policy of detente, grounded on the strict observance, in inter-state relations, of the principles of national independence and sovereignty, fully equal rights, mutual advantage, non-interference in internal affairs, non-recourse to the threat or use of force. Special attention was paid to the situation in Europe, to the thorough preparation of this year's Madrid meeting, which should give a fresh and strong impetus to the implementation of the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act as a unitary whole.

The same day, the talks continued between the foreign ministers of the two countries on the situation in Europe and in the world, stress being laid on the good preparation of the Madrid meeting. The two ministers agreed on the necessity of decisions which should lead to the strengthening of collaboration among the Final Act signatory states, to the reactuation of the spirit of the Helsinki conference, and especially which should pave the way for concrete measures of military disengagement and disarmament, without which one cannot speak of a real security on our continent.

The two ministers have expressed their common stand that the Madrid meeting has the important mission to define the mandate and adopt a decision regarding the convening of a special conference on military disengagement and disarmament in Europe. Both sides reaffirmed their agreement that the Madrid meeting take place at the foreign ministers level and agreed on the organization of frequent consultations between the two governments, to the end of a thorough preparation and successful unfolding of its proceedings.

The two sides expressed worry at the arms race and declared in favour of the implementation of effective disarmament measures, of nuclear disarmament first of all. They reasserted the wish to take action within the disarmament negotiations, in tune with the recommendations adopted by the first session of the U.N. General Assembly on disarmament.

The two ministers declared in favour of all the states' active participation in the international life on an equal footing, irrespective of their size or social system, for banning the use of force and of the threat with force from the international life and for finding peaceful solutions to the conflicts existing in various parts of the world by means of negotiations among interested sides. The two ministers highlighted the necessity for action to be taken in view of securing Namibia's independence and stressed the importance of unabated observance of each people's independence, a sine qua non for the settlement of a climate of peace, detente and international collaboration.

Both ministers reasserted firmly the resolve of their governments to take active action for the thorough preparation of the special session of the UN General Assembly to begin this year, on the engineering of a new juster and more equitable international economic order. They stressed the necessity of enhanced U.N. role in the international life, of its contribution to the peaceful settlement of the international differences and to solving the major issues confronting mankind, to securing peace and international security.

The sides expressed satisfaction at the friendly, sincere open atmosphere in which the talks had passed, and expressed the conviction that this would result in developed relations between the two states, in strengthening their collaboration in the international life.

The Vice-Chancellor and Federal Minister for Foreign Affairs Hans-Dietrich Genscher accepted the invitation to pay an official visit to Romania, extended by his Romanian opposite number.

SOVIET RIFLEMEN BOYCOTT MUNICH RIFLE, PISTOL COMPETITION

LD281102 Hamburg DPA in German 0951 GMT 28 May 80

[Text] Munich--The Federal Republic's boycott of the Olympics is having its first reaction among riflemen: The Soviet Union will not be participating in the international rifle and pistol competition from Friday to Saturday in Munich-Hochbrueck.

The Soviet riflemen had already announced to Peter Rebsch, deputy president of the German Riflemen's Association [DSB], at the international championship in Suhl (GDR) that it would not be participating because of the West German NOC's boycott announcement. According to the DSB, no written official cancellation had been received by today.

The DSB is also expecting a cancellation by archers for the "nations' tournament" from 14 to 17 June in Welzheim. The Soviet Union had registered for this as had the United States.

GENSCHER, EEC PRESIDENT MEET FOR TALKS

LD281016 Hamburg DPA in German 0928 GMT 28 May 80

[Text] Bonn--The differences of opinion regarding Britain's contribution to the EEC budget were the main topic of a discussion between Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Italian opposite number, Emilio Colombo, in Bonn today. The two foreign ministers stressed that their governments trust that Iran's leadership will solve the hostage issue "constructively and without delay." Colombo came to Bonn in his capacity as current chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers.

GENSCHER ADDRESSES OAU AMBASSADORS IN BONN

LD281133 Hamburg DPA in German 1051 GMT 28 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher spoke out today in favor of independence for African states. Speaking in Bonn to the ambassadors of the OAU member nations, Genscher said that anyone who today still wants to force his state and social system on other countries and who strives for dominance over other states is going against the wheel of history. The occupation of small and nonaligned Afghanistan had "opened the eyes of many as to the source of new dependence."

According to Genscher, the Federal Government will help its African partners' political, economic and social development and thus contribute toward stability in Africa. It is also in favor of relinquishing the use of force in Africa, pledges itself to defend human rights and human dignity and will make an active contribution toward peacefully overcoming the vestiges of colonialism and racism in southern Africa. "We want to be partners of African independence," the federal foreign minister affirmed.

As doyen of the heads of African missions in Bonn, the Gabonese ambassador, Ayouma Bongo, praised the clear evidence of the interest with which Genscher approached Africa's problems.

GENSCHER, CDU'S MARX CLASH OVER FOREIGN POLICY

DW231142 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1815 GMT 22 May 80

[Excerpts from the regularly scheduled television roundtable entitled "Television Discussion" moderated by Rudolf Muehlfenzl, with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and CDU/CSU foreign policy spokesman Werner Marx, answering questions by journalists Carl Weiss and Hugo Portisch--recorded in Bonn, date not given]

[Text] [Genscher] I believe it is important for the partners of the Western alliance that the constants of our joint policy are made visible, meaning cooperation between Europe and the United States. What is involved here is common security interests and common concepts of values. It is important that in a difficult period of international development the individual member states of the Western alliance desist from deviating from the continuity of their policy. And in this respect the Federal Government has quite clearly expounded its position on the basis of the alliance and the European Community as well as its will for cooperation with the Third World and for efforts toward talks with the East as well.

[Marx] I am inclined to view the matter much more skeptically than Mr Genscher. The Americans believed that the alliance was fully intact and that if the alliance were burdened it would withstand this burden. Suddenly it turns out that at least parts of the alliance in Europe do talk of solidarity yet fall very much short of acting in solidarity. All this adds up to a rather poor balance sheet; it is not a balance sheet of self-confidence of the Europeans but one of hesitation, attempted adaptation and, as I see it, of too much of a sideways glance at Soviet power and of too much dissociation, meaning fashionable anti-Americanism.

[Genscher] Mr Marx has said that some parts of Europe perhaps do not live up to their commitments as is necessary. To show the positions here quite clearly I would like to state the following: Surely he does not mean the Federal Republic of Germany. I consider it highly important for us to make our positions absolutely clear here.

I believe it is very important for the Western states in the present situation to recognize that a transposition of the East-West conflict to the Third World cannot benefit anybody. On the contrary, it must be our objective to promote in the Third World those forces which want to preserve their independence. What we have to fulfill there is a great political and moral task. Sometimes I have the impression that the significance of the nonaligned movement for stability in the world, for example, is not properly assessed in the West. Yet this nonaligned movement will increasingly wield decisive significance in the world, and anybody who makes the mistake of counteracting a Soviet concept of expansion of power and influence with an identical concept, Western style, would soon learn that he is resisting the wheel of history. In these countries the wheel of history is turning in the direction of independence. This is what we must support with all our activities.

And if we view this issue from the aspect of security policy for a change, then we cannot but find that the Soviet Union has easily scored success wherever particularly decayed structures existed. This is why, as far as I am concerned, many a discussion as to what the West must now do is a bit short-winded. What we need here is a long-term strategy. We, as the Fruopean Community, have done quite a lot in this respect.

What must always be important with a view to Afghanistan is that the objective remain unchanged: the pullout of Soviet troops. And the result of the second Islamic conference in Islamabad has shown that they have an identical objective. Still, I am warning against an artificial transfer of the East-West conflict to the Third World.

What happened at the Islamic conference now goes to show that they are seeking such a solution as well, that is to say, a solution which, on the one hand, will make the Soviet withdrawal possible and, on the other hand, will reassure the Soviet Union that neither neighbor states nor others--neither Europeans nor the United States--have any intention of maintaining bases in that country, to exert influence there or to interfere in its internal affairs. It will be very important to invite the interest of the Soviets to such settlements in potential talks.

During our forthcoming visit to the Soviet Union the chancellor and I also intend to advertise this concept just as our other partners do. In talks you cannot tell what will be attainable and when, but the objective must be clear; and to us it must be clear that we must avoid severing contacts amid a difficult international situation and endeavor, through negotiations, not to let developments get out of control. On the contrary, we must make an effort, with our means at hand, to achieve its solution, not through a lone German action but within the framework of the overall concept of the West which we have for such purposes.

It is important that this be done without any loss of time. Only, I assume that nobody bearing responsibility in the West has any intention of settling this crisis by means of war. Our responsibility for world peace commands that a political solution alone be sought here. Yet this solution will not be attained if the parties stay silent.

[Marx] Let me refer to something Mr Genscher has said, namely, that nobody in the Western world wants to solve the current problems, for example Afghanistan, by means of war. This is absolutely correct for it is generally known that wars do not solve problems but rather create a great many new problems. On the other hand, the Soviet Union has started a war: It attacked another country at a time when it probably had reason to assume that the West was weak and could not react in a way in which it would otherwise react, for instance, through NATO and the Americans.

I would like to revert to the thesis concerning Europe and the United States which we discussed in the beginning and state my disagreement with what Mr Genscher wanted to hammer home a while ago, namely, that the Federal Government could not be the target of critical assessments of its hesitant attitude. It would be appropriate in this connection to discuss the question of how differently some parts of the Federal Government reacted to certain problems. I am convinced that if we had solved the Olympics problem earlier, for example, we would not be in this strange situation in which we find ourselves in Europe now.

Let me now turn to the topic of the nonaligned states. I believe that Tito's endeavors notwithstanding, an important part of the nonaligned countries consider themselves a natural ally of the Soviet Union.

You mentioned discussion contacts. It has always been my view that it is necessary to talk with each other, of course. Yet what matters is not just talking with each other but what is being said, what the content of the talks is and what the quality of the discussions and agreements is like. I must say that I was somewhat taken aback by a discussion which obviously had been scheduled on short notice between the French president and the Polish and Soviet party chiefs. Afterwards there were some embassed discussions.

I believe that the Soviet Union was quite satisfied with having had this dialogue because it was needed for the purpose of showing that they are talking. But the content was not clear. And I believe that if the chancellor and the foreign minister go to Moscow it will be necessary for them to discuss one question, of course--namely, what the Soviet problem of Afghanistan is all about.

[Genscher] Such a visit in difficult times is justifiable only by the fact that we can point out our own aims and ideas to the other side. The aim with regard to Afghanistan is that the Soviet Union must leave that country. There can be no doubts about anyone having an opinion different from that. I think it is important--as does Secretary of State Muskie, whom we have advised accordingly--that we have also talked to Gromyko in Vienna. Other Western foreign ministers have done the same. So we will make this visit a part of the meetings between the Soviet leadership and us, and vice versa. I think that the visit of the French state president, the Warsaw meeting, fits into this continuity.

As regards the nonaligned movement and Tito's action in this connection, it becomes obvious that there are forces in the nonaligned movement which consider the nonaligned as natural allies. It is important, however, that we must not have ideological blinders vis-a-vis the nonaligned, saying that among them there are pro-Western, pro-Eastern and other nations who have not taken over our social systems at all. If we take the right to self-determination of the Third World countries seriously, they themselves must be able to determine their internal systems.

I think we must also have a very clear position with regard to the Near Eastern problem. If you now look at the results of the Islamabad conference, you can clearly see how important a solution to the Near Eastern problem is for the Islamic states. It is equally clear to them as well as to us that the Palestinian people's right to self-determination must be implemented, and Israel's right to existence must be doubtlessly a part of such a peace agreement.

[Muehlfenzl] The hostages in Iran have been waiting 5 months for their release. An assault has taken place in Afghanistan. The result of all attempts, contacts and complaints is nil. You say that talks have taken place, that a new beginning must be made and that progress must be achieved. There must be some point where that progress will become a manifested reality for you?

[Genscher] The reason for the talks we are having today is the fact that the situation has become extremely serious due to developments in Afghanistan, due to the problems in Iran, in the Near East, and due to the threatening arms race. Nobody could think of playing things down if one looks at all that. I think it is most important for us to concentrate in these difficult times on the principles of our policy, on the Western alliance's ability to act but not as an act of solidarity vis-a-vis the United States. No, the alliance serves the interests of the Americans as much as it serves the interests of the Europeans. Common ideas exist with regard to freedom and democracy.

[Marx] There is an obvious contradiction between what has been said in many communiques following consultations and in television, radio and press interviews, and the real content, the substance of the matter. The populace in the European countries, in our own country, has been fed for many months with hopes, with wishes, or with the statement that certain facts have been achieved. But if one looks at the substance, only very little has been achieved. I believe--and if one speaks to the Russians, one will hear it from them--that this ado in the Western world is being accepted there with a bit of cynicism and contempt vis-a-vis the Western world. The Soviet Union today is much more prepared to take risks because it sees that whenever it undertakes something, the West starts talking, discussing and talking again.

[Genscher] We are facing the problem of whether to accept a Soviet increase with regard to medium-range missiles which would amount to imbalance. That is out because security and peace can exist only on the basis of balance. But if we will not accept it, there will be two possibilities: Either there will be what we call the closing of the arms gap--we would much rather not have it happen [sentence unfinished].

We want to have balance in any case. We do not want to accept a preponderance with the consequence of subordination to a foreign will. We would very much like to have a balance on as low an arms level as possible. One must try to achieve that. One must be absolutely free of illusions, however.

This is why I have been warning over and over again against calling into question parts of the Brussels decision because this is certainly not an incentive for the Soviet Union to enter into negotiations with us--constructive negotiations.

[Marx] There are a number of people here in their own country--last but not least the federal chancellor--who have not only demanded or created the impression that this matter, the December decision of NATO to close the arms gap, ought to be discussed again.

[Genscher] You have just wrongly insinuated that the federal chancellor wanted to undermine the decision. It is known that he has been the first in the West who has pointed to the gap in the field of medium-range missiles and who had brought about the decision of the Western alliance. We do not deny that there have been difficulties in other European governments.

[Genscher] I believe that it is a very serious problem with regard to the awareness of the United States as a country that does very much for the security of Europe. I think that it was therefore correct that our Federal Government, the federal president, the German Bundestag and also the National Olympic Committee have made such a free decision.

[Marx] It is clear that the Soviet Government must explain it more clearly to its populace why such a resistance has come about in the Western world, why many people will not come to the Olympics. That was one of the important intentions. Naturally the Americans on their part believed that an element of importance to them consisted in not celebrating the Olympic spirit at a moment when this spirit is being trampled upon by the Soviet Union, the organizing country.

ENTRY BAN IMPOSED BY LIBYA ON WEST GERMANS LIFTED

[Text] Bonn--Libya imposed a temporary general ban on Germans entering the country over the weekend. However, the measure has since been lifted after contacts between the Federal Government and the Libyan authorities, including the country's charge d'affaires in Bonn. The Foreign Ministry reported, in response to questioning, that the German Embassy in Tripoli had today confirmed the lifting of the entry ban.

The Foreign Ministry could not say how many Germans had been affected by the measure. The Libyan "people's bureau" in Bonn earlier said that it had no information regarding any such entry ban. Visas were still being issued.

The Foreign Ministry gave no information about what might have led to the temporary entry ban. The FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG reported today that the government in Tripoli had given as a reason the fact that Libyan citizens were being "badly treated" in the Federal Republic. This was interpreted as an allusion to the expulsion of two Libyans following the murder of a former Libyan diplomat in Bonn.

GISCARD TO VISIT PRC 'BEFORE END OF YEAR'

[Text] Paris, May 28 (AFP)--French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing said in accepting the credentials of new Chinese Ambassador Yao Guang today that he would visit Beijing before the end of the year. At the same time, President Giscard d'Estaing called for a strengthening of Franco-Chinese political dialogue "to work more efficiently for the maintenance of peace."

He said that relations between the two countries had seen an "unprecedented development" notably with the visit last October to France during a West European tour of Chinese leader Hua Guofeng. This visit, Mr Giscard d'Estiang said, constituted "an important step toward strengthening dialogue and co-operation" between the two countries.

The French leader added that France was ready to contribute towards the "vast effort in economic development" being undertaken in China and expressed satisfaction at the progress already accomplished in trade exchanges between France and China.

FRANCOIS-PONCET: ALLIANCE 'DOES NOT MEAN ALIGNMENT'

[Unattributed report: "France Spoke Very Firmly to the USSR"]

[Excerpt] Speaking on Luxembourg Radio-Television's "Journal Inattendu" on 24 May, Mr Francois-Poncet stated that the French Government "spoke very firmly" to the USSR during Mr Gromyko's visit to Paris as well as at the Warsaw summit. Indicating that the planned summit of "a small number of major leading powers" mentioned by Mr Giscard d'Estaing could be held "from the beginning of 1981," provided that new causes of tension do not appear before then--particularly in Afghanistan--the French foreign minister added: "It is important that the Soviet Union is aware of this concern, I was going to say, of this warning."

In his view, France is "in the Western camp," but "alliance does not mean alignment." "It may be that in certain situations we agree (with the United States) on having policies which are different while being parallel."

MITTERRAND HITS 'TOTAL LACK OF RESULTS' OF WARSAW SUMMIT

LD281603 Paris LE MATIN in French 22 May 80 p 4

[Unattributed report: "Mitterrand Criticizes Warsaw Summit"]

[Text] The guest of Radio France-Inter's "Face the Public" yesterday, Francois Mitterrand gave a long account of his analysis of French foreign policy, and particularly the Giscard-Brezhnev talks in Warsaw. "I approve the spirit of the move by the president of the republic," Francois Mitterrand was keen to explain first when questioned on the summit meeting between Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Leonid Brezhnev, emphasizing: "The president of the republic does not have to ask anybody's permission.... Why should he be refused what you concede to the U.S. President, the American secretary of state or the German chancellor?" Those are the points of agreement.

For the remainder, the Socialist Party first secretary explained: "Such a meeting must be well prepared if you do not want it to fail, since all failure is harmful. And here I become quite critical. If you make a move and bring back nothing, then that shows the impertinence of the Soviet Government and the weakness of French policy." He asked himself: "Has peace advanced? Clearly not. Has the trouble increased? Clearly, yes," and then exclaimed: "It was unnecessary to expose oneself to the insult represented by the total lack of results." Holding the view that the "Elysee candidate" was increasingly taking the place of the president of the republic, he stated in reply to a question on the ultimate underlying reasons for this summit: "It would be sad to see the president of France sink to the point where, saying that he is going to seek peace in Warsaw, he goes there to seek the votes of the Communists." He subsequently denounced the setting up in France of a "Giscard-Marchais system" which "is paralyzing French political life."

Returning to international politics, Francois Mitterrand prayed for a renegotiation of the Atlantic Alliance and a "major international meeting." He reproached Valery Giscard d'Estaing for acting "as though he had the strength and the diplomacy" to impose a solution on the international crises. In conclusion Francois Mitterrand explained: "I fear that the weakness of one (the United States) may incite the other (the USSR) to believe that it can push its advantage too far."

PRESS VIEWS OUTCOME OF GISCARD-BREZHNEV PARLEY

LE MONDE Criticizes Giscard Justification

LD281349 Paris LE MONDE in French 25-26 May 80 p 1

[Editorial: "The Form and the Substance"]

[Text] It sometimes happens that explanations do not clarify anything. Thus it was with Mr Giscard d'Estaing's television interview on Friday. One of the strangest points of Mr Giscard d'Estaing's Warsaw trip was the desire to shroud it in secrecy. The president of the republic stated that if his journey had been announced in advance, it would have been impossible to preserve a "conversational character" in his meeting with Mr Brezhnev. It is hard to see why. Quite the contrary, it is the mysterious flavor which has let people devise the very worst hypothese. By refusing to confirm or deny the evidence until it materialized the president did himself the worst possible service, since you could suspect him either of being ashamed of his move to the point of trying to camouflage it, or of improvisation, or, worse still, of having his hand forced by his future interlocutors. Let us not forget that Poland had given the game away 48 hours in advance. This, moreover, is what enabled very many journalists to be on the scene in time. Their presence, as far as one can tell, in no way transformed the planned conversations into negotiations.

The same remarks are valid on the president's behavior toward the United States: One cannot, without risking a progressive deterioration in relations with Washington, reproach President Carter for having abused the Europeans' trust in the attempt to liberate the Tehran hostages and then not inform him in good time of an event as important as a meeting with Mr Brezhnev. This is not a question of requesting authorization, but quite simply of respecting the rules which should be basic between allies. If they had been respected, Paris would be in a much better position to take offense at the American admonishments. Especially since the precedent of the Gromyko-Muskie meeting, cited by Mr Giscard d'Estaing, can hardly be compared with the Warsaw summit: the establishing of contact between the heads of Soviet and U.S. diplomacy in Vienna had been announced officially several days before.

One further point in Mr Giscard d'Estaing's explanation that is hardly satisfactory: If he did not appear at Marshal Tito's funeral, he said, this was firstly because the marshal did not come to the funerals of General de Gaulle and Georges Pompidou and, second, it would have been impossible for the president of the republic to meet quietly with Mr Brezhnev in the crowd and excitement of Belgrade. That, however, was not the point: It was not a question of going to Belgrade to meet with Mr Brezhnev but to demonstrate clearly that France would not remain indifferent to Yugoslavia's fate and would always support its desire for independence. Friday evening's remark will have the opposite effect and can only hurt the Yugoslav leaders' feelings quite needlessly.

In diplomacy the form sometimes replaces the substance; in any event, it complements it. In the Warsaw affair as in that of Belgrade, Mr Giscard d'Estaing has not taken this into account. This has earned him the many criticisms of which he is now the object and not all of which, contrary to what he believes, stem from "election speeches" but from a legitimate desire for national independence at least equal to his own.

LE FIGARO: Explanations 'Unconvincing'

LD281101 Paris LE FIGARO in French 24-25 May 80 p 1

[Max Clos article: "For what Result?"]

[Text] The question was: What purpose has been served by the Warsaw "talk" between Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Leonid Brezhnev? After the head of state's television interview the question remains since the explanations given have seemed to us quite unconvincing.

It is difficult to ignore two facts. First, as a result of the visit to Warsaw the USSR has emerged from the moral ghetto to which the aggression against Afghanistan had confined it in the eyes of the noncommunist world. The visit has widened a little further the existing rift between France and the United States at a time when the grave threats hanging over peace would call for a closer alliance. You sometimes feel that a desire to automatically show that we always stand aloof from Washington is the key to France's foreign policy. This should make public opinion ask itself a simple question: Who threatens Europe's security, the Soviets or the Americans? And, second, with reference to the main factor of tension in the world--Afghanistan--the Warsaw visit has achieved--and this was foreseeable--no result. Is there any adequate reason to believe that the president's "firm" language--the reassertion that the Kabul coup is "unacceptable"--has affected Brezhnev and made him change his policy? The answer is obvious: It has not. It is obvious that the Soviet troops will remain where they are as long as necessary and that Afghanistan has fallen into the communist orbit for good.

If any doubt on this point remained, it would be sufficient to recall the remarks made by Soviet Ambassador to Paris Chervonenko, who stated 48 hours after the Warsaw summit: The withdrawal of our troops is dependent on the recognition of the irreversibility of the Afghan democratic revolution. We still cannot see what positive results have been achieved by the Warsaw "talk."

Talks Preferable to 'Suicidal Immobility'

LD280757 Paris LE FIGARO in French 22 May 80 p 2

[Paul-Marie de la Gorce article: "The Reasons for a Journey"]

[Text] The president of the republic has been overwhelmed by a veritable tidal wave of criticism in connection with his meeting with Brezhnev. [paragraph continues]

This is not without precedent: The same thing used to happen regularly whenever General de Gaulle adopted a stance which was different from the other Western countries. His present successor in his turn is weighing up the risks that exist in acting independetly and the solitude this usually brings with it: We have reached such a paradox when to maintain that the French president had quite good reasons for acting as he did is to display exceptional nonconformism.

But it is true that the Warsaw meeting raised real questions which have been posed in this newspaper and that we should know the answers to them.

The truth is that French officials consider the international situation to be more serious than people say, in the sense that in the coming months it may give rise to new crises or even conflicts with possibly incalculable consequences.

The international crisis is not merely a matter of the Afghan affair: It concerns the whole of Central Asia and the Middle East, which, as they say, are unstable, and it is this totality which we must consider. The most serious danger in the near future is the risk of calamity in Iran.

Several theories can be envisaged. International isolation of Iran may lead this country to depend increasingly on the socialist states and thus open the way to Soviet influence. U.S. military action, which is probable if the hostages are tried, may trigger off a decisive rapprochement between the USSR and Iran in reaction. Or, a civial war may result, which Moscow could restrict itself to "fueling" from the outside without any practical difficulties, so that there would be a sort of new Vietnam in the immediate vicinity of areas of vital economic and strategic importance in the Middle East. Finally perhaps the continued weakening of the present authorities in Tehran, of the religious movement which is linked with the personal charisma of the Ayatollah Khomeyni, aged over 80, would be sufficient for the political balance of the country to be upset and for the forces of the left and the extreme left, wary as they are of their powerful northern neighbors, to push the country toward a more radical revolution and to seek support only from Moscow.

In all these cases, even if we credit the Soviet leaders with great prudence, they would have enormous possibilities for increasing their area of influence and there is no reason to suppose that they would not seize the opportunity.

This is not all. If the Iraq-Iran conflict degenerates, in particular if the Iranian Revolution is tempted to "surge forward" and tries to go beyond its national frontiers, then the whole Gulf will be in crisis. At the same time the Islamabad conference has just confirmed what was suspected: The Muslim countries as a whole, without revoking their condemnation of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, wanted to lay the same emphasis on their condemnation of the Camp David process and their support for Iran vis-a-vis the United States. Knowing how decisive U.S. influence on countries like Saudi Arabia, Pakistan and the Emirates was, we can estimate the deterioration, even temporary, in their stances. And especially we can see how serious and threatening is the risk of new crises, to which no great power would remain indifferent and which inevitably the USSR would try to exploit.

This is how Paris assesses the risks. And, as can be seen, there is no unjustifiable panic reflected here. The assessment rests on facts which everybody knows and whose consequences are all plausible. Of course the French Government cannot admit this publicly, no more than it can say what it thinks of U.S. policy.

It first needs stating that the United States, although the responsibility does not rest entirely with it, is confronting two enemies at once: the Soviet Union over Afghanistan and Iran in the wake of the consequences of its revolution. There is no need to seek elsewhere the reasons for the difficulties of U.S. diplomacy, which is being thwarted in the very region where it must confront Soviet penetration and which has therefore been incapable of exploiting the breach, opened by the USSR intervention in Kabul, between the USSR and all the states of the region. And this is naturally also the explanation for the maneuvering possibilities which Moscow is trying to bring into play in order to emerge from its isolation.

To add to which is the fact, impossible for a government to admit publicly, that the United States is literally paralyzed by the presidential campaign, that its decisions are likely to be dominated by the imperatives of domestic policy and that it will perhaps be incapable of initiatives in the next few months.

This is the background to things. Should events have been left to follow their own course? This is what the Western side has done so far. For the truth is that in the Afghan affair, the reputedly "hardest" governments have talked more than acted. From the very first it has been admitted, in particular by a Brzezinski statement, that the United States would not declare war. President Carter wanted to reply with economic sanctions; it has been said here why these would not work. But there is more: They are not all being applied by America itself. At the beginning of this month Washington authorized the sale to the Soviet Union of important oil drilling equipment intended for the island of Sakhalin, to be complemented by a contract for technical assistance....

In reality the international situation is too serious and the possible crises would have too many consequences for people to be able to choose to do nothing. And what a country like France was able to do was to alert people to the risks of aggravated tension which could result from this crisis, to show people that if broader negotiation is wanted to relax relations among teh great powers, these relations must not deteriorate and must not be exploited, and that on these terms such negotiation could take place after the U.S. deadlines of this year.

This is what was done during the trip to Warsaw. Whatever the outcome it was better than a suicidal immobility in the face of the new upheavals which threaten on the horizon and against which peace would not survive.

Policy Toward USSR Questioned

LD281523 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 23 May 80 pp 1, 5

[Benoit Rayski editorial: "Should It or Should It Not Have Been Done?"]

[Text] Probably never has any meeting as brief as the Warsaw meeting between Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Leonid Brezhnev created such a commotion, considering that 3 days after the event the waves which it has created are still breaking over the Western world's shores....

Was it advisable or inadvisable to go to the Polish capital, running and obvious risk of giving the USSR the impression that, thanks to us, it would be able to emerge from the moral and political guarantine to which it had been relegated as a result of its invasion of Afghanistan?

Was it or was it not advisable to hold discussions with Leonid Brezhnev who (as it can now be seen) is using this talk to his full advantage irrespective of what he was told during it?

These questions are being asked more or less everywhere and used to criticize France's policy toward the Soviet Union.

Let us say right from the start that the problem obviously transcends the Warsaw event and falls--and this is why it is especially interesting--into a broader and, therefore, in no way accidental framework of the president's analysis of the need for detente, East-West dialogue and maintenance of sustained relations with the Soviet Union.

And, in this process, the defense, which may not be quite wrong, seems weak because its counterarguments sometimes appear to be rather inadequate.

A Hypothesis

It has been said, for instance, that detente and dialogue with Moscow have enabled countries like Poland to enjoy a measure of freedom and that the Warsaw meeting has certainly given a boost to this situation. This hypothesis has been proved wrong by history--Poland has achieved this measure of freedom through continuous and bloody workers' revolts and we believe that we should draw inspiration from this resistance rather than from anything else.

It is being explained that there is no alternative to detente except war. This implies that since we do not want the latter we must preserve the former at any cost. But why should we overlook the fact that the Soviet Union certainly does not hesitate to opt for war as it did by invading Afghanistan and, earlier, Czechoslovakia?

To explain the need not to align ourselves with the United States, it is being asserted that the United States has for a certain time been irresolute, weak and irresponsible. This statement may not be incorrect but is it really necessary to use it as an alibi for our own hesitations?

It is being said that it is absolutely crucial--and that it is this which rendered the Warsaw meeting necessary--to free the USSR from isolation and encirclement complex which is dangerous to world peace. True, but has any concern been shown about another isolation complex, a complex increasingly affecting the United States which is sorely tempted to withdraw into its own shell and go back to the kind of isolationism which preceded its entry into World War II?

And, finally, it is being asserted that we are in 1914, that is, that we are running the risk of succumbing to automatism which will drive the world toward war unless some responsible and sensible states intervene as France has.

Would it not be more apt to put the clock forward 25 years and think about 1939 when, from compromise to compromise, we let the adversary gain ground until it became too late?

A Huge Gulf

We believe that as far as relations with the Soviet Union, about whose expansionist nature there can be no doubt, are concerned, a different analysis is called for.

Not that Leonid Brezhnev is an ogre thirsting for blood and territories whom nothing could satisfy. But merely because the present Soviet system is marked by a huge gulf between that state's economic, cultural and political underdevelopment and the fantastic overdevelopment of its military machine. As always in such cases, it is the latter that holds sway and that, it is thought, does not want to remain immobile.

With respect to this it is remarkable how this power fascinates the PCF, for instance, which ceaselessly repeats--and is probably convinced--that the power balance has shifted and that it is the Eastern wind which now blows strongest. The worst possible thing would undoubtedly be if others were to yield to this fascination.

What should we do, therefore? Globally revise our concepts of detente and take risks similar to those which the Soviets took--without suffering any harm, as far as we know--in Afghanistan and Czechoslovakia. Abandon the idea (dear to Samuel Pisar), which though attractive and generous is fallacious, that development of economic relations with the USSR would lead to a shattering of that state's totalitarian straitjackets--the machinery which is exported, the plants which are built and the cars which are sold have no soul and bring only contracts, not freedom. And unyieldingly assert and champion everywhere such principles as defense of human rights--it still is from this quarter that democracies can derive their legitimacy and, consequently, survival.

Otherwise, it may prove necessary to say one day, when it is to late, paraphrasing a well-known statement made by a German clergyman: "When they crushed Hungary, we did nothing. When they invaded Czechoslovakia, we said nothing. When they occupied Afghanistan, we let things slide. And when they came to our country, there was no longer anyone to defend us."

L'HUMANITE Hails Results

[Yves Moreau editorial: "Peace Prospects"]

[Text] The Warsaw meeting proved not only the possibility but also the need to negotiate to overcome tensions. The French and the Soviet sides alike explained themselves on the main issues in contention.

It is true that there are serious differences concerning the reasons for the deterioration in the international situation. But they did not restrict themselves to acknowledging their differences: They are actively engaged in reducing them.

Concrete proposals have been made in this respect: the proposal by the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries advocating a world conference of all heads of state or government, and the Elysee's proposal favoring a more restricted summit bringing together only the "main powers" and which could take place next year. The two ideas are not identical but they are not irreconcilable. They are both inspired in fact by the principle that we must seek not confrontation but comprehension and understanding; that the Wilanow Palace dialogue must not be an end but a beginning; that detente must be revived and pursued.

The remaining disagreements are not insurmountable obstacles. Even concerning Afghanistan, on which the stances remain wide apart, both Paris and Moscow admit the need for a political solution which guarantees this country against all external interference in the future and allows it to be a nonaligned state.

On other topics there are obviously far more substantial areas of agreement. Thus France and the USSR should be in agreement to contribute this autumn to the success of the Madrid conference which will continue the work begun in Helsinki. And in agreement too to call a conference on military detente and disarmament in Europe.

On a more general level, following the Warsaw talks it is reasonable to hope that detente, which has been jeopardized by Carter's policy, is going to be revived.

Of course, this will not happen without a struggle. Those who are nostalgic for the cold war are not going to stand idly by. In France itself these people are behind an entire hostile press, radio and television campaign in the last 3 days.

Some even go so far as to conjure up Munich in relation to Warsaw. Need we recall that the Munich agreements which in 1938 created conditions favorable for the Second World War were essentially characterized by a breakdown in collective security and by anti-Sovietism? That is, they were characterized by elements completely opposite to those of the Wilanow Palace meeting.

This does not prevent the Socialist Jean-Pierre Cot, whose predecessors--unlike the Communists--approved of Munich, from announcing his disapproval of the Warsaw summit on the pretext that it "smelt of Daladier," and that "we are part of an alliance" which ought to rule out "this type of initiative" for us.

Jean-Pierre Cot is not only falsifying history but is also cheerfully a document of which Francois Mitterrand's party was a signatory: The joint program which stipulated that a leftist government "will not be content to follow events. It will demonstrate its will to commit the country to the path of independence with respect to all politicomilitary blocs." It will implement "under all circumstances, while respecting France's present all alliances, a policy independent of all military blocs."

The extent to which alignment can be detrimental to detente and to the national interest can be seen only too well in the poor reception accorded the Warsaw meeting by the ultras of Atlanticism, from L'AURORE to the Socialist leaders.

It is true that the negotiations envisaged offer prospects which are very different from the adventures programmed by Carter, who has gone so far as to want to oppose the Olympic games with a new Iron Curtain.

The fact is that imperialism today is no longer capable of doing everything it wants. The world correlation of forces is less and less in its favor.

In such a situation initiatives like those of Edward Gierek, which confirm the fundamentally peaceful nature of the socialist countries' policy, are an immense help in averting the dangers. The Warsaw meeting is evidence of this.

New progress for detente is possible. The arms race can be stopped. But this requires the development of popular action for peace.

DEFENSE MINISTER VIEWS BRUSSELS NATO MEETING, WORLD ISSUES

LD280949 Rome AVANTI in Italian 18-19 May 80 pp 1, 4

[Libero Lizzadri interview with Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio; date, place not given: "NATO and Italy in the Face of Crisis"]

[Text] We asked Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio, on his return from the NATO Council meeting in Brussels, some questions about the Council's work and the new problems which Italy has to face in the present international context.

[Question] NATO is now nearing its 30th anniversary. During this period the old problems have been joined by new ones. Is there a problem regarding how to redefine NATO's strategy? What is your overall assessment of the recent NATO Council meeting?

[Answer] The Atlantic Alliance council was faced with three problems: 1--the major quantitative and qualitative strides made by the Warsaw Pact in its armament; 2--the aggression in Afghanistan; 3--the hypothesis of a threat to the main oil routes, supplying the energy which is a vital necessity for the industrial Western countries.

NATO could not avoid issuing a reply. It could have done so simply by mobilizing its own major military potential or by confirming its role, which is that of a major deterrent force and therefore a force for calm and detente. The latter path was chosen in Brussels. While it was decided to update and strengthen the defense system in Europe, it was also decided to impart a new thrust to the idea that the alliance is a pact among democratic and peaceful nations pursuing convergent objectives of international balance and having equal status and relations based on mutual trust.

So Brussels did not redefine NATO strategy and I do not believe there is any need to go so. NATO is and remains a defensive alliance, geographically delimited, strong and open to dialogue. Outside its own area there can be no automatic military action. If problems emerge (and some have already emerged because the world is now smaller than it was 30 years ago), the NATO countries, remembering that there exist among them not only well defined bonds of military agreement but also bonds of political friendship, can tackle the new emergencies in a framework of mutual solidarity on an equal footing through consultation and cooperation.

[Question] This was the first time that a socialist Italian foreign minister has attended a NATO Council meeting. What was the Italian delegation's contribution to the debate and to the decisions that were taken?

[Answer] Italy clearly stated the points that I have just made and stressed that all the alliance's countries must realize the need to reduce the temperature of the hottest spots of international conflict. This applies particularly to the Persian Gulf area and the Middle East, where the West can count on friendly or nonaligned countries which oppose the alteration of existing international balances.

As for Afghanistan, however, where the temperature is high because the USSR ignited it with with its aggression, there are two conditions that must be observed: the withdrawal of Russian troops and free self-determination for the Afghan people. A substantial contribution was made to this line in Brussels by the FRG, a strong country which speaks out strongly and wants peace with security. The fact that the Italian and German defense ministers are socialists did not pass unnoticed and left its mark.

[Question] What effect will the decisions taken have on our country?

[Answer] On the military plane the main commitment is to increase national defense budgets by 3 percent. In Italy's case this means about 200 billion lire a year. On the more strictly operational plane, the decisions mainly affect our navy in the Mediterranean, whose responsibilities are increased.

[Question] Was there any aftermath in Brussels to the issue of the mooted use of ships from our navy in the Persian Gulf?

[Answer] Nobody mooted anything. I was asked during a press conference whether I had anything to say about an American statement published by a Rome daily concerning the possible use of our navy in the Persian Gulf. I replied that Secretary Brown (it was to him that IL TEMPO attributed the idea of flying U.S. allies' flags in the Indian Ocean) proposed nothing of the kind to me at Monday's meeting. I added the following two points: that the Italian Navy has major and arduous tasks to perform along the Alliance's delicate southern flank in the Mediterranean, where the U.S. presence has decreased ("our flag is where it should be"); and that one cannot hypothesize about an Italian military commitment outside the confines of the Atlantic Alliance.

[Question] What do you think of Deputy Forlani's [Christian Democratic Party chairman] proposal to introduce a Yugoslav-style system of civil defense into our country?

[Answer] The Yugoslav situation is not comparable to ours. Yugoslavia is a neutral country which, by spending a great deal of money, has planned its defense outside any international alliance. A hypothetical aggression would be dealt with by our neighbors with two military instruments: with the regular forces along the borders and subsequent defense of other parts of the national territory; and with partisan civilian guerrilla fighting in the event of the army's defeat. Italy is different for two reasons: 1--because an attack on our country would mobilize NATO; 2--because our defense, in accordance with the Constitution, is entrusted entirely to the regular armed forces. Obviously for any kind of defense to prove victorious it needs not only the essential means to sustain it, but also the committed support of the vast majority of the people. But on the operational plane, this moral involvement has nothing to do with the "people's war" planned by Tito.

[Question] What effect do you expect the implementation of economic sanctions on Iran to have on our economy?

[Answer] If we lost everything we have invested in Iran it would be a heavy blow. Compensation alone for the capital and work we have invested there would cost several trillion lire. But what I must say is that the hostages affair has become a trap--both for the Iranian revolutionaries and for the American people. The hostages represent an intolerable course of events, a violation of the most basic principles of international coexistence. All this justifies any act aimed at releasing the prisoners. But this is the trap. Iran is a friendly country that has carried out a just revolution which we respect; but now, over the hostages, it has taken a collision course with many Western nations which would in fact like to help it. America--and the same applies to us, for that matter--wants the prisoners' release, but in achieving this it risks driving Iran away from its policy of nonalignment. This explains why we socialists--internationally, nationally, in Parliament and within the government--insist that a negotiated solution to the crisis be patiently sought.

[Question] The public is now seriously worried by the current international tension and its consequences. It fears that at some point "the weapons will start shooting of their own accord."

[Answer] The international situation is difficult and complex. People are worried and are talking about war again. But I believe that the world conflicts can still be surmounted through negotiation if the major peace forces (which do exist) do not surrender to the existing objective obstacles and support the principles that international dialogue is still possible. The foreign policy which we socialists are committed to guaranteeing our country with increasing vigor is aimed in this direction. We want to live in friendship with everyone and we believe that the Socialist International can make a decisive contribution to mobilizing a major peace alignment.

COLOMBO, EGYPTIAN MINISTER HOLD TALKS IN ROME

NC290637 Paris AFP in English 0618 GMT 29 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 29 (AFP)--Egypt favours an European peace initiative to help bring about a global Middle East peace settlement, Egyptian Foreign Minister [title as received] Butrus Ghali told his Italian counterpart, Emilio Colombo, on arrival here.

Such an initiative should complement Egyptian efforts to negotiate the question of Palestinian autonomy in keeping with the Camp David peace agreements, Mr. Ghali said. The negotiations were suspended last May 15.

The Middle East situation will be discussed by European Economic Community foreign ministers at the EEC Council meeting in Venice next month, Mr Colombo said.

Mr. Ghali, who handed Mr. Colombo a message from Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat, also commented that Israel must transfer power to Palestinian representatives in the occupied Gaza Strip and Jordanian West Bank.

An Italian Foreign Ministry communique said Egypt believed it most important that efforts to bring about a settlement should not be jeopardized and that differences within the Arab world should be lessened. Yesterday afternoon, Mr. Ghali met with Senate President Amintore Fanfani.

ANGOLAN FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON LISBON TALKS

LD261414 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 26 May 80

[Text] Speaking on departure for Luanda, Angolan Foreign Minister Paulo Jorge said that the meeting he had with his Portuguese counterpart Freitas do Amaral does not warrant any talk of a thaw in Portuguese-Angolan relations. He added that his purpose in attending the meeting was to acquaint himself personally with Freitas do Amaral, with a view to a future development of relations deemed important by the two countries.

For his part, Freitas do Amaral described the meeting, which lasted some 45 minutes, as informal, useful and constructive. He added that it has paved the way for an additional--and longer--meeting that still might take place during 1980.

PCP'S CUNHAL ADDRESSES COMMUNIST YOUTH CONGRESS

[Text] The First Congress of the Portuguese Communist Youth [JCP] concluded its work in Lisbon yesterday with the approval of its organizational principles and an action program. PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal addressed the final session.

The JCP was formed 7 months ago through the merger of the Union of Communist Students with the Union of Communist Youth. It described itself as a vanguard political organization autonomous from the PCP but following the example and the heroic revolutionary traditions of successive generations of young communists. The congress resolutions define the JCP as upholding the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism and stress that its members acquire communist awareness through their collective work, creative activity, study and revolutionary struggle, thus putting into practice the principles that led to the merger of the various youth organizations until recently affiliated to the PCP.

The JCP has a Central Committee with 133 members from all the Portuguese regions, including Madeira and the Azores.

In his speech Alvaro Cunhal started by recalling the successive generations of young communists who, he said, gave proof of great courage and dedication in the struggle for peace, democracy and socialism.

Referring to the present political situation, the PCP secretary general said that the makeshift boat of the Democratic Alliance is beginning to leak like a sieve. He illustrated this assertion by listing as political setbacks for the Sa Carneiro government the unconstitutional pieces of legislation turned down by the Council of the Revolution, the court rulings in favor of the workers, as was recently the case in Beja, the Portuguese Olympic Committee's decision to send a team to the Moscow games and the failure of Sa Carneiro's planned European tour.

Alvaro Cunhal analyzed all the possible constitutional ways of (?bringing down) the government and concluded that the Sa Carneiro administration might find itself out of office before the elections. We shall do our utmost within the Constitution to bring this about, he said. But if it does not happen then the government must be brought down in the next elections.

YA: SPAIN WILL NOT TAKE SANCTIONS AGAINST IRAN

LD281341 Madrid YA in Spanish 22 May 80 p 10

[Jose V. Colchero report: "Spain Will Not Take Part in Sanctions Against Iran"]

[Excerpt] Spain will not take part in the economic sanctions against Iran in accordance with the requests by the United States, which has asked all its allies to sever trade with Khomeyni's regime, and the resolution adopted by the Common Market countries in Naples last weekend. According to what I have been able to discover from highly reliable sources, there is currently a delay on the part of the Madrid government.

New Spanish Ambassador in Tehran Cyarzun has instructions to meet with President Bani-Sadr--and, failing him, with Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh--in an approach parallel to that made unsuccessfully by the Common Market countries' ambassadors. Afterward, he will come and inform Madrid, and a decision will be made for or against an embargo. In fact, what the Madrid government is doing, rather than imposing a delay in the matter, is gaining time, because it is virtually between the devil and the deep blue sea.

PLAN WITH ITALY TO PROPOSE DISARMAMENT TALKS DISCLOSED

[Text] Madrid, May 28 (ANSA)--Italy and Spain plan on using the October meeting here of the countries which signed the Helsinki acts on European security and cooperation to launch the idea of a pan-European conference on conventional disarmament to be attended by nonaligned countries as well, it has been announced here.

The announcement was made by official sources yesterday evening as Italian head-of-state Sandro Pertini wound up a two-day state visit. The sources were unable to fill in any more details of (?the) project immediately. But they said that the two countries were also looking to the meeting on the Helsinki agreements, first checked out two years ago in Belgrade, as an important channel for getting new impetus behind international detente.

According to the sources, who were commenting on a series of high-level meetings here between delegations from the countries this channel must be used adequately in an attempt to reknit the ties of East-West detente.

Pertini flew in on Monday with Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and met with King Juan Carlos later. Yesterday, he met with Spanish Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez while Colombo talked with Spanish diplomatic chief Marcelino Oreja. "Very cordial and fruitful" was Pertini's comment after talks ranging over bilateral problems and international topics such as East-West relations, the underlying reasons for the conflicts in the Middle East and Asia Minor, and Spanish entry into the EEC.

The other focal point of the talks was Spanish entry into the European Economic Community (EEC) with Suarez pointing to the advantages which the Nine would derive from Spain's close relations with Latin America. Pertini, the sources said, replied that, despite the potential economic problems related to Spanish entry, they were far outweighed by the political advantages.

According to the Italian delegation, the major problem was to reform the EEC's Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) which favors crops produced broadly speaking in northern Europe over crops typical of the Mediterranean basin.

In the Italian view, reform of the CAP should also eliminate the premises for dangerous competition between the typical farm products of Italy and its future Iberian EEC partner.

According to observers, Pertini's visit has made a contribution to building up a privileged and constructive relationship between Italy and Spain on the basis of the "coincidence of objectives" that has characterized the Italian delegation's stay.

PSOE'S GONZALEZ ADDRESSES PARLIAMENT ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

LD290216 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1535 GMT 28 May 80

[Speech by Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE], at a parliamentary debate on the socialist motion of censure against the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] government on 28 May--live]

[Excerpts] I would like to speak briefly about the international situation and the subjects of security and freedom. These subjects affect our deliberations on each and every problem--the EEC problem, the energy problem--and these international dimensions are always present. If they are not integrated with our domestic policy plan, they then logically distort the plan and make it lose credibility.

I would like to recall that a situation exists, to which I briefly referred recently, which is exceptionally important. The world is experiencing a time of growing tension between East and West. [sentence indistinct] This tension between East and West exists at a time when preparations are being made in Madrid to hold the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in 4-5 months. In this connection I should stress a point that seems to me to be important so that we may be able to put our international policy and its significance in the necessary context. Ninety percent of the citizens of our country probably do not know that this conference is going to be held in Madrid and they probably do not realize that the government is responsible for organizing it and for giving an active response, before and during the conference, to achieve its greatest possible success.

In my view, international policy should be understood by looking at it in general from two points of view to which I referred in the previous debate, although it was out of context there. East-West relations on a world level are above all relations of hegemonist domination between the great powers. I qualify "above all." North-South relations, a new dimension in international relations, express, on the other hand, a desire for cooperation between rich nations and poor nations. At the moment tension between the great powers is not only threatening world peace, but is preventing an international system of cooperation capable of advancing along the path of overcoming imbalance.

Spain is a middle-range kind of country from a geographic, a geopolitical, and a geostrategic viewpoint. It is a middle-range kind of country which finds itself midway between North and South--which are expressing this desire for cooperation--and midway between the tension between East and West, which is currently dominating the international situation. But there should not be the slightest doubt that Spain is a Western country and consequently comes within the Western orbit, with all its consequences.

Spain must draw all the necessary conclusions from its special situation to define its world role serving, primarily and undoubtedly, the national interest but also serving the great objectives of international peace and cooperation. In our opinion, the maintenance of the status quo in the politics of alliances is not just a problem of ideological debate. It is above all a factor of prime importance in our relations with the Arab countries and the countries of Latin America. By this I mean a maintenance of the status quo which means nonalignment--without this being an international legal status as your excellencies well know--but nonalignment with any of the current blocs, a status quo which means that the current bilateral relationship must be renegotiated.

This maintenance of the status quo has never placed obstacles in the way of the development of our international policy and is not now placing obstacles in the way of another important side of our international policy--now that I have at least made mention in passing of relations with the Arab world and Latin America--that is, the side dealing with our entry into the EEC. The leaders of this economic community increasingly believe that Spain can play a role, precisely because Spain is a country which is not aligned with any of the existing blocs.

I do not want to end without first setting down a few lines of foreign policy: First, the maintenance of the status quo in connection with the blocs; second, an enhancing of the progress of our entry into the EEC, only on a state level--always bearing in mind that foreign policy, because it is a matter of basic importance for the defense of the state interests, must elicit the broadest agreement among everyone--through a policy which integrates not only all the groups represented in the chamber, but which also involves the social and economic forces throughout the negotiating process without a reduction in the government's direct responsibility; third, a systematic development of our potential relations with Latin America and the Arab world and an increase in exchanges and cooperation; fourth, active and efficient contribution to the pacification of the Sahara, in line with the tenets of which you are already aware that we socialists have been maintaining in an attempt to foster at all times the greatest climate of friendship with our neighbors in the Maghreb; fifth, active preparation of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in the few months which we have left so that we can play an honorable part in enhancing peace and cooperation, in short, the success of the conference; and sixth, public information, with as much regard for the preparation of the conference as for the steps to be made in the bilateral negotiation process with the United States. [as heard]

[Text] In the future the state must not buy oil on conditions that can be used to put political pressure on Denmark. Energy Minister Poul Neilson will have to face this demand after the Folketing yesterday confirmed his parliamentary responsibility for contracts concerning state energy purchases.

The demand will be made in the Folketing Energy Committee's meeting on Thursday, after the energy minister yesterday led the Folketing Industry Committee to understand that he could not rule out that future oil purchase contracts would contain conditions similar to those in the contract with Saudi Arabia.

The minister admitted during and after the consultation with the Industry Committee that his announcement that the contract with Saudi Arabia was "above board" was "a little glib." At the same time he continued to deny that he had given the Folketing incorrect information in the oil debate last week when he described the contract as a standard contract comparable to the contracts between Saudi Arabia and Sweden and Finland, respectively. He explained the reason as follows: "I can only say that I made my statement against the background of information that I had been given. There is nothing more to be said."

Folketing member Henning Dyremose (Conservative), who had called for the consultation, said that the minister's statements were "monstrous," "false," and "mistaken" and added: "There are more and more indications that there are more unpleasant conditions in this contract." And because of this he expressed a wish that the contract be debated publicly.

The course of the affair of the contract, which allows Saudi Arabia to suspend oil supplies if it considers that Denmark has "brought discredit" upon the Arabian Kingdom, was discussed yesterday at a ministerial meeting. It was decided that the government and the Social Democratic Party would vote later in the day for the resolution presented by the Liberal and Conservative parties, which confirms the energy minister's responsibility for contracts concerning state energy purchases.

After the ministerial meeting Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen declined to comment on the fact that Finland's agreement with Saudi Arabia does not, as the energy minister claimed, contain clauses equivalent to those in the Danish contract. "We are now taking the matter quietly and will see what we can find out about that," he said.

In the afternoon's subsequent Folketing vote all parties except the Progress Party voted for the Liberal and Conservative resolution. The Progress Party, which had called for the debate, wanted to go even further with a vote of no confidence, but did not win any support for such a move.

The consequences of the vote were immediately stressed by Annelise Gotfredsen (Conservative Party) in a commentary to BERLINGSKE TIDENDE: "Now that the minister's responsibility has been fixed; so that no one can be in any doubt about it, we must demand that assurances are given to the Folketing that future contracts for energy purchases will not contain stipulations that in certain circumstances can be used to put political pressure on Denmark," she said.

"If the minister cannot give clear assurances on this during Thursday's consultation with the Energy Committee, then he will have to give an explanation to the whole Folketing himself. If this is the case, I will give him the opportunity to do so by putting questions to him. I expect that by that time we will have the contract that the minister promised us a week ago, but which we have not yet seen.

"We must remember that the state has set aside 1 billion kroner as a guarantee against the nonfulfillment of oil contracts. The minister was able to get swift approval for this guarantee in the Folketing Finance Committee--despite demands for full treatment in the Folketing itself. Today we know that this happened on incorrect premises. Things cannot go on like this," Annelise Gotfredsen said.

NORWAY'S FOREIGN MINISTER, OLESEN DISCUSS FISHING LIMITS

LD281359 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 24 May 80 p 13

["HR." report: "Danish-Norwegian Conflict on Fishing Limits"]

[Text] Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund was in Copenhagen yesterday for a meeting with his Danish counterpart Kjeld Olesen. The meeting was officially described as "routine", but this time serious questions were on the agenda: the Danish-Norwegian fishing limits.

Norway and Iceland have hurriedly fixed their extended fishing limits and reached agreement on the area where these overlap around the small, uninhabited, rocky island of Jan Mayen, which is the basis Norway insists upon for negotiation. It is generally thought that Norway and Iceland reached agreement so quickly because Norway's biggest problem was still to come: The Norwegian fishing zone will overlap with Greenland's fishing limits once Denmark has extended these latter to 200 nautical miles.

The foreign ministers' meeting in Copenhagen is to be seen as "preliminary skirmishes" before the affair is finally resolved later. It is expected that Denmark will not yield in its demands for new fishing limits, even though this may exclude Norwegian fishermen from Greenland's waters, where the Norwegians traditionally fish.

REACTION CONTINUES TO AKEL CRITICISM OF KIPRIANOU

Kiprianou Reply Planned 31 May

AKEL-Government Contacts Reported

NC281451 Nicosia I MAKHI in Greek 28 May 80 pp 1,8

[Text] According to our exclusive information--which is supported by other information from government circles--a Cyprus Government cadre had, the day before yesterday, contacts with two brothers--AKEL cadres. This meeting took place after telephone instructions were received from Mr Kiprianou in London. The contacts were made in order to continue government-AKEL cooperation, even under new terms, as long as those terms are not painful to the government and, particularly, to President Kiprianou. Furthermore, according to our information AKEL is concluding a secret agreement with pro-Makarios factions for the nomination of a president.

The same circles added that due to these contacts instructions were given to the government spokesman to refrain from making any comment, with the excuse that he had no contact yesterday with the president of the republic who had arrived in Cyprus during the early hours. Also for the same reason, President Kiprianou has not made it clear when he will make a statement on AKEL's resolution. The official announcement was quite general and says that the president "will make a statement within a few days."

This, according to political circles, contradicts the stand that the government had maintained when the president of the Democratic Rally Party was making a statement against the government for mishandling the national issue. The circles remarked that in the case of Kliridhis, the government spokesman was very vocal and...categorical.

Meanwhile, reliable political and diplomatic circles attribute AKEL's action to dissociate its responsibility from the government not only to the fact that the party leadership had sustained unbearable pressure and criticism from the party cadres, but also from some secret agreement. The same circles were maintaining that despite the pressure on the party cadres, AKEL would not have made the antigovernment move if the party leadership had not come to a certain secret agreement with certain factions regarding the presidential elections.

According to our sources the AKEL statement left some doors open for reviving relations with President Kiprianou under conditions that it will submit to him.

The first condition is that the government will follow AKEL's policy on the Cyprus issue instead of the Lissaridhis policy, and that it will accept Waldheim's latest proposal to resume the talks.

The second condition is that Mr Kiprianou must dissolve the present government and the new government must include ministers approved by AKEL.

If these conditions are not met, AKEL will make stronger demands for the president's resignation. Furthermore, AKEL is already working toward this end in collaboration with the pro-Makarios factions.

Official Denial of Contacts

The statement stresses that no such contact has been made and allegations to this effect are absolutely false and baseless.

O AGON Calls for Elections

NC281050 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 28 May 80 p 1

["My Opinion" column by an observer: "Presidential and Parliamentary Elections the Only Solution"]

[Text] In the current situation we see no alternative nor any correct and democratic way of confronting the political crisis, other than the holding of presidential and parliamentary elections.

We sincerely believe that any other solution or any other effort to get around the deadlock will only serve as a temporary remedy. This will not only fail to rectify the situation, not solve the problem and not lead anywhere, but it may ultimately create more explosive situations. It will increase the dangers and spread the chaos.

Why do we support the holding of presidential and parliamentary elections?

The leadership, after everything that has happened, must strongly feel the need for a renewed popular mandate to continue its work. If the leadership does not sense this need and if sticks to the position that it must serve out its term of office, it will be difficult to solve the crisis.

President Kiprianou was elected in 1978 with the people's unanimous support. All political groups supported him. He was supported by Mr Kliridhis, AKEL, EDEK and the Pan-Agrarian Union of Cyprus, as well as by Mr Papadhopoulos and all the pro-Makarios forces.

Today, however, nearly everybody is questioning his ability to lead the people and the correctness of his policy.

Consequently, the president must not only feel the need but must consider it his duty to resort to his people. He must ask the people to decide, through their vote, whether he is to remain their elected leader or whether they denounce his policy.

Democratic rule, the interests of the country and the president's own interests demand this. He cannot be a president who is constantly being questioned. He must turn to the people for clearcut democratic answers.

The present political representation in the House of Representatives does not in any way reflect current political reality and the popular masses' stand. Many things have changed since 1976, much has been destroyed. In the past 2 years, in particular, serious political differences have arisen. The House of Representatives--and this has been stressed by its members--no longer reflects popular sentiment. The people must be given the opportunity to make a new choice.

We believe there is no more room for waiting, indecisiveness and procrastination. The domestic situation demands a permanent solution. Then we will be able, at last, to begin confronting the common enemy. It is imperative to go to the people immediately for only the people's vote can give exact, just and democratic answers.

EDEK COMMENTS ON POLITICAL DEVELOPMENTS, WALDHEIM PROPOSAL

NC271940 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 27 May 80

[Text] Following a study of the recent political and economic developments, the Political Bureau of the socialist party EDEK has issued a statement pointing out the existence of a political and economic crisis; it recommends patriotic unity starting from the bottom of the people's masses on the basis of a solution that would be founded on the UN resolutions and the internationally safeguarded principles and rights.

On the political issue the EDEK statement rejects the Waldheim formula, noting that its acceptance would mean complete abandonment of the idea for the implementation of the UN resolutions, a federal structure and a turn toward a bizonal [solution]. It also attributes the deadlock to the continuing occupation the Turkish intransigence and the suppression of the voice of the Turkish Cypriot masses.

The statement notes, however, the position holding that the Greek Cypriot side is also responsible for the deadlock because of intransigence, undermines the struggle and offers excellent pretexts to the Americans, NATO, Ankara and its representatives here to attribute the responsibility to the Greek Cypriot side for the deadlock in the talks.

With regard to the internal situation, the EDEK statement says that it entails great danger. The statement talks about the lack of a consistent and prudent struggling stand, the hesitation in defining the course, the undermining stand of those who hasten to surrender to the conquerors and talks about the presentation of a multi-faceted official government policy. The statement adds that the country needs a vigorous leadership with a concrete plan and objectives as well as with the will and power, as it puts it, to correctly wage a struggle for national survival and salvation.

On the economic issue, the EDEK statement says that the country's economy is being led toward catastrophe and that the party has dissociated its responsibilities by voting against the budgets.

Concerning the question of the cooperative movement, the statement refers to EDEK's position that there is a need to change the legislation and to exercise control as well as the need to disclose all facts and punish those involved. The statement adds that not only will the cooperative movement survive but, cleansed from rottenness, it will be strengthened and head in the right direction.

UN OFFICIAL CLAIMS 'GAP IS NARROWER' ON TALKS

NC280630 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 28 May 80 p 1

[Excerpts] "The gap is narrower," a senior U.N. official said yesterday about the views of the two sides with regard to the intercommunal talks, but he was unable to say when the talks might resume.

Meanwhile, the U.N. special representative, Mr Hugo Gobbi, and his deputy Mr Gorge, had another meeting with the Foreign Minister Mr Rolandhis in the continuing process of getting differences smoothed enough to allow talks to begin.

These contacts are expected to be given added momentum now with the return to Cyprus of President Kiprianou and the anticipated early return of Turkish Cypriot leader Rauf Denktas who is still in London after his visit to Islamabad for the Islamic conference.

Reliable sources indicated yesterday that a visit by Mr Gobbi to Athens and Ankara is a strong possibility after the consultations at local level reach a sufficiently advanced stage.

These sources suggested that Mr Gobbi might go to Athens and Ankara together with Mr Perez de Cuellar, the UN under secretary general for special political affairs who as former UN special representative in Cyprus is an old hand in the Cyprus problem.

Senior UN sources in Nicosia asked yesterday whether this implied exploration of "new avenues" suggested that this is a good guess.

It is understood that certain ideas are being discussed on which the views of the two sides are being sought in an effort to have a mutually acceptable declaration if and when the parties resume their seats at the negotiating table.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON ISIAMIC CONFERENCE, RESOLUTION

NC281200 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 28 May 80 p 12

[Text] The Islamabad Islamic conference that ended last week "reaffirms its support for the Msulim Turkish Cypriot community of Cyprus and stresses its good intention to contribute to the efforts to find a peaceful solution to the Cyprus issue."

The foreign ministers of the Islamic countries express hope that "the inter-Cypriot talks will be resumed as soon as possible without any further delay. These talks should be conducted in a constructive manner--so that positive results may be found--under the auspices of the UN secretary general."

Commenting yesterday on the Islamic conference, the government spokesman said that its outcome was better and more concrete than the previous one and that the resolution on Cyprus was more objective than before.

In particular, the spokesman pointed out, the latest resolution did not mention the Turkish Cypriot leader, Mr Denktas, who in a previous conference resolution was referred to as president." "In addition, the economic blockade of the Turkish Cypriots was not mentioned" in the latest resolution.

The government spokesman indicated that there were positive points in the resolution as well, in particular, reference was made to the Makarios-Denktas and Kiprianou-Denktas agreements and there was an expression of the hope for the resumption of talks.

According to the spokesman, the Foreign Ministry and information services of the republic had undertaken a campaign abroad to secure favorable results in Islamabad.

The conference resolution supports the principle of "equality" of the two communities in Cyprus in a bicommunal federated state, where the two communities would live side by side, peacefully and securely, without either of them having the right to oppress the other. The resolution calls on the two communities in Cyprus to achieve a peaceful solution through talks.

The resolution also calls for the member-states and Islamic organizations to do whatever is possible so that the Turkish Cypriot community will benefit from the international aid that is granted to Cyprus.

The Islamic countries, finally, call upon the Islamic Development Bank to establish a special fund in order to strengthen, among other things, the economy of the Turkish Cypriot community.

The "foreign minister" of the Denktas administration, Mr Atakol, on his arrival in the occupied territories from Pakistan, has stated that during his visit there, he had useful talks with representatives of various Islamic countries. He described the adoption of the resolution on Cyprus as a success for the Turkish Cypriots, because, for the first time, it refers to the economic condition of the Turkish Cypriot community.

SENIOR GREEK OFFICER DEPARTS AFTER 'DISAGREEMENT'

NC281105 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 28 May 80 pp 1,12

According to I SIMERINI's information, the sudden departure of General Moutousis is due to strong disagreements that had emerged between himself and General Komninos on Cyprus' defense.

Specifically, we were informed that General Moutousis had denounced some of the shortcomings of the national guard and that his suggestions to strengthen the island's defense capabilities were systematically ignored. We were also informed that General Moutousis asked to leave for reasons of principle after sending a serious of reports to the competent authorities. According to our information, General Moutousis' reports include many facts that refer to the condition of the national guard and emphasize the role of General Komninos, who has been in charge of the army since 1975. According to our information, General Moutousis, before his departure, had met Greek Ambassador Mr Zacharakis, whom he briefed on the reasons for his departure from Cyprus, as well as other serious issues that are related to the defense of Cyprus and General Komninos.

Government Denial of Involvement

The spokesman further clarified that General Moutousis' departure was due to reasons absolutely unrelated to the island's defense.

POLICE INVESTIGATING COOPERATIVES, COMMISSIONER AZINAS

NC240735 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 24 May 80 p 1

[Excerpt] The Ministry of Interior yesterday confirmed that police investigations have already started into the question of the cooperatives and that instructions have been given for their completion with all possible speed.

At the same time the ministry kept silent about the deputy attorney general's call for the arrest of the Commissioner of Cooperatives Mr Andreas Azinas, though it did not rule out such a possibility in the future.

"The police shall proceed with the required processes for any additional action if in the progress of investigations it is found that this is necessary," it said.

On the other hand, the Ministry of Commerce and Industry announced that it is asking for more information before deciding on the deputy attorney general's suggestion for suspending Mr Azinas whilst the investigations are proceeding.

Kiprianou on Possible Azinas Arrest

President Spiros Kiprianou is said to have made this statement to his close circles in view of the situation created because of the refusal of the police to carry out the instructions of the republic's deputy attorney general.

President Kiprianou will return to Cyprus next Monday and it is expected that he will deal personally with the state crisis caused by the government's refusal to carry out the instructions of the attorney general.

Averof Visit, Press Conference

AT281851 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1800 GMT 28 May 80

[Text] This evening at 1700 [1400 GMT] the Austrian chancellor visited National Defense Minister Averof at the National Defense General Staff Building and had a private talk with him for 45 minutes. Upon his arrival the Austrian leader was received by Averof, accompanied by Chief of the Army General Staff Lieutenant General Karayiannis. Arms were presented by [word indistinct] of the armed forces and the navy band.

In a press interview this evening, Austrian Chancellor Kreisky stressed that there are no serious problems between Austria and Greece, countries that are linked by a sincere and traditional friendship. At the meetings which I had with government officials, of course, we discussed bilateral relations, especially our relations in the economic sector which I believe offer significant prospects for development. We also discussed issues of international politics. We are small countries, he added, and developments at the international level affect us. We are democracies in the eastern extremity of Europe and we immediately accept the influences on us from events in both Eastern and Western Europe.

In reply to questions, Kreisky said that Austria does not have a direct connection with the Cyprus problem but hopes that Waldheim's efforts will be crowned with success. In connection with international detente, he affirmed that there are seedbeds of crisis in the Middle East, Iran and Afghanistan while calm prevails in Europe, at least partially, and more generally Europe is trying to decrease international tension. I believe, he said, that through patience a gradual solution will be found in all three seedbeds of tension which I have mentioned. Nevertheless, at this moment there is a deterioration. Kreisky added, in connection with the hostages in Tehran, that as he hopes, sooner or later, the hostages will be released if there are no pressures to which the Iranian leaders would not prepared to yield.

Kreisky Entourage

This is refelcted in the fact that his entourage includes Director General Malzacher of the Steyr-Daimler-Puch Automotive Corporation which established an affiliated company in Greece, Steyr-Hellas, in 1972. The Austrian delegation also includes Ambassador Dr Friedrich Bauer of the Austrian Foreign Ministry, as well as chancellery officials Hans Nigisch, Ferdinand Lauina and Press Secretary Petritsch.

AKROPOLIS: PAPANDREOU PREPARING FOR COALITION GOVERNMENT

AT251335 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 25 May 80 pp 1,16

[Excerpt] [PASOK Chairman] Papandreou's intention is for PASOK to participate after the elections in a coalition government and for this reason he is adjusting to the needs of reality.

Of course Papandreou's admitted aim is for the people to entrust him with the responsibility of the country's government, something that does not seem very probable.

In any case, political observers have noted the PASOK chairman's effort to adjust for what he failed to say in his speech at the chamber regarding the government's policy statement.

Specifically, Papandreou said nothing about a nonaligned Greek foreign policy or about our complete withdrawal from NATO and he did not reiterate his opposition to Greece's accession to the EEC.

However, according to the observers, the most significant thing is that the PASOK chairman failed to commit himself to promises to the people regarding PASOK's plans if it were the government.

On the contrary, he tried to dramatize the consequences of the economic situation and the dominant interpretation is that he did so in order to hint that if he assumed power he would not perform miracles.

Obviously this dramatization is reinforced by his view that the Greek economy is on the threshold of bankruptcy.

PASOK's hope, that if it does not win an absolute majority in the next elections--which is doubtful--it will nevertheless be a regulator of the situation, flows from its assessment that it has expanded its popular support. However, at the same time this hope constitutes deliberate tactics--according to observers--to encourage the people to vote for it, thus creating "an atmosphere of power."

At the same time, it seems that Papandreou has been influenced by a passage in Karamanlis' speech upon his election as president of the republic in which he said that he attaches special significance to the consolidation of a calm political life which constitutes the prerequisite for the function of parliamentary democracy "because"--Karamanlis added--"only in this way can the smooth succession to power and political cooperation, when circumstances dictate it, be guaranteed."

It is precisely this possibility for political cooperation, when circumstances dictate it, which has strengthened Papandreou's expectation that it may be possible for his party to participate in the country's government.

Therefore, because of this prospect, the PASOK chairman is forced to adjust his policy to remove the points which cause dispute and consequently render impossible his participation in a government, because cooperation is unfeasible when there is an unbridgeable difference in political positions.

NEW DEMOCRACY, PASOK ACCORD ON 'SINK THE HORA' SCORED

[Editorial: "'New Democracy' and PASOK Have Caused National Damage: The Revelations About the Slogan 'Sink the Hora'"]

[Text] During the chamber meeting on Friday, 23 May 1980, faced with the insults of the government party about that famous slogan, "sink the Hora" (he had said that on 8 August 1976 in Alexandhroupolis), leader of official opposition A.G. Papandreou lost his equanimity and was no longer able to keep...his secret. According to the minutes that were published the following exchange took place:

Papandreou: Many times I have been the recipient of barrages from the government and the press on this slogan "sink the hora." Unfortunately, I have made a commitment and I am not in a position to speak, regardless of the damage this might cause, because I respect common decisions on critical issues. I am not in a position to say more, but if this story does not stop I shall be obliged some day to violate my promise and talk.

Averof: With regard to what you said first, this is the first time you have said it. When a leader or any member of the Parliament cites reasons of national interest in order not to explain something, the government and everyone else is obliged to respect that statement. I hope you will respect it too when the government tells you that it cannot speak about certain things because it may damage national interests.

P. Kanellopoulos: Mr Prime Minister, I would like to assure the chamber that indeed the PASOK chairman said those words for a certain national purpose. In August 1976 when we met and I asked him how he reached the point of making such a statement he gave me assurances about it. He told me why he had done it and I was assured that he did it for national reasons.

Papandreou: I want to thank Chairman Kanellopoulos because he confirmed exactly what I said.

On the next day, a newspaper friendly to both K. Karamanlis and A.G. Papandreou made the following frontpage statement which has not been denied:

"The 'sink the Hora' slogan was the product of a personal agreement between K. Karamanlis and A. Papandreou during the dramatic summer of 1976 when the Turkish provocations reached their peak with the dispatch of the seismographic vessel to the Aegean for undersea explorations of the Greek continental shelf...."

Prime Minister Y.I. Rallis and National Defense Minister Evangelos Averof were surprised by the PASOK chairman's statement that "sink the Hora" was a slogan within the framework of "common decisions on critical issues"!! It has been reported that both the prime minister and the national defense minister hastened to phone President K. Karamanlis to learn what it was all about...because for almost 4 years the top collaborators of K. Karamanlis did not know that the "sink the Hora" slogan had been uttered after a "common agreement...."! Meanwhile, A.G. Papandreou had been taking their propaganda attacks which made him look fickle and irresponsible while PASOK capitalized on the extremely nationalistic slogan during the elections of 20 November 1977. This is one aspect of the issue.

However, there is another aspect. The lack of coordination among government leaders of New Democracy resulted in A.G. Papandreou's outburst and revelation that the "sink the Hora" slogan was nothing but a "bluff" to scare the Turks and make the Americans and NATO worry!! Now all the interested parties know the truth....From this point of view, A.G. Papandreou indeed revealed a national secret!! Perhaps his action is mitigated because he was provoked by those people he thought were aware of the situation or were at least guided by K. Karamanlis not to annoy him on the "common decision."

Both parties are responsible for having caused national damage. Consequently K. Karamanlis was not wrong when he spoke about an "operetta state...." The difference is that his description is valid for the political situation in his day....

FOREIGN OIL COMPANIES INTERESTED IN OIL PROSPECTING

AT231355 Athens ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS in Greek 23 May 80 p 12

[Text] The sea area from the Bay of Thessaloniki to the Dhodhekanisos Islands is now drawing the interest of the competent services for oil prospecting in Greece. However, it should be noted that this interest was aroused by foreign companies seeking to sign agreements for prospecting in the above-mentioned large area.

This fact has drawn the attention of officials regarding the possible motives prompting foreign companies to focus their attention on the Bay of Thessaloniki and the northwestern Aegean since this area had been completely "unexplored" to date although it was included in possible oil-bearing areas.

The only company which carried out explorations several years ago was the Esso company which, however, quickly abandoned the effort deciding at the time the area lacked interest.

The competent services are considering the fact that all these foreign companies suddenly focused their interest on this area as "serious" although they do not preclude the possibility of a coincidence.

In any case, currently the most substantial hopes for finding oil continue to be placed in prospecting by the public oil corporation in the Ionian Sea where large quantities of black gold are expected to be found.

Ecevit Call for Effective Security

TA281800 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 28 May 80

[Text] RPP [Republican People's Party] leader Bulent Ecevit has called on the government to ensure security of life throughout the country fully and immediately. In a written statement in Ankara today, Ecevit said that Nationalist Action Party deputy leader Gun Sazak's murder was extremely sad. He said: Unless the state displays the necessary effectiveness immediately against the widespread and terrifying acts of those who are trying to escalate such acts into a civil war through mass terrorism and to destroy the state and democracy, it might be too late to prevent Turkey from quickly sinking into much darker times.

Ecevit pointed out that the assassination of the deputy leader of a party showed the dimensions terrorism had reached in Turkey. Ecevit added: A situation at least as grave as that is the exploitation of the grief and reaction triggered by such a murder and the spreading of mass terrorism like a fire through the various parts of the country.

In his written statement Ecevit said: Meanwhile, the RPP--which has always categorically remained outside and against all kinds of terrorism--and its leaders are being openly pointed out as targets. On the one hand certain circles are advising so-called moderation and on the other they are spilling oil on the fires being set ablaze in the four corners of the country. We want the government to take the necessary state measures without wasting a single minute against the instigators, organizers and implementors of this mass terrorism and to fully ensure security of life in the entire country without delay.

Turkes Blames Ecevit

[Text] Nationalist Action Party [NAP] leader Alpaslan Turkes said that NAP deputy leader Gun Sazak was murdered by those who wanted to provoke an internal strife. At a press conference he held in Istanbul today, Turkes said: This plot should be foiled through our coolheaded, patient and calm stand. Turkes claimed that several NAP members and idealists were killed following statements by RPP leader Bulent Ecevit against his party members and nationalists in general.

Noting that Ecevit had attacked his party with lies and slanders in his speech in Kayseri, Turkes said that in his statements Ecevit presented the nationalists to the public as the guilty ones. Claiming that in his Kayseri speech Ecevit had presented new targets to the communist and divisive murder gangs, Turkes said: It is clear that Ecevit has incited the murderers against NAP followers.

Claiming that attacks on his party officials and members were intensified following Ecevit's remarks in Kayseri, Turkes added that the NAP Safranbolu and Yenimahalle District leaders were attacked and NAP deputy leader Gun Sazak was killed as a result of these incitements. Denouncing Ecevit as the person responsible for the bloodshed, Turkes added: Ecevit is morally responsible for every shot fired by the communist and divisive murder gangs. For years Ecevit has defended the communists and divisionists, supported them and established the unity of action and a front with them. He has conveyed messages to murder gangs through his statements.

Turkes also said that no attack or terrorist incident would intimidate his party. He said that the struggle would be waged within the framework of law and regulations. Turkes concluded his news conference by stating that Sazak, who was killed by terrorists, was a Turkish nationalist and a statesman who fought for the survival of the state and for the unity of the nation and the country.

In Yozgat as well as the Cumra District of Konya a curfew has been declared from 2000 until tomorrow morning.

DEMIREL MEETS WITH ECEVIT ON CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

[Excerpts] Justice Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel and RPP leader Ecevit met today to discuss the issue of presidential elections. The talks, which lasted 50 minutes, were held at Demirel's parliamentary office at 1700. In a statement following the meeting Demirel said that he would continue to defend his party's constitutional amendment proposal for the election of the president but that this did not mean that they would turn a deaf ear to practical solutions.

Demirel continued: We are ready to reassess the RPP proposals. The Justice Party Administrative Council will now be meeting and the pros and cons of these proposals will be considered by our colleagues. Pointing out that, following the Council of Ministers meeting tomorrow, this issue would again be discussed with Ecevit, Demirel said that the constitutional amendment bill would be submitted to the parliament tomorrow. Expressing his belief that, in the end, their proposal would be accepted, Demirel said: As long as the parliament is fragmented, the election of a president by the majority of the parliament will continue to produce the same difficulties.

In one way or another, the president will have to be elected by the nation. We believe that it is best that this should be done as soon as possible. We will insist on our proposal, but this should not mean that we will reject all other proposals. If there is a positive proposal we are ready to discuss it and to find a path that will lead to a solution to this problem.

Noting that the killing of NAP deputy leader Gun Sazak was also discussed during their meeting with Ecevit, Demirel said: I am extremely grieved by the killing of Sazak. We discussed this incident. I recommend calm to all my citizens. I am calling on our citizens for their cooperation. Our efforts to preserve peace and public order in Turkey must be supported. Help must be extended to our security forces. The incident is very grave. It is a fact that such incidents are a constant cause of grief in Turkey. Nevertheless, Turkey must preserve its calm and we must be assisted in our efforts in doing so. These issues were brought up during our talks.

In a statement following the meeting, RPP leader Ecevit recalled that all constitutional possibilities for the election of a president in Turkey had not been exhausted. He added that during the talks he cited the example of the dialogue between the two big parties, which resulted in a process that made it possible to elect the former president and the Senate and Assembly presidents. Ecevit said that he insisted that such means should be used extensively in this instance as well.

Ecevit said that he told Demirel that the method proposed by the RPP for the election of the president, which was refused by the Justice Party, should be considered once more under the present circumstances. Ecevit explained that the RPP proposal consisted of the democratic elimination of the weaker candidates, allowing the strongest candidate to be elected. Ecevit said that Demirel promised him that this proposal would be considered by the Justice Party Administrative Council.

In reply to a question by a journalist, Ecevit said that he would meet with National Salvation Party leader Necmettin Erbakan and that he considered this beneficial.

Following the Demirel-Ecevit meeting, the Justice Party Administrative Council met at 1830.

Tuzun also noted that the joint parliamentary group will continue to discuss the presidential election issue. The Senate and National Assembly will meet jointly at 1500 to continue voting for a president.

The Mexican delegation and Canadian officials analyzed problems concerning the export of Mexican oil to Canada, the transfer of Canadian technology and important world problems, including the North-South dialogue.

Industrial, Energy Cooperation Agreement

PA281821 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2049 GMT 27 May 80

[By Julian Martinez]

[Text] Ottawa, 27 May (EFE)--Canada and Mexico today signed an industrial and energy cooperation agreement, coinciding with the visit of Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo to this country.

Mexico will supply Canada 50,000 barrels of oil daily, and the agreement, signed in the presence of President Lopez Portillo and Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, also includes development projects in mining, telecommunications, and transportation fields as well as the sale of oil and gas equipment.

The Canadian commerce minister will travel to Mexico in July heading a group of Canadian businessmen to explore the possibility of greater Mexican-Canadian cooperation in transportation, forestry, mining, farming and fishing machinery.

In the field of energy cooperation, Canada will help in the exploration of uranium and coal in Mexico.

Canada is interested in offering Mexico the "Candu" nuclear reactor. On this issue, however, President Lopez Portillo today said that "Mexico has oil and can wait many years to observe the development of nuclear technology and its possible advances in the use of the atom to produce energy."

The joint Canadian-Mexican communique notes that both countries agree to turn down informal U.S. proposals for a trilateral economic cooperation between Canada, Mexico and the United States.

Lopez Portillo reiterated--as he did in his speech yesterday before the Canadian Parliament--that the proposals for a U.S. Common Market "are incompatible with the objectives of Mexico's social and economic development, in view of the great difference between the development levels of the three countries."

Canada also turned down the informal proposals made in political and economic circles of Washington in favor of a U.S. Common Market, which would give the United States access to the important energy resources of its neighbors, Mexico and Canada.

Regarding political subjects, the joint communique notes the situation in Afghanistan and the position of both countries expressed at the United Nations

Lopez Portillo and Trudeau expressed satisfaction at the progress achieved in Latin America and the Caribbean in recent years toward greater respect of human rights and the democratic ideals. They noted, however, their concern for the growing socio-economic instability in some countries.

Both leaders "expressed their wish that these problems be solved promptly through the free will of the respective countries, without any foreign intervention."

The Mexican chief of state told a new conference that this trip through four countries and which ends in Canada has confirmed all its objectives; that he is "fully satisfied with the bilateral agreements signed."

Lopez Portillo rejected the possibility of increasing Mexican oil production and said during his mandate, he will fulfill the promises made to the Mexican people to turn oil into development.

The Mexican president concludes his official visit to Canada tomorrow in Toronto, capital of the rich province of Ontario, where he will meet with a group of businessmen, hosted by the "Canadian Club" and the "Canadian Association for Latin America and the Caribbean."

MINISTERS AGREE ON CUT IN UK BUDGET CONTRIBUTION

NC300930 Paris AFP in English 0928 GMT 30 May 80

[Text] Brussels, May 30 (AFP)--Foreign ministers of the European Economic Community (EEC) today agreed to a substantial cut in the British contribution to the EEC budget, after a meeting that lasted 18 hours.

The draft settlement was then going to the nine EEC governments, who were to notify their verdict on the plan to the EEC president, probably later today.

A French official said British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington believed he could persuade British Premier Margaret Thatcher to accept the settlement.

EEC sources said that, short of a last minute surprise, the agreement on the British budget contribution would be accepted by the nine governments.

On this settlement depends a five per cent increase in EEC farm prices.

The French official said that, while France had obtained major assurances in the agricultural sector, it would accept the 1981 cut in Britain's contribution only if 1981-82 farm prices are fixed in advance.

The French view is upheld by Ireland, the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg, he said.

EEC President Emilio Colombo, the Italian foreign minister, said all the foreign ministers pledged they would personally recommend acceptance of the settlement by their governments.

The agreement was "very balanced and allowed for the positions of all members," he said.

Meanwhile the EEC agriculture ministers here today agreed farm prices and a sheepmeat arrangement to be applied from June 1.

Proposals Detailed

LD300909 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0825 GMT 30 May 80

[By Geoffrey Meade, PA staff reporter in Brussels]

[Excerpt] Mrs Thatcher was this morning offered a new deal in Brussels in her bid for a substantial cut in Britain's Common Market budget payments.

The latest proposal came towards the end of a gruelling all-night meeting of EEC foreign ministers in Brussels--but amounts to no more than the broad outline of a settlement, which must ultimately include increased Community farm prices and an end to the "lamb war" between Britain and France.

It is understood that a six-paragraph compromise paper on agricultural problems, studied by the ministers, did not fully satisfy Britain.

French sources said Britain's Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington thought the proposals, to be spread over two years, were not sufficient. But they quoted him as saying "I recognise it is everyone's last card and I will tell my government and let you know its point of view".

The new figures, reducing Britain's net contribution for 1980 and 1981 to levels round about those offered to the prime minister at the abortive Luxembourg summit, are contained in part of a text which the nine foreign ministers will now take for further consideration.

It will require lengthy consideration before the prime minister and her Cabinet give their answer, which officials in Brussels were today suggesting could be as soon as 48 hours.

More than 18 hours of talks, during which several complex proposals were tabled, are considered to have made substantial progress, but have clearly come nowhere near the full settlement of the budget dispute that had been hoped for by this weekend.

If Mrs Thatcher accepts the deal, her net budget contribution this year will be reduced from an estimated 1.1 billion pounds to 371 million pounds. Next year the reduction would be from an estimated 1.3 million [as received] pounds to about 445 million pounds. And for 1982 the Commission in Brussels would make proposals along the same arithmetical lines as the previous two years, depending on what Britain's net contribution would be likely to reach before any cuts.

Along with this budget document, Lord Carrington will be returning to London with the texts of last night's agreement on EEC farm price rises and an end to the protracted "lamb war"--agreements which can only come into force when the budget deal is finalised.

The farm package, which also includes safeguards for New Zealand lamb, was hammered out by Mr Peter Walker and fellow farm ministers also meeting in Brussels in the hope that it would speed a budget agreement.

Early today there was little indication of how successful the budget talks are considered to have been, but the fact that the problem is still not resolved may lead to a new dispute in the Common Market next week.

France has threatened to take unilateral action to provide financial support for her farmers if the new 5 percent average EEC farm price rises are not in forcy by Monday.

With no final agreement on the budget, the farm package does not come into effect and it is now up to the French Government to decide whether to risk a fresh dispute which would only further undermine strained Community relationships.

EEC spokesmen today stressed they were not formally committed to the plan, but it appeared to be the most detailed proposal under consideration since the budget fight began last year.

And when asked the reaction of Lord Carrington, his official spokesman said "he did not commit himself to the figures, but he recognises that nothing can be done at this stage.

"You can't say Lord Carrington is behind them, but we have the solid figures and that's quite a long way down the road".

Several delegations, notably France, are understood to have insisted on the inclusion of a clause forbidding Britain to veto farm price rises during the period covered by the compromise. Britain has been holding up agreement on prices this year as a bargaining tool to get other governments to agree to a budget settlement and to protest the spiralling rises in farm costs.

GERMAN-SOVIET ECONOMIC COMMISSION CONVENES 29 MAY

[Text] Bonn--Despite the present international tension that arose following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, Bonn and Moscow are striving to prevent an interruption of their political and economic contacts. This desire, evident on both sides, became clear on the first day of the meeting of the German-Soviet Economic Commission in Bonn under the chairmanship of Nikolay Tikhonov, first Soviet deputy premier, and Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff. Both sides assessed the session of the commission--originally planned for early January but postponed at Soviet request--as a "signal toward detente."

On the first day of the commission meeting, scheduled to last 2 days, the two delegations agreed on a long-term economic program and on economic and industrial cooperation between the USSR and the Federal Republic over the next 25 years. This program is to give substance to the long-term cooperation set out in the framework agreement of 1978. Bonn maintains that this program, which is now to be submitted to the governments, can be signed in the foreseeable future.

The main emphasis of the envisaged cooperation is in the areas of energy, raw materials and metal processing. Under the program the Federal Republic is to take a greater part in future in the exploration of natural gas and oil on Soviet coasts. The USSR is already the major natural gas supplier of the Federal Republic; approximately 25 percent of all German natural gas imports come from the Soviet Union.

In the opinion of the German commission, the program may be taken into account already in the elaboration of the new Soviet 5-year plan for 1981-86.

The Soviet Union is the fifth largest economic partner of the Federal Republic outside the EC. Last year's volume of trade between the two countries amounted to approximately DM14 billion, but Soviet exports to the Federal Republic were higher than German exports. In the first quarter of this year German exports, however, overtook Soviet exports to the Federal Republic, which consist basically of natural gas, (oil) and raw materials.

It was learned that the impact of possible trade restrictions on German-Soviet economic relations were not mentioned at the commission session. In the past few weeks the Federal Government has repeatedly made it clear that it was opposed to Germany going it alone in possible trade sanctions against Moscow, but that it would not oppose an expansion of the so-called COCOM list, which specifies strategic goods banned from export to the Soviet Union.

During his visit in Bonn, Tikhonov is to meet Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on Friday at the end of the commission session. It is expected that one of the topics could be the chancellor's trip to Moscow proposed for 30 (June). Tikhonov is the first leading Soviet politician to visit the Federal Republic since the Afghanistan crisis.

Lambsdorff Hosts Dinner

[Text] Bonn--Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff has made an appeal that even in the present difficult international situation the dialogue between East and West should not be disrupted.

At a dinner in Bonn tonight on the occasion of the ninth session of the German-Soviet Economic Commission, Lambsdorff said that, on the contrary, every opportunity should be seized to correct tendencies toward following a wrong direction in relations between East and West. The continuance of the economic dialogue is part of the Western readiness for talks.

The Soviet delegation is led by Deputy Premier Tikhonov who will meet Chancellor Schmidt tomorrow.

In his toast Lambsdorff demanded that the detente which has been achieved in Europe must be preserved so that Europe could contribute to the peaceful solution of conflicts in other parts of the world. "This means that we should pointedly observe all bilateral and multilateral agreements between Eastern and Western Europe, and we expect (the same) of our partners." Lambsdorff concluded by appealing to the USSR to realistically assess NATO's negotiating package on counterarming and arms control.

Lambsdorff said the commission had never before met in such an internationally difficult situation. He described economic relations between the two countries as well developed and capable of further extension. The economics minister stressed that relations must also be seen against the international background "from which, at present, no stabilising, let alone encouraging impulses can be expected." The minister said that relations between the great powers had been upset. "On many hotbeds of crises in the world--especially on Afghanistan, Iran, the Middle East conflict--they hold different views." For German policy, too, the world does not end at the borders of Europe.

Lambsdorff mentioned the situation in Afghanistan. He said the German attitude in this respect is known to the Soviets from the results of voting at the United Nations. Federal Foreign Minister Genscher had recently explained it once again to Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, in Vienna. "Not to recall this today might be very courteous but insincere," Lambsdorff said.

DPA: U.S., SOVIET ENVOYS MEET IN WEST BERLIN

[Text] Berlin--The U.S. ambassador in Bonn, Walter J. Stoessel, had a meeting in West Berlin today with the Soviet ambassador in the GDR, Petr Abrasimov. According to U.S. sources the two politicians exchanged views on "questions of mutual interest." The talk proceeded in a "businesslike, frank atmosphere." The meeting took place during a dinner at Stoessel's residence in the U.S. sector of Berlin.

SCHMIDT PLEADS FOR UNDERSTANDING FOR U.S., CRITICIZES USSR

[Text] Munich--At a works meeting at the MAN [Augsberg-Nuernberg Machine Factory, Inc.] plant in Munich today Chancellor Schmidt pleaded for understanding for the Americans. In view of the detention of the U.S. hostages in Iran, which has lasted now for over 6 months, Schmidt recalled the kidnapping of President Schleyer of the employers' federation and the hijacking of the Lufthansa plane "Landshut" which he said ended "with much luck" in Mogadishu thanks to the solidarity of the Somali Government. At that time, 2 ½ years ago, many people in the Federal Republic were "filled with impotent rage" and "pretty wicked thoughts" had made the rounds, not only in the bars. Yet Schleyer's abduction lasted only 6 weeks while the suffering of the Americans started over 6 months ago. Schmidt said he was "proud that even during that time of bitterness we did not violate the law."

The chancellor again criticized the Soviet incursion into Afghanistan. Just as 12 years ago in Czechoslovakia and Hungary in 1956, the Soviets sent their troops "where they have no business to be." The Federal Republic wanted to help to get East and West talking to each other again and to understand each other's aims, fears and interests. "We do not wish to have anything to do with boastfulness and pretentiousness," Schmidt added amid applause. "We wish to serve peace."

SCHMIDT RECEIVES BRAZILIAN FOREIGN MINISTER

LD292050 Hamburg DPA in German 1959 GMT 29 May 80

[Text] Bonn--Chancellor Schmidt tonight received Brazilian Foreign Minister Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro, who is currently in Bonn for talks. According to a government spokesman, their hour-long exchange of views mainly concerned Brazil's and Latin America's political and economic development. They also discussed the effect of the present international situation on Europe.

MINISTER OFFERGELD MEETS WITH SENEGAL, MALI HEADS OF STATE

[Summary] Bonn--Economic Cooperation Minister Offergeld had a meeting at Gymnich near Bonn today with the heads of state Leopold Sedar Senghor of Senegal and Moussa Traore of Mali, to discuss a joint project to dam the River Senegal at two points. The project is to be partly financed by Bonn. Mauritanian head of state Khouna Ould Haydala, who was to have taken part in the talk, did not in fact come to Bonn. Offergeld paid tribute to the cooperation of the three states as a particularly good example of how major development projects could be realized on a regional basis.

FINANCE MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON RIYADH VISIT

DW281057 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 1230 GMT 27 May 80

[Excerpts from interview by reporter Arnold with Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer; date, place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] In contrast to the oil crisis in the early seventies, the present situation is characterized by an increasing imbalance with regard to the balance of payments. Industrial nations are in trouble. This is the first time that the Federal Republic has deficits. Oil-exporting countries, the OPEC countries, however, have surpluses. This problem was surely discussed in your talks in Saudi Arabia. What possible solutions were discussed in this connection?

[Answer] Yes, that is quite right. If we do not succeed in recycling the great monetary surpluses back into international circulation, back to the deficit countries, collapses and international crises could come about with aftereffects which we must avoid in any case.

Thus we first discussed how the Saudis view the functioning of the international banking system. We are of the opinion that it functions most satisfactorily and that it takes care of a great part of the recycling problem. From a national standpoint we have to consider how the subsidiaries of German banks abroad can avoid getting into difficulties that would have an effect on the German parent banks. A better reporting system is certainly necessary in this respect, a system that is being organized by the bank for international balance of payments in Basel. We want to intensify and improve it.

The international institutions, the International Monetary Fund, ought to borrow more money from the oil countries and pass it on with the use of subsidies to developing countries which are suffering. Part of the problem could be solved in this way.

[Question] Does Saudi Arabia also advocate the view that the International Monetary Fund ought to borrow more money from the OPEC countries?

[Answer] The Saudis share our view that the role of the fund in the international currency system should be strengthened, and we discussed a number of proposals as to how this could be done.

[Question] Just a few months ago the Federal Republic contracted a credit of roughly DM3 billion in Saudi Arabia. Will this remain a step which is the exception to the rule or will this happen more often?

[Answer] We are keeping open toward the Saudis the option of further services, the offer of investments, but at the moment we do not plan to obtain any more credits there.

[Question] If a country like the Federal Republic, which is dependent on oil, borrows from a country that has oil, does this not enhance the dependence?

[Answer] Yes, but you must realize that we also grant credits to the Saudis. The Federal Government guarantees well over DM6 to DM7 billion in bank credits which were required to finance export transactions, so an interdependence does exist here. But it really is mutual because they need our know-how, our industrial products; they also need our country for investing their surpluses. But it is necessary to stress time and again that we can get away from our trade balance deficit only if we consume less oil.

DIE WELT ON DKP FINANCING CAMPAIGN, TUDEH TIES

DW271110 Bonn DIE WELT in German 24/25 May 80 p 2

[Heinz Vielain article: "DKP Wages Election Campaign on Borrowed Money"]

[Text] Bonn--Having obviously run into financial difficulties, the communists plan to carry out a "Bundestag election campaign on credit." According to information provided by state protection authorities, all DKP candidates have been asked to obtain small loans of DM3,000 to DM5,000 from banks and savings banks.

The funds for the loan repayment installments are to be raised by a drive currently carried out by the DKP under the motto "material solidarity." The findings of the security authorities indicate that the DKP leadership has imposed special austerity measures on all subordinate organizations, among other things the curtailment of trips by delegations. Individual district organizations reportedly reached to this imposition with a cancellation of visits to fraternal parties in the "GDR" and in other East bloc states.

According to information in the state protection sector, the DKP has established new, close contacts with the Iranian communist Tudeh Party. In mid-January a delegation from Tehran conducted talks with the DKP party executive board. Security authorities have learned from the confidential talks that Tudeh official, Dr Baghai, declared on this occasion that his party indeed has reservations about Ayatollah Khomeyni yet it identifies itself with the latter's "campaign against U.S. imperialism." Iran at present is in a "revolutionary preliminary stage" with specifically Islamic characteristics, he said.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE SKEPTICAL ABOUT U.S.-PRC FRIENDSHIP

[Commentary signed Hr.: "The New Friends"]

[Text] What matters in politics and in business is not whether partners like each other but whether or not their interests are in harmony. The U.S. President has termed China the new, great friend of the United States. This is an inexpensive form of politeness, particularly toward a guest from the country of smiles, but, after all the speeches, it must be assessed as amounting to as much or as little as remains in the way of common interests and of the will and capability to look after them.

Such interests quickly become obvious, perhaps too quickly, if and when one casts a glance at the common antagonist, the Soviet Union. In that respect, Americans and Chinese possibly have more in common than have Washington and some of its European allies. But this game among three great parties is devised on a long-term basis and is played with the help of all sorts of fiction, above all, with the idea that China now really is a power to be reckoned with and that this is not based only on hopes. This third world power, however, is just emerging. In Indochina it succeeded in saving face only with effort. It did not even venture to run the risk of an appearance as a power, and not just as an authority, in Afghanistan. Viewed from this angle the fact that the United States treats Beijing as a world power is an advance concession which will first have to be honored on a small scale. The visitor from China seems to be doing just that in Washington now by "assuring" the Americans that North Korea will not exploit the confusion in the south of the peninsula for another conflict.

The prospects emerging from this new friendship in the long run and on a large scale, however, are bound to remain speculative. By its character China belongs more to the states of the Third World, to the diffuse power of the "south" with which the industrial states will have to wage the next great dispute that it does to the classical powers of the north. Will the common interests whose conformity have now been celebrated in Washington outlive at least the interim phase up to this new struggle for survival? The friendship of the United States with "Joe" Stalin, for example, lasted only as long as Stalin needed it for his victory.

COMMENTATOR ON CONFLICT OVER U.S. DEFENSE SPENDING INCREASE

DW300835 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 30 May 80 p 4

[Commentary signed A.: "Carter Against More Money for Guns"]

[Text] Does the United States spend too much or too little money on its defense? Actually this question cannot be answered. It cannot avoid awakening emotions because in matters of armament the limits between too much and too little can never be drawn. Moreover, they will always be flexible depending on the state of armament of potential adversaries. So, is $154 billion too much or too little for America?

President Carter has become involved in a conflict with Congress over arms expenditures for the 1981 fiscal year because his government does not want to spend more on defense than the parliamentarians, but less. The joint draft for the defense budget, worked out by both houses of Congress, envisages $3 billion more than Carter. An amount of $3 billion more or less in a total U.S. budget of $613 billion does not matter very much. But, due to the almost automatic rate of increase of America's defense expenditures, this increase would lead to an increase in military expenditures in the next 5 years of about $40 billion. The quarrel discloses the bind the American policy must face in this year of crises which simultaneously is also an election year: the required and publicly justifiable expenditures for butter and guns.

Carter considers the additional military expeditures unnecessary. In the forthcoming recession he want to have more money for social expenditures of all kinds, and the need of many big cities seems a more urgent problem for him than even more missiles. But the president is only facing the specters he himself conjured up: He who paints the danger of war in such striking colors as he did just recently should not be puzzled by the consequences.

CARTER'S OLYMPIC BOYCOTT YIELDS 'SMALL CONSOLATION'

DW291053 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 29 May 80 p 3

[Commentary signed Hd.: "Offside"]

[Text] The hopes of U.S. President Jimmy Carter that, apart from his own, about 60 other national Olympic committees would boycott the games in Moscow, have failed to materialize. At least 84 nations will march into the stadium with their teams on 19 July. Their number was greater only four times in Olympic history. A mere 36 national Olympic committees followed Carter's boycott appeal.

The responsible people in Moscow can heave a sigh of relief. The greatest sports spectacle of the world, held in the East bloc for the first time, will not be reduced to a farce. The situation is different in the camp of those who decided for the boycott more or less with a heavy heart. While Carter is left with the small consolation of having three of the most important allies on his side--Japan, Canada and the Federal Republic--the FRG Germans find themselves somewhat offside when it comes to the European countries surrounding them. Of the 34 European countries represented in the International Olympic Committee (IOC), 28 will send their Olympic teams to Moscow. The Federal Republic, the only boycotting EC member, is in the same formation with Albania, Liechtenstein, Monaco, Norway and Turkey.

In this country the boycott decision spells a defeat for sports and, above all, for sportsmen. It is impossible as yet to tell conclusively whether politics and the politicians will be able to chalk up a success or whether Carter's initiative will boomerang. One thing, however, can be ascertained even now by the example of this curbed boycott--namely, that sports cannot so easily be used as a suitable instrument of politics. But then this experience was gained by others even prior to the United States, last but not least by the USSR.

COOPERATION AGREEMENTS RESULT FROM LOPEZ PORTILLO VISIT

[Unattributed report: "Mexico and France Increase Their Economic Cooperation"]

[Text] President Lopez Portillo ended a 3-day visit to France on Sunday, 18 May. The joint communique published on 17 May announced the start of negotiations in June aimed at concluding "as quickly as possible" a broad economic cooperation agreement between Paris and Mexico. This visit, reciprocating President Giscard d'Estaing's visit to Mexico in March 1979, proved that, in the diplomatic sphere, the two countries share the same view on many issues and are equally concerned by current international tension and equally anxious to oppose the blocs' hegemony.

During President Lopez Portillo's visit to Paris, Mexico and France drew up a "general plan" for economic cooperation which quickly be confirmed by the conclusion of a long-term agreement. This plan notably makes provision for the development of Mexican exports of conventional finished and semifinished products, investment plans and the broadening of technological cooperation and professional training.

To facilitate the implementation of this plan the Banque Nationale de Paris and the Societe Generale have decided to grant Mexico FR300 million in credit within the framework of the FR1 billion ceiling given during Mr Giscard d'Estaing's visit to Mexico in March 1979. So far Fr270 million have been used. The first loan amounts to Fr270 million for 5 years with a fixed 14 percent interest rate. The second amounts to Fr270 million given for a period of 8 years with a 6-year period of grace. A third loan has been agreed and this will be devoted to developing the fishing industry and the engineering industries.

In addition, three technical agreements have been signed by Mexican Foreign Minister Jorge Castaneda and French Foreign Trade Minister Jean-Francois Deniau. The first relates to the development of the agricultural and food industries "in advance of possible further contacts between specific enterprises." The second relates to the development of animal products (livestock raising and dairy produce). The third relates to agricultural mechanization on a small and medium scale. These three documents are part of the agricultural cooperation framework agreement signed in March 1979.

Finally, an agreement was signed which aims to encourage social tourism and regional development. In addition, France is to assist in developing ports and electrifying the Mexico City-Irapuato railroad and in developing transport and coordination between airports. Other sectors affected by cooperation include chemicals, petrochemicals, mining, metallurgy and the iron and steel industry.

Contrary to some reports, the French industry minister and the Mexican Embassy have officially denied that an agreement was signed during President Lopez Portillo's visit for France to build three nuclear power stations and a uranium enrichment facility.

PCF POLITBURO PUBLISHES STATEMENT ON INTERNATIONAL SITUATION

LD281257 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 22 May 80 p 7

[Apparent text of PCF Politburo statement: "France Must Pursue an Independent Policy"]

[Text] The PCF Politburo published the following statement yesterday:

The most recent world events confirm the correctness of our analysis of the present international situation. Imperialism can no longer do as it pleases. Its positions have become weakened. It is encountering serious obstacles in the implementation of its counteroffensive. The problems encountered by Carter testify to this, be it the failure of the piratical operation against Iran, his inability to prevent the holding of the Olympic games in Moscow or the difficulties in drawing his Atlantic allies into his aggressive and dangerous policy as he would like.

These few facts show the limits of imperialism's actions and resources. Imperialism is confronted by the crisis in its system and by the growth of contradictions between the different countries' multinationals. It is clashing with the rise of the peoples' struggle for social progress and peace, development and the determination of the socialist countries and the national liberation movement. This confirms that the analogies with 1938, which aim to convince people that the world is on the brink of war, are divorced from reality.

The correlation of forces in favor of national, social and human liberation which has further consolidated, is forcing imperialism to retreat and no longer allows it to decide questions of war and peace just as it sees fit. You can thus judge that there now exist forces throughout the world capable of successfully resisting imperialism's aggressive schemes and designs.

In this respect the USSR and the socialist countries are playing a vital role. The new, constructive initiatives taken by the Warsaw Pact countries confirm this: The socialist countries' fundamental orientation consists in doing the maximum to preserve peace, to maintain detente and for disarmament. Socialism, by its nature, is indeed synonymous with peace.

Meanwhile, the Afghan Government's recent proposals constitute an important, positive step toward detente and peace.

The PCF expresses its satisfaction at Poland's role in the organizing of the recent Warsaw meeting between the president of the republic and Leonid Brezhnev. This meeting, permitting discussion and dialogue, shows that it is increasingly difficult for the capitalist countries' leaders to maintain an excessive tension in international relations, as they would like.

The PCF, for its part, has long been in favor of any progress along the path of the consolidation of peaceful coexistence between countries with different social regimes. Nevertheless, the Giscard government's policy has basically not changed: It remains oriented toward alignment with the FRG and allegiance to the United States. Such a policy does not allow France to play the role which befits it in the international arena, notably in favor of peace, detente and disarmament.

But Giscard d'Estaing is forced to take account of the international and national realities, particularly the action conducted by the PCF and other peaceful forces in our country, an action which corresponds to the profound aspirations of the majority of the French people for national independence, peace, cooperation and friendship between peoples.

Everything shows that it is possible, through the action of the forces of peace, to force the government to make France play a role more consistent with detente and international cooperation, to oblige it to take concrete initiatives in every sphere that it can, to contribute to the resolution of existing conflicts, and to promote the cause of disarmament and international cooperation. In a word, without putting its alliances in doubt, our country must devote itself to pursuing an independent policy of nonalignment with any bloc.

The development of this battle for peace and disarmament is all the more necessary since NATO's recent series of grave decisions: the confirmation of the December 1979 decisions concerning the production and deployment in Europe of 600 new U.S. missiles, the appreciable increase in military budgets and the reinforcement of the war arsenal. At the same time, a campaign has been conducted in France to prepare public opinion for the acceptance of the decision to produce the neutron bomb. These constitute many attempts to accelerate further the fantastic arms race and the sources of danger for the peoples. It is essential that all men and women of good will and all the forces for peace rally and act for peace and disarmament.

The PCF, for its part, has not spared and will not spare its efforts in this important battle. Based on the success of the major demonstration against the deployment of U.S. missiles in Europe last December and after the important meeting of European communist and workers parties in April, it is prepared to take, or participate in, any initiative for disarmament.

Paris, 21 May 1980.

UDF MEMBER ON DEFENSE COMMITTEE REPORT: 'YES' TO NEUTRON BOMB

LD291043 Paris LE MATIN in French 17 May 80 p 2

[Pascal Krop interview with French Democratic Union (UDF) delegate General Michel Pinton: "Pinton (UDF): Yes to the Neutron Bomb"--date, place not specified]

[Text] [Question] Several UDF Defense Committee proposals, particularly on Atlantic solidarity and European cooperation, seem to go far beyond the positions stated so far by the president of the republic. Two months before the head of state's decisions on the modernization of the French nuclear arsenal, does the publication of this report announce a change in French defense policy?

[Answer] The report's extracts which have been published so far are fragmentary, indeed distorted, and come from rough drafts which have been broadly reworked. I am inviting commentators to wait for the publication of our report before judging us. This will be within a fortnight.

Will this report ask for a change in defense policy? No. This report is a direct heritage of the defense principles outlined by the president of the republic in spring 1976--principles defended by the government of the day and approved by the majority in the National Assembly when voting on the 1976-1982 military planning bill. I will go further: Our proposals are directly in line with the defense principles set out by General de Gaulle between 1959 and 1964. At a time when some people are tending to reduce these principles to a few more or less fossilized formulas we want to maintain their spirit so as to apply them all the more to a world which is no longer that of 20 years ago.

[Question] But the Gaullists have never advocated--as the UDF report plans--France's automatic involvement in the event of a battle in Central Europe. By adopting this position are the UDF's military experts not casting a fundamental doubt on the French deterrent policy as it was understood by General de Gaulle?

[Answer] France could not remain apart from a battle for Germany. It is linked by the North Atlantic Treaty, which states that aggression against one of its members would be an act of aggression against all the others. But let us leave aside the legal aspect and look at the facts: If the battle for Germany, the first battle in a European war, turned out badly, the invasion and destruction of France would follow immediately. Who could thus claim that our participation in the war in Germany would not be inevitable? But we would retain control over this participation.

[Question] Why then does the UDF not recommend that France rejoin NATO's integrated command?

[Answer] Because the time and the form of our action must always remain a national decision. The citizens of France will not feel involved in this war in Europe unless it is a French war; the integration of our forces would possibly signify to our people that we are participating in an American war. And our history teaches us that there would then no longer be a French defense spirit. Moreover, the Alliance only covers a limited area (that of Western Europe), while France intends to pursue a world policy. To do this it must be able to dispose of its forces freely. Paradoxical as it may seem, France can be most useful to the Alliance by refusing to integrate with NATO.

[Question] You want to reform the Atlantic Alliance's present structures. What forms would you like to give it?

[Answer] The North Atlantic Treaty is increasingly unsuited to the world in which we are living. In particular, Europe is no longer that weak conglomerate, divided and in ruins when the Alliance began. Our report insists on the need to strengthen the European pillar of Atlantic defense. France, which remains loyal to the Alliance, cannot dissociate itself from this necessary evolution. On the contrary, we want it to take initiatives to strengthen European cooperation in defense matters, especially with the FRG and Britain. This clearly does not imply that we must end by integrating our forces under a new form.

[Question] There has been talk of violent polemics within the UDF on this report.

[Answer] There has been a quite normal debate, but no polemics. The report soon to be published was unanimously approvedly the 48 committee members.

[Question] Have the UDF's military experts acted in concert with the Elysee to formulate this report?

[Answer] It is not the UDF's job to be the head of state's spokesman; what we have written in no way binds his judgements or decisions. Our aim is to launch the necessary debate and to prepare the decisions which are to be desired. The UDF will be the first major party to propose a realistic defense policy and it will debate this freely with the others.

[Question] In this report do you come out in favor of the neutron bomb?

[Answer] Yes.

LINKS BETWEEN SUSPECTED TERRORIST, OFFICIALS INVESTIGATED

AU301010 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 30 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 30 (ANSA)--A parliamentary investigation into allegations that high-ranking Italian officials including Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga may be implicated in helping the urban guerrilla son of a leading Christian Democrat (DC) to escape arrest is expected to continue here today.

The parliamentary commission with the power to strip M.P.s of their immunity was scheduled to hear Cossiga yesterday, but its session with a young suspected terrorist yesterday evening extended into the early hours of this morning (local) and was still not over at 0300 today.

Cossiga was named in connection with an alleged cover-up in favor of 28-year-old Marco Donat-Cattin, whose father, Carlo, many times a government minister, is now deputy secretary of Cossiga's own Christian Democrat Party. Cossiga's role in the affair was apparently exposed during recent questioning in Turin of Roberto Sandalo, the suspected terrorist who appeared before the parliamentary commission last night. Marco Donat-Cattin himself, like Sandalo, is a suspected member of the Front Line urban guerrilla organization and is on the run from charges of homicide and membership in an armed gang.

The Turin magistrates turned the findings from their questioning of Sandalo over to the parliamentary commission. According to Sandalo, the DC deputy secretary was warned by Cossiga that his son was about to be arrested and, thereby helped the younger Donat-Cattin to escape.

The commission was announced plans to push through with a marathon session with no recesses until such time as the final vote on Cossiga's position is taken. The commission has twenty members, ten from the lower house and ten from the Senate. Eleven votes are needed to have the charges against Cossiga shelved. Otherwise, the panel can vote to refer back to the two houses of Parliament proposing authorization for the courts to file and indictment against the premier.

Contrary to earlier reports, Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni is not liable to charges in connection with the cover-up.

TERRORIST ATTACKS CLAIM LEADING JOURNALIST, POLICEMAN

CORRIERE DELLA SERA Newsman

AU281643 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 28 May 80

[Excerpt] Milan, May 28 (ANSA)--A command calling itself "March 28 Brigade" claimed responsibility for this morning's slaying of Walter Tobagi, journalist of Milan's leading daily CORRIERE DELLA SERA.

The authors of the killing are presumably members of the Red Brigades urban guerrilla organization who have taken this new name in memory of the date this year when four Brigadists were killed in a shootout with police in Genoa.

A commando consisting of four youths ambushed Tobagi near his home. He was killed while he was near a restaurant. One of the assailants hid behind some ornamental [words indistinct] where he waited for the journalist to pass by he then shot Tobagi from behind in the back and in the nape of the neck. The journalist died instantly. The assailants fled in a waiting car.

Officer Killed; Others Injured

AU281640 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 28 May 80

[Excerpt] Rome, May 28 (ANSA)--The ultrarightist Revolutionary Armed Nuclei (NAR) claimed responsibility for this morning's slaying of a policeman in an attack which also seriously injured two other officers. An anonymous telephone caller later claimed that the attack was the work of the Red Brigades, but investigators seemed to attribute little credibility to the second claim.

The attack took place in front of a large high school in a residential area of Rome while hundreds of students were waiting to enter for classes. Four terrorists (all young and masked) opened fire on a police squad car parked about twenty meters from the school and on another policeman guarding the front door of the school building.

Franco Evangelista and Giovanni d'Orefice were in the squad car. Evangelista was shot in the head and died an hour later in the hospital. The other injured officer is Antonio Manfredo. In fleeing the site of the attack, the terrorists opened fire on a taxi driver who was also injured.

About two hours later the Communist Party daily L'UNITA received an annoymous telephone call in which a man said that NAR was responsible for the slaying in reprisal for the slaying of Stefano Cecchin. Cecchin, 19, died May 29 last year. He was [words indistinct] condition at the bottom of a five-meter wall from which he had fallen as he was fleeing from political adversaries.

ALLEGED TERRORIST FLEES MAXIMUM SECURITY JAIL

[Text] Rome, May 24 (ANSA)--Alleged terrorist Paolo Ceriani Sebregondi escaped from Parma maximum security prison today. The 33 year old inmate was serving a ten year sentence for participation in an armed gang. This is the second escape from a maximum security prison in less than two months. In April a group of terrorists and common criminals organized an escape from Milan's San Vittore Prison. Most of the fugitives were caught a few hours later.

According to the first reports released here, Sebregondi escaped after sawing off the iron bars of a window of the infirmary where he was under medical treatment for the injuries suffered when shooting broke out with police when he was arrested. He then climbed down scaffolding outside the building and fled.

Sebregondi was charged and tried for the slaying of Magistrate Fedele Calvosa, and his two-man bodyguard ambushed by a commando of the self-styled Fighting Communist Formations, a splinter group of the Prima Linea (Front Line) urban guerrilla organization, in Practica in November 1978. Sebregondi was caught by police three days after the slaying. He was acquitted of the charge of multiple homicide because of insufficient evidence, while the other defendants in the trial, Nicola Valentino and Maria Rosaria Biondi, recognized by an eye witness, were sentenced to life in prison and thirty years, respectively.

BERLINGUER ADDRESSES ECONOMIC, POLITICAL THEMES

LD281507 [Editorial Report] Rome L'UNITA on 18 May 1980 carries on pages 1 and 21 a 2,000-word Ugo Baduel report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer's address to a 16 May activists ("attivo") meeting organized by Communist workers at the Fiat car factory in Turin.

Berlinguer places Italy's and Fiat's own financial plight within the context of "the general crisis of capitalism," but warns against viewing "any proposal of economic restructuring as exclusively and always an attack on the working class and workers movement," explaining that "the crisis can only be overcome by moving toward socialism".

The 22 May Milan edition of L'UNITA carries on pages 1 and 19 a 1,400-word unattributed report on a Berlinguer interview with the PCI weekly RINASCITA. Berlinguer restates his recently expressed assessment of the present government's record and the need for a PCI victory in the coming local elections, since "a success by the Christian Democratic Party [DC] would encourage the entire rightwing operation begun by its present leaders, which has already done vast damage to the country." He claims that the government has shown "passive submissiveness to U.S. directives" in foreign policy. Berlinguer says there is a potential alternative majority to the present government and calls for a "mobilization" of the forces of this majority "around a blueprint for change."

Milan L'UNITA on 26 May carries on pages 1-2 a 1,600-word Ugo Baduel report on a 25 May Berlinguer speech at a party rally in Venice. Berlinguer again justifies his harsh criticisms of the government and reminds the Socialists that "the prospects for a government of national unity and of real democratic solidarity and even the unity of the left-wing forces, which is so necessary for changing our country, cannot be defended by attacking the Communists."

L'UNITA COMMENTS ON NATO, WARSAW PACT DELIBERATIONS

LD280913 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 18 May 80 p 22

[Giulietta Chiesa article: "What NATO and Warsaw Pact Say"]

[Text] The fact that the world we live in is still tottering on the brink of the abyss is shown partly by the whirling crescendo of meetings between heads of state and government leaders which we have been witnessing. The latest and most important of these is the one in Vienna, which marked the resumption of the dialogue between the United States and the USSR. This proved difficult because of the many points of friction and crisis--the Iranian Revolution, the illusory operation of the Camp David separate agreements, the Americans' failure to ratify the SALT II treaty, the seizure of the U.S. Embassy hostages in Tehran, NATO's decision to give the go-ahead to the program for assembling and deploying the so-called "Euromissiles," the U.S. reprisals against Iran (sanctions) and the USSR (the Olympic boycott) and the abortive U.S. raid on Iranian territory. There has been a close interdependence among all these factors. Was it not U.S. Secretary of State Vance who pointed out that "if SALT II had been ratified at once it could have had an effect on events in Afghanistan, in the sense that it might even have been able to prevent them?" Does this verdict not imply an acknowledgement of the concatenation of events which created the detente crisis through a non-Manichean view of the gravity of the situation?

At Yugoslav President Tito's funeral, an impressive gathering of heads of state and government leaders--an event on an unprecedented scale--people met to pay homage to a man and to his work. Tito's demise has therefore gained an almost symbolic significance because it was exactly at that time that some of the threads of an interrupted dialogue were retied in Belgrade. But is it still too soon to be optimistic? The NATO meeting in Brussels last Tuesday and Wednesday and the Warsaw Pact meeting in the Polish capital Wednesday and Thursday have made it possible to form an updated assessment of the stances and trends emerging within the two alignments.

Let us begin with NATO. The final communique released by the Defense Planning Committee (comprising all members of the Alliance except France and Greece) first confirms that the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan has "modified the entire strategic situation" and demands "the Soviet troops' total and immediate withdrawal from Afghanistan" and then states, among other things, that "the alteration of the strategic situation in Southwest Asia demands total solidarity and greater cohesion from the Allies." It claims that there is a shared acknowledgement that "at a time when the United States is working to strengthen its means of defense in Southwest Asia it is necessary to guarantee that the Allies' attitude in deterring a potential attacker and defending NATO Europe will be similarly maintained and strengthened." Approval was reached for "a number of short-term measures which each country will have to adopt. These include the promptest and most complete implementation of pressing defense measures needed to improve the forces' potential in the NATO area."

The foreign ministers asked that at the Defense Planning Committee's next meeting (scheduled for December) a blueprint for further measures be drawn up. "The sectors to be considered will include the degree of preparation, the mobilization of reserve forces, ammunition and combat supplies, sea defense, the increase in air transport vehicles...military aid to Portugal and Turkey and the blueprint for infrastructures." Finally, the document states that "the member countries must achieve and maintain an annual increase of about 3 percent in defense spending." The NATO countries also signed a declaration condemning the holding of the hostages and demanding their immediate release. As far as sanctions are concerned, specific commitments were left to be decided by the Naples meeting. So United States emerged from Brussels having gained highly important and serious results.

Proposals on Negotiating Table

First, the acknowledgement that NATO's interests extend beyond the Alliance's geographical and statutory limits. Second, the decision on a division of tasks which enables the United States to concentrate its efforts in other parts of the world.

As far as proposals to the other side are concerned, the Brussels final communique simply repeats the offer--already made last December when it was decided to give the go-ahead to the Euromissiles--of negotiations with the Warsaw Pact on so-called "theater weapons." In the meantime the United States is starting to withdraw 1,000 old nuclear warheads.

The document adopted in Warsaw is more complex--and undoubtedly more full of specific proposals. It centers on the proposal "to hold in the near future a summit meeting of heads of state from all parts of the world." It states among other things that "talks on medium-range nuclear missiles are possible" and that "only one thing is needed for such talks to begin: the cancellation of NATO's decision to deploy new kinds of U.S. nuclear weapons in Western Europe or at least to postpone its implementation." But this is essentially nothing new. The part of the document centered on the following seven effective proposals seems more interesting: 1--"As a joint act of good will to reach an agreement, (it could be agreed that) as from a previously decided date no state and no group of states in Europe will increase the dimensions of its armed forces within the area defined in the CSCE Final Act." 2--"Strict observance of all the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act" (equal sovereignty, nonuse of force or threats, inviolability of borders, states' territorial integrity, peaceful solution of disputes, noninterference in internal affairs, observance of human rights, equality of rights for the peoples to determine their own future, interstate cooperation and observance of accords). 3--With a view to the Madrid conference, "the intensification and extension of the exchange of viewpoints on bilateral and multilateral bases." [paragraph continues]

4--"Accelerating preparations for a conference on military detente and disarmament in Europe" to make it possible in Madrid to adopt "practical decisions on the conference's objectives and on its date, location and procedures, including the agenda for its first session." 5--"An immediate resumption of talks in the directions in which they were adjourned or broken off." 6--An immediate start to talks on topics which have hitherto not been discussed but which "can halt the arms race" (for instance the "banning of new weapons systems" and a cut in military spending). 7--To start examining, "within the UN framework, for instance, the problem of limiting and lowering the level of the military presence" in various parts of the world.

Finally, last Thursday another proposal arrived on the negotiating table, from the Afghan Government to Pakistan and Iran for direct bilateral negotiations "aimed at guaranteeing shared borders" and "also making possible the withdrawal of the limited contingent of Soviet troops."

It is difficult to deny that some new factors have emerged. The Americans' reactions have so far been prevalently negative, though there have been a few signs of cautious appraisals. And there is no doubt that a careful interpretation is needed beneath the thick outer surface of propaganda which surrounds both sides' proposals. Europe, which hitherto has acted as spectator and which risks being relegated to a more or less submissive obedience to U.S. pressures, has the political scope to assert itself.

LA VANGUARDIA REPORTS 20 MAY SUAREZ SPEECH TO CONGRESS

LD291505 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 21 May 80 p 5

[Report on 20 May speech by Spanish Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez in Congress of Deputies political debate: "Suarez Calls for 'Social Awareness' To Help Resolve Problems"]

[Text] Public Order: Early Presentation of Public Freedoms Statute

At 1645 Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez mounted the rostrum and read out a lengthy speech, in which he said, in short, the following:

"In opening this debate, it is my sincere desire that it will serve and contribute to the usual aim of any parliamentary debate of a general nature: to establish, clarify and compare the stances of the government and of each parliamentary group on the principal problems and to rigorously criticize their respective stances or decisions."

Let Nobody Expect Miracles

"Let nobody expect miracles. Let nobody expect us to improvise overnight a solid, institutionally strong and socially deep-rooted democracy. Reality always imposes its limits on wishes. And today we still have a fragile democracy, because what proved impossible to establish in the last 150 years cannot put down deep roots in 3 years.

"We have a weak democracy because individual and collective behavior and the attitudes of individuals and of the social forces are still adjusting themselves to the levels of responsibility which must be shouldered in exercising freedom. We have a fragile democracy because the political, trade union, employers' or professional organizations which sustain a democratic society are also fragile.

"I believe that when there is talk of disenchantment--and there is frequently talk of this--the circumstances under which we are operating and under which the government must perform its task are not sufficiently explained."

"Among the people's demands," Suarez said, "with which society is appealing to the state, a clamor calling for peace, order and public safety can be distinguished."

"Vigor and firmness--stringency, in short--within the strict framework of the laws, will be the unchanging coordinates guiding the government's activity to eradicate the scourge of terrorism and the phenomenon of crime. No citizen can deny or shirk his share of responsibility in creating an atmosphere of peaceful, sincere and interdependent coexistence, because nobody is entitled to feel indifferent to or detached from the public interest in a society of freedoms. Nor can anybody seek a pretext for avoiding obeying the laws. The law's prestige is an essential value in a democratic society, and its internalization by citizens is a principal responsibility of the state bodies and the political forces."

The prime minister then announced the early presentation to the Cortes of an organic law containing the statute of the public freedoms envisaged in the Constitution and the legal safeguards for its full effectiveness. In accordance with the Constitution, this organic law will define the areas of legality and illegality in exercising public freedoms. It will explicitly abolish the legal provisions of the previous legislation which are contrary to the Constitution and to the statute itself, clarifying the areas of legal uncertainty or doubt currently existing.

"The rule of law," the prime minister added, "also has another dimension of crucial importance in Spain's present situation: the strict and inexorable implementation of the existing laws in the action against armed violence, whose eradication requires a special collective effort of responsibility, support for legitimate authority and cooperation with and support for the state security bodies."

Measures Against Terrorism

"I emphasize that these measures have largely been adopted already, are in the process of being implemented and will soon produce their full effects. These include the opening of the data processing center scheduled for the second half of this year, whose programs have already been written, the reorganization of the police intelligence services, a national plan to thwart bank raids, an increase in the police presence on the streets, by means of an increase in the motorized personnel, the enlargement of the judicial police groups specializing in juvenile delinquency and drugs, the redistribution of personnel, and so forth."

Economy: "Struggle Against Unemployment Depends on Productive Investment"

Under the present circumstances, the energy crisis and attention to employment are the only priorities which can be considered by an economic policy which honestly and realistically attempts to tackle the country's problems.

The two priorities should be pursued while at the same time considering and taking into account the evolution of our economy's fundamental balances: in the first place, with respect to inflation. A good deal of progress has been made in this field. And there is currently reasonable hope that the safeguard clause freely laid down by the social agents in the framework agreement between trade unions and employers' organizations will not be exceeded as of 30 June 1980, or at all events that the deviation with respect to this clause will be very slight.

The reduction of our energy dependence is a fundamental and basic priority.

The government therefore intends to develop and accelerate the national energy plan, both with respect to investments in energy production, transportation and distribution and with respect to investments in energy conservation, research and development.

It is also necessary to restrict the sectors in a state of crisis on which action will be taken, since no government can commit itself to supporting ruinous forms of production indefinitely or to protecting all jobs existing in all sectors. If it did so, it would only be at the expense of the development of other sectors which are more productive, profitable and dynamic and thus have a greater potential for creating employment than have the backward sectors which it supported.

Most Grave Consequence

Unemployment is taking shape as the gravest consequence of the accumulated economic crisis which we are experiencing. Unemployment is possibly the major tragedy of the industrial societies, the greatest factor of injustice and the greatest issue demanding solidarity among the members of society.

Measures Against Unemployment

Payments in this connection, which totaled 210 billion pesetas in 1979, in comparison with the 145 billion pesetas scheduled, will increase considerably again in 1980, possibly creating a large deficit. The Spanish system is one of the most generous among the Western countries.

A serious and thorough effort must be made to make way for the generation reaching the working age, and this effort depends on a takeoff of productive investment, because only in this way will our potential growth ceiling really be reached.

In the first place, there has been continuity in implementing the measures envisaged in the Moncloa pacts. Second, the elimination of the legal obstacles to the creation of employment as a policy, has been achieved. Third, vocational training plays an important role in creating employment, since it facilitates the setting up of enterprises and helps the industrial conversion processes which are currently so necessary in our economy.

Employment Policy

Fourth, unemployment has also been combated by means of qualitative actions and local initiatives. An instance of the former is the privileged financing for setting up and expanding industrial cooperatives and labor associations.

The government's overall strategy in employment policy will be supplemented by the following lines of action:

First--Reappraisal of the specific employment policies.
Second--Moderation of increases in earned incomes.
Third--The combating of fraud with respect to unemployment benefits and hiring workers outside the social security system [la contratacion al margen de la seguridad social].

Savings and Productivity

The prospects for increasing the product available for meeting national expenditure and for creating jobs at the rate necessary for reducing the rate of unemployment to an acceptable level will depend on two strategic factors--increasing the level of national savings and increasing productivity. Without a strengthening of these two variables, it will be possible to tackle the investment process which the Spanish economy requires.

Autonomies: "Only Solution, But Principal Danger to Democracy"

Building the state of autonomies is our only solution, but it is also the principal danger threatening our fragile democracy.

The problem of equality is resolved by the organizational freedom which is the dominant element in the above-mentioned principle. If the regions which will not attain full autonomy via article 143 of the Constitution really wish to equip themselves with an organizational structure parallel to that envisaged for the regions of historic restoration [The Basque Country, Catalonia and Galicia], there is nothing in the Constitution, the majority party's principles or the government's attitude to prevent this.

Statutes Before June 1983

The situation of economic crisis which we are experiencing also compels us to be highly responsible in the new state's financial structure. At all costs we must avoid the accusation that the autonomous state leads to a squandering of resources. The autonomous state must be built with the state administration's personal and financial means, because the public sector's resources cannot be stretched indefinitely--hence the need for austerity in the administrative sphere.

The basic policy guidelines of our platform, in which the activity of the party and of the government emanating from it may be summarized, are as follows:

--Since the requirements envisaged in article 151 of the Constitution have not been met in any region and since the general requirements of the autonomy initiative must be deemed to have been met in all these territories, the government regards this autonomy initiative as authorized, so that the drafting and promulgation in all of them of autonomy statutes containing the individual organizational system which these territories desire--including, where appropriate, that envisaged in article 152 of the Constitution--can be set in motion. These statutes should come into force during the current year and before the second quarter of 1983.

--Ceuta, Melilla and the provinces left outside the autonomy structure will receive special consideration, joining other communities, if that is the freely expressed desire of the parties concerned in each instance. If a different desire is expressed, the constitutional means will be used to give these cities and provinces autonomy, taking their special characteristics into account in each instance.

--The government will submit bills to the general Cortes on matters of powers and these bills will include the corresponding clauses of specific demarcation under the principle of equality, following the practice already adopted by the general Cortes and in accordance with what is stipulated in article 28.1 of the organic law of the constitutional court.

--Thorough legislation and, where appropriate, the government's regulatory power, bodies for cooperation between the state and the autonomous communists as a whole will be set up when necessary, which, chaired by a member of the government, will organize this cooperation in the matters of the various sectors. The government will also encourage any other machinery for active cooperation.

Andalusia Will Have Three Powers

--In the cause of Andalusia, the government will encourage and promote the processing of an autonomy statute in the way which has been formulated, which should be promulgated this year and give the autonomous community of Andalusia, if it so desires, a legislative assembly, elected by universal suffrage, a government council and a higher court of justice.

--The elections to set up the legislative assemblies or bodies which must be elected by universal suffrage in all the autonomous communities set up henceforth, in accordance with what was previously stated, will be held at the same time as the first general or municipal elections to be called. Until that time, these communities will be able to exercise their legislative powers through the setting up of provisional bodies.

Galician Referendum Within 6 Months

--A referendum will be called within 6 months to approve the Galician Statute. The bodies envisaged in it will be set up at the time and in the manner stipulated by the draft statute.

--The bills and resolutions enabling the government to continue to implement this policy with the appropriate parliamentary support will be submitted to the chamber.

ENERGY MINISTER HOLDS TALKS IN IRAQ ON OIL SUPPLIES

LD291427 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 28 May 80 p 8

[Bjarne Kjaer report: "Clear Road for Danish State Oil Purchases of Crude Oil From Iraq"]

[Text] Baghdad--During his official visit to Iraq, Energy Minister Poul Nielsson has laid the foundation for yet another agreement on state oil purchases on a scale equivalent to the agreement with Saudi Arabia. During Poul Nielsson's talks with Iraqi Oil Minister Tayih 'Abd al-Karim the way was opened up to concrete negotiations between the two countries' state oil companies on Danish state oil purchases.

Poul Nielsson said that they discussed state trade and the possiblities of Danish-Iraqi cooperation in energy conservation, energy research and natural gas. During their discussion Poul Nielsson invited the Iraqi oil minister to pay an official visit to Denmark and the invitation was accepted immediately. A date for the visit has not yet been agreed.

Poul Nielsson gave Al-Karim a briefing on the Danish Government's decision to allow the state to make direct oil purchases in oil-producing countries. Al-Karim's immediate reaction was: "It is about time. The big oil companies have been able to make profits off of you and off of us for far too long."

After his talks the Danish energy minister said that no agreement has yet been reached on the size of possible Danish oil imports from Iraq. "But it is vital for us that stable longer-term cooperation is established. It is not only important to make a quick advantageous oil deal; we must also bear in mind the importance of the longer-term supply situation," Nielsson said. The fact that nothing has yet been said about the scope of the likely agreement--it is, however, expected to amount to around 1 million tons of crude oil annually--is because it is still not known what quality of oil Iraq will be able to offer and how capable Danish refineries will be to deal with the fairly sulfur-rich Iraqi oil.

The reasons given for Iraq's interest as an oil producer in Danish energy-saving programs and natural gas projects are that Iraq uses twice as much energy to cook its homes in the summer as Denmark uses to warm its homes in the winter and that Iraq intends to embark on a natural gas project. Today Iraq burns off 80 percent of its natural gas in the desert, Poul Nielsson said.

The Iraqis have officially denied that there will be any form of trade or political conditions attached to a likely Danish oil purchase from Iraq. Dhuqan Muhammad Nuri, general director of economic relations in the Iraqi Trade Ministry, said: "There will be no conditions of any sort, merely the usual trade contract. We prefer transactions between states and would rather not sell oil to big oil companies." Yesterday Poul Nielsson also said that no one raised the question of linking Danish policies in any area to the future purchase of oil.

MINISTER CONSIDERS FORMING SECURITY AND DISARMAMENT COMMITTEE

LD281017 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 21 May 80 pt 1 p 10

[Cb. report: "Danish Security and Disarmament Committee"]

[Text] Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen is considering appointing a security and disarmament committee, whose function will be to follow international developments and evaluate them from the viewpoint of Danish security policy.

The move comes against the background of a Liberal proposal, submitted for Folketing discussion and approval, to provide continuous evaluation of changes in international developments. Liberal defense spokesman Jens Bilgrav-Nielsen told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that he is extremely satisfied with the foreign minister's initiative. According to Kjeld Olesen's proposals the committee will comprise members from the ministries affected, politicians and representatives of Danish research in the field. Kjeld Olesen estimates that the cost of the committee's work will total 2.2 million kroner annually.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS IRAN SANCTIONS

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report: "All Clear for Sanctions Against Iran"]

[Text] The Storting Foreign Affairs Committee has given unanimous support to the Norwegian Government call for the necessary authorization to implement sanctions against Iran. The committee's recommendations, which were made yesterday evening, do not discuss what type of sanctions are possible. But the committee assumes that Norway will probably follow its allies' line in the affair. "Holding hostages is a monstrous act of tyranny. It cannot be accepted in Iran or anywhere else," the committee said. The question of possible losses for Norwegian interests because of sanctions will not be discussed by the committee in this context.

FOREIGN MINISTER VIEWS NATO ISSUES IN STORTING STATEMENT

[Unattributed report: "Norway Prefers Troop Reductions to New Missiles; Offer of Talks, Soviet Union Silent"]

[Excerpt] The Norwegian Government gives its full support to the best use of the time up to 1983 to get talks going with the Soviet Union on troop reductions in Europe. Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund stated during Storting question time yesterday. He was replying to a question from Hans Hammond Rossbach (Liberal Party), member for More and Ronsdal. The foreign minister informed him that the government gives its full support to Chancellor Schmidt's statements on this point. But, he said, NATO has made offers of talks to the Soviet Union on two occasions, and so far there has been no positive reply. The foreign minister also had to answer a question from Rolf Presthus (Conservative Party), Akershus, on the reported unwillingness of SAS to take part in the transportation of American servicemen to Europe in a crisis situation using SAS planes registered in Norway. In reply the foreign minister said that neither the Norwegian authorities nor SAS had received any such request. But, he declared, within the framework of NATO cooperation Norway has held out the prospect that Norway would contribute to such transports in crisis situations. The government will, of course, stand by its assurances, he stated.

NORDLI COMMENTS ON RELATIONS WITH USSR

LD291421 Paris LE MONDE in French 24 May 80 pp 11,13

[Bernard Feron Oslo interview with Norwegian Prime Minister Nordli: "Human and Economic Freedom Has Been Assured in 40 Years"--date, place unspecified]

[Excerpt] [Question] The Soviet press recently attacked Norway over plans to deploy NATO equipment. [paragraph continues]

At the same time, the USSR took the initiative to reopen negotiations with your government on the Barents Sea. How do you interpret this dual approach?

[Answer] USSR-Norwegian relations reflect general East-West relations. NATO membership is one of the pillars of our security. But to guarantee this security we also want to maintain stability and reduce tension. We are trying our utmost for good, open relations with the Soviet Union. For the moment we consider that the crisis is clearly serious. We fear for detente, we fear the arms race and, in particular, the race involving the most frightening weapons. Our hopes have been seriously wounded. But, despite the crisis caused by the unacceptable invasion of Afghanistan, we want to keep the channels between East and West open. Norway's negotiations with the USSR? This is a long-term question. It is important that we talk, and that both sides declare themselves prepared to find a solution.

PALME MEDIATION OVER HOSTAGES WAS NOT PURPOSE OF IRAN VISIT

[Bobo Scheutz report: "Palme on Iran Crisis: Pressure Will Delay a Solution"]

[Text] "I have the impression that if the rest of the world avoids further pressure on Iran we can look forward to a relatively swift solution to the hostage crisis. There is already a process in motion toward this, and I believe that our visit to Tehran has added to this process." Olof Palme made this statement after returning from his 2-day visit to Iran together with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and Spanish Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez.

"Our mission was not to mediate between the United States and Iran or to make definite proposals on how the crisis should be solved," Palme coutinued. "The reason for our visit was to gather information on the Iranian Revolution, and we did not travel primarily as representatives of the Socialist International but rather as private persons and party chairmen. But we will report to the meeting of the Socialist International in Oslo in June." In reply to the question whether the three had had American contacts, Palme replied: "I certainly believe that."

Olof Palme expressed understanding for the background to the Iranian Revolution, but carefully avoided making any comments about its more controversial elements. "It has always been my view that it is completely wrong to take hostages, but now that it has happened everyone must work to find a peaceful solution," Palme said. "The course of the revolution will not improve if the rest of the world attempts to isolate Iran, and this would only make a solution to the hostage crisis more difficult." During the visit Palme, Kreisky and Gonzalez were able to meet President Bani-Sadr, Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh, Ayatollah Beheshti and the ruling Revolution Council in plenum session, but Olof Palme was not willing to give a detailed account of what was discussed.

Solution Could Be 'Relatively Near'

LD300929 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 28 May 80 p 8

[Magdalena Ribbing report: "Palme Home From Iran; Believes in Peaceful Solution"]

[Text] "If we avoid the use of force we can look forward to a peaceful solution in the relatively near future."

Social Democratic Party leader Olof Palme made this statement on Tuesday when he returned from his short visit to Tehran, where together with Bruno Kreisky and Felipe Gonzalez he met with members of the ruling regime in Iran.

The three chairmen of the social democratic parties--Bruno Kreisky is Austrian federal chancellor, Felipe Gonzalez the socialist leader in Spain--had several meetings with those in power in Iran during the course of Sunday and Monday. Olof Palme thought that the visit was successful, but once again pointed out that it had not been intended to be some sort of mediation mission.

"We had no such mission, and it was not up to us to put forward concrete proposals or to urge anyone to adopt some particular course of action."

The three socialist leaders gave press conferences in different places around the world after their return from Iran, but all had the same message: What is vital now is that respect of the Iranian people is restored in world opinion. The use of force, economic sanctions and other provocations only make the situation worse, they consider.

The visit by Olof Palme, Bruno Kreisky--who was the trip's instigator--and Felipe Gonzalez was the Iranian leaders' first on such a level since the revolution took place 15 months ago. Through detailed preparations, in great secrecy, and through a long series of contacts they succeeded in meeting not only President Bani-Sadr, but also the less accessible leaders, such as the Ayatollah Beheshti, who will be the new Iranian parliament's strong man.

The U.S. Government knew about the visit, probably through Secretary of State Edmund Muskie's recent visit to Vienna, where he naturally met Bruno Kreisky. The Austrian federal chancellor has good contacts with the PLO, among others, and this helped to make the Iranian visit possible.

Olof Palme expressed his understanding for the situation of the Iranians: "I have always thought that the Iranian Revolution is in many ways extremely fascinating. The nation was united in its abhorrence of the shah's regime and the bloody instrument of torture that the secret police represented and in its opposition to the enormous American interests in the country. In some respects Iran was an occupied country. And the force that unites everybody now is the determination to protect their independence, from both the superpowers.

"Iran is a land with pride. It has been humiliated for a long time, and all solutions to the present conflict must aim to respect Iranian independence."

The 50 Americans, who have been held hostage in Iran since the beginning of November last year, could be released if the process that is now in motion is allowed to continue without interference. But there may be differing opinions on this within the Revolution Council (which rules the country), Olof Palme considers. However, he does not think that the students who occupied the American Embassy and are formally holding the hostages have any long-term significance. They do not represent any independent political force.

Part of Olof Palme's message was that Iran must not be allowed to become isolated from the rest of the world. The revolution was justified in liberating the country from the shah's regime, one of the worst that humanity had ever seen, Olof Palme said. "I refused to travel to Iran at that time, despite many invitations."

And what about democracy in Iran now? Olof Palme considers that we must respect the strong democratic ambition that exists in Iran, and the will to build up democratic institutions. But the Constitution contains religious elements which in the long term must disappear if the country is to function. And the executions that are going on are a dreadful problem.

The Iranian leaders are wholly aware of the problem that the continued holding of the Americans as hostages represents, Olof Palme said. "They know all the aspects of the question, and the problem's entire range."

There is no likelihood of a mediating role for the socialist leaders; the Iranians are perfectly competent to manage their contacts with the United States themselves, Olof Palme said.

IRAQI INDUSTRY MINISTER TO DISCUSS BILATERAL RELATIONS

JN292018 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1945 GMT 29 May 80

[Text] Stockholm, 29 May--Tahir at-Tawfiq, Iraqi Revolution Command Council member and industry and minerals minister, arrived here today on a 4-day visit. During the visit, Tahir at-Tawfiq will hold talks with his Swedish counterpart Nils G. Asling on ways to strengthen bilateral relations in the industrial fields. He will also acquaint himself with the Swedish industrial organizations.

ULLSTEN'S MOSCOW VISIT MAINLY TO COVER INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

LD291814 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1600 GMT 29 May 80

[Correspondent (Malcolm Dixelius) report from Moscow]

[Text] Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten arrived today on an official 2-day visit to Moscow. He will first have talks with his Soviet counterpart, Andrey Gromyko, mainly about the international situation against the background of the events in Iran and Afghanistan. (?It is expected) that there will be less discussion about matters concerning Soviet-Swedish relations, as our correspondent reports from Moscow: [Begin Dixelius recording] There are no Soviet advance comments to indicate what importance the Soviet side places on the visit by the Swedish foreign minister. The many smiles from Andrey Gromyko and his entourage when Ola Ullsten landed on Thursday at Moscow's official Vnukovo Airport were not smiles with any great political meaning: They were chiefly smiles of recognition as Ullsten had had a short informal meeting with Gromyko's closest aides as recently as April this year during a stopover in Moscow on the way home from Japan.

Before this first official visit the newspapers here have devoted more attention to the Swedish labor market and domestic policy than Sweden's foreign policy activity. Sweden's stand with regard to Afghanistan has not given rise to any Soviet comments, even if this topic will inevitably occupy a central place during the talks on Friday. Then Ullsten will be given a lunch in his honor by his Soviet counterpart, Andrey Gromyko, and will afterwards probably have a short meeting with Soviet Premier Alekseey Kosygin. Apart from Afghanistan, the talks will concentrate primarily on the deteriorated international situation rather than on particular Swedish-Soviet problems.

The Soviet side has so far replied in very vague terms to Ullsten's proposal earlier this year that Sweden could host a general European disarmament conference. A more specific reply to this proposal is probably as far as the Soviet leaders will go. But even if the results of the meetings remain meager, Ullsten's meetings with the Soviet leaders will be followed with special interest, especially in the Western world. The reason is that his this is the first foreign minister's visit to Moscow from a Western country since the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in the new year. Western diplomats in Moscow think that the Soviet leadership is eager to resume all normal contacts. The outcome of Ullsten's meetings can therefore be of importance to the extent to which other countries want to follow and resume regular discussions with the Soviet leaders. The fact that opinions on this point are divided became obvious after the meeting of the French president, Giscard d'Estaing, with President Leonid Brezhnev in Warsaw earlier this month. [end recording]

GOVERNMENT ISSUES ORDERS ON TRADE WITH IRAN

LD291650 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1543 GMT 29 May 80

[By David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] New trade deals with Iran are banned under two orders made by the government today. But the orders are far more lenient than expected in allowing existing contractors to carry on and even increase their trade with Iran.

The orders prohibit new contracts except on certain foodstuffs and medical supplies. The moves are Britain's response to President Carter's call for sanctions against Iran over the holding of the U.S. hostages.

As promised by ministers in a "U" turn earlier this month existing contracts are not affected. And contrary to what had been expected, neither are new contracts made by firms currently engaged in trade with Iran if the new contracts cover the same type of business.

Government spokesmen explained this meant a firm selling refrigerators would be allowed to make a new deal selling washing machines. Similarly, a car company would be allowed to increase the volume of trade with Iran.

The ban does not apply to personal affects, professional equipment, people travelling to Iran or ships and aircraft on scheduled services or their export after temporary importation.

The orders specify that exemptions to the ban will apply where contracts have been modified, amplified or extended even after the midnight deadline. The department of Trade also said that the ban would not apply to new contracts for sale or supply made in continuation of "an established course of business dealing between the same parties relating to goods of the same or similar class" which previously existed.

The penalties for making new contracts covered by the ban will be an unlimited fine on indictment or a fine of up to 1,000 pounds on summary conviction. For physically exporting prohibited goods customs and excise prosecutions under the existing 1939 sanctions legislation carry a six-month jail sentence or a fine of three times the value of the goods or both. Under the new regulations exporters must declare that the goods they are shipping are not prohibited.

The Department of Trade said it could offer only general advice on how the new sanctions would apply and advised businessmen worried about particular deals to take legal advice.

The apparent weakening of the government's stand on the Iran trade sanctions is clearly prompted by two motives: first, not to hurt British business more than Iran and, secondly, not to go further on sanctions than the rest of the Common Market.

U.S. PLANS FOR DIEGO GARCIA CAUSE PROBLEMS FOR THATCHER

LD301017 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 30 May 80 p 4

[David Adamson report: "American Plan for Diego Garcia Puts Thatcher on Spot"]

[Text] An American plan to make the British-owned island of Diego Garcia, in the Indian Ocean, into a major base will be discussed when Mrs Thatcher sees Mr Harold Brown, American defence secretary, on Monday.

The scheme involves accommodation for thousands of men and a runway large enough for B-52 bombers.

An initial plan has been agreed but the latest American proposals go far beyond this with indications they will cost well over 500 million pounds sterling.

The issue is perhaps the hottest potato thrown at the British Government by the Americans since the overthrow of the shah and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan tore apart the status quo in Southwest Asia.

A 'yes' by Mrs Thatcher will undoubtedly cause angry repercussions in the Indian Ocean area, where India, which has just concluded a 7,000 million pounds sterling arms deal with Russia, and other countries are strongly opposed to outside military intervention. In Britain, too, there would probably be hostile reactions from a Parliament which, as the row over sanctions against Iran showed, does not always see British interests as identical with those of the United States.

On the other hand, a "no" from the prime minister would cause further wounding to a Carter administration which has already been sorely hurt by her failure to deliver on the Olympics and retroactive sanctions.

Under a 1976 agreement on Diego Garcia the Americans have what are euphemistically described as "facilities" on the island. But there is no disguising the fact that it is already an important base. Considerable secrecy is maintained and no journalists have been allowed to visit it for a number of years. Some 2,000 American servicemen are stationed there under an American commander. Britain, the lessor of the base, is represented by a liaison team consisting of a Royal Navy lieutenant-commander and 25 men. The liaison officer is informed of routine movements by the Americans while more serious matters are dealt with through consultations in London and Washington.

What Mrs Thatcher will have to consider on Monday is phase two of a development programme as phase one is expected to begin shortly. Costing between some 100 and 150 million pounds sterling, it will improve accommodation, roads, hard-standing for aircraft and fuel and water storage. There will also be a new pier.

The latter is related to American plans for a rapid deployment task force which, by using pre-positioned equipment, would be able to move straight into action. The obvious arena would be the Gulf, where Saudi Arabia's 9.5 million barrels a day of oil are the key to the Western world's economy. Six or seven converted merchant ships anchored at Diego Garcia would carry heavy equipment, including armoured personnel carriers, tanks and amphibious vehicles. The first ship is expected in July.

What Mrs Thatcher has to do is balance its probable military effectiveness against the political cost. No one has so far mentioned nuclear weapons, but B-52 bombers carry that inevitable connotation. Even without the nuclear issue, consultation will have to be improved. The 1976 agreement is too open to interpretation on what Britain's rights are in this respect. It is not clear, for example, whether Britain was adequately consulted over the use of the island by the Americans as a staging post for the foiled attempt to rescue the hostages in Tehran.

AKEL RELEASES 3 MAR MEMORANDUM TO KIPRIANOU

The purpose of submitting this memorandum is to set out once again our position with all possible clarity in striving to reach a constructive dialogue with unanimous assessments and conclusions.

The Present Phase of the Cyprus Issue

The assessment of the fourth plenum of the AKEL Central Committee is that the present phase of the Cyprus issue is characterized by the continuing deadlock both on the issue of solving the Cyprus problem in general and, on the issue of the intercommunal talks in particular. However, it is also characterized by the continuous efforts of our people, Greeks and Turks, to overcome this deadlock and to create the necessary climate to open the way to constructive and substantive talks aimed at finding a peaceful, just, mutually acceptable and viable solution to the Cyprus issue.

Our party wants to particularly stress the need to overcome the deadlock and achieve a peaceful, mutually acceptable and viable solution to the Cyprus issue.

Our firm insistence on this position arises both from our conviction that the talks are the only correct way to solve the Cyprus issue as indicated by present conditions and by our assessment that the continuation of the stalemate and the deadlock and a new failure of the talks will create serious new dangers for the future.

Our assessment is that the extension of the deadlock and a new failure of the intercommunal talks would unavoidably lead to the further consilidation of the faits accomplis that followed the invasion. But the most serious danger is that which threatens the existence of the independent sovereign State of Cyprus. The threat of the declaration of a separate Turkish Cypriot state must not be underestimated.

A declaration of a separate Turkish Cypriot state would, in the long term, be a blow to the stature of the Cyprus State as a state of the whole island and all Cypriots, would encourage both the local and foreign enemies of Cyprus and would facilitate the plans to impose the long sought solution of the double enosis. The danger of the complete takeover of Cyprus by Turkey as a consequence of the continuous deadlock and provocations that agents of NATOist imperialism can organize unhesitatingly must not also be underestimated.

Taking into consideration the above mentioned statements, the projected developments and the UN secretary general's efforts to resume the intercommunal talks, we stress the importance which we place on the success of the UN secretary general's new efforts. The Greek side must do everything with sincerity, persistence and patience to help the UN secretary general succeed in his task, because the consequences of a new failure may be so serious that history will never forgive any timidity or omission by us.

Regarding projected developments of the Cyprus issue, we consider it urgent to clarify with all possible precision the issues of the line and struggle for the solution of this issue. Our position on this fundamental issue is very clear. Our party has repeatedly declared that it is struggling for a peaceful and just solution to the Cyprus issue, and that it is struggling against a solution that would consolidate, make permanent and legalize the faits accomplis of the invasion and occupation. Our party, as it has declared many times, believes that the Makarios-Denktas agreement on the four guidelines, the proposals of the National Council and the Council of Ministers of 1977, your 10-point agreement with Denktas, and the relevant UN resolutions determine fully and clearly and constitute the appropriate bases for a peaceful, just, mutually acceptable and viable solution of the Cyprus issue. We must understand and accept that, while the solution of the Cyprus issue as dictated by objective conditions and reality will not be an acceptable solution--making permanent and legalizing the faits accomplis of the invasion and occupation--it will be a compromise solution, a solution of acceptable compromise.

Illusions Should Be Dissolved

In contrast to this position, some political and other forces systematically cultivate the illusion that it is possible, after the 1974 destruction, for Cyprus to return to the situation that existed before the coup and the occupation. We believe that this is an illusion, and the greatest service that you personally, as president, and the government could offer would be to fight the cultivation of such an illusion and help the people to realize and accept the truth: that under the present conditions only a solution of acceptable compromise is possible. Such is the solution of a bicommunal, biregional federation that would safeguard the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, nonaligned policy and demilitarization of Cyprus; that would secure the withdrawal of the Turkish and all foreign troops from Cyprus; that would win the right of voluntary return of the refugees to their homes, as provided in the UN resolutions; and that would determine the fate of the missing persons and safeguard Cyprus with valid and decisive international guarantees.

With regard to the tactics, our party has repeatedly stressed that, under concrete conditions, they can only consist of the intercommunal talks, an internal and international political struggle with the use of the United Nations, and the broadest possible internationalization of the Cyprus issue.

Only the unreserved acceptance of this line and tactics, adherence to this line, without deviating and wavering and the promotion of this line with deeds can contribute decisively not only to the resumption, but also--and more importantly--to the continuous holding of substantial, constructive and fruitful intercommunal talks.

For the Success of the Talks

According to our assessment and taking the UN resolution on the Cyprus issue into consideration, in order to realize the possibilities and prospects for intercommunal talks and the solution of the Cyprus issue it is necessary that:

A) Both sides show good will by taking concrete measures that would contribute to the creation of the appropriate and favorable climate for talks and by refraining from any statements or actions that might cause tension.

B) The two sides adhere without deviation to the four guidelines and the 10-point agreement of 10 May 1979.

C) The two sides be determined to discuss at the negotiating table with sincerity and a spirit of mutual understanding and good will every sentence that falls within the framework of the guidelines and the 10-point agreement, exerting every effort to overcome any difficulties that may arise during the intercommunal talks.

What Must Be Done by the Greek Cypriot Side

While the two sides must do the above in order for the talks to succeed, we consider it imperative to stress what the Greek Cypriot side must do to contribute positively to the resumption and continuation of substantive intercommunal talks and more generally to the solution of the Cyprus issue.

In our opinion, in order to achieve this aim it is necessary:

A) To clarify fully how we understand the four guidelines, the proposals of the National Council and the Council of Ministers of 1977, your agreement with Mr Denktas and the practical implementation of the UN resolutions on the Cyprus issue in the framework of a solution as we describe it above.

More specifically, in the framework of the above facts, the government and you, Mr President, must clarify your positions on the following substantive points:

I) How we understand the bicommunal, biregional federation; its various organs; their operation; its powers and so forth.

II) In connection with the territorial aspect, our position toward the size of the area that will be under Turkish Cypriot administration must be clarified by taking into consideration "the viability or the productivity or the ownership of land" as provided for by paragraph 2 of the Makarios-Denktas agreement.

III) The principles of free movement, settlement and property and how these principles can be implemented, taking into consideration the bicommunal character of the state and possible practical difficulties that are referred to in paragraph 3 of the same agreement, as well as the "security" factor of both Turkish Cypriots and Greek Cypriots.

IV) The powers of the central federal government and the regional administrations, taking into consideration the need to preserve the unity of the country and the bicommunal, biregional character of the state, issues that are referred to in paragraph 4 of the Makarios-Denktas agreement.

On these substantive matters, Mr President, you and the government must take the necessary political decisions which would be incorporated into the draft constitution which is now being prepared.

The need to fully clarify these matters, Mr President, emerges first from the fact that in the new intercommunal talks we must go fully prepared and second because both in the Cypriot political field and beyond political forces exist that have never agreed with the four guidelines, the National Council and the Council of Ministers proposal of 1977, or they hesitate over the correctness of the political line and tactics that are expressed in the four guidelines and our 1977 proposals.

We also believe that your policy as president of the government must be characterized by faith, stability and adherence to the four guidelines, the 1977 proposals and your agreement with Mr Denktas.

B) To adhere persistently to your statement of 14 January 1980, which was welcomed and applauded by our party, that we are ready to accept a biregional federal solution. The steady adherence by all of us to this statement and appropriately publicizing it will help to dissolve any doubts that may exist and will positively affect the thoughts and actions of the UN secretary general, the Turkish Cypriot community and also possibly the Turkish Cypriot leadership, the Ankara government and, in any case, definitely international circles, mainly the progressive ones that grant us their valuable support and solidarity.

C) To proceed in preparing a draft constitution for a biregional federation, as provided in our proposals of 1977, by calling for the help of special well-known constitutionalists in cooperation with the working committee and learned Cypriot lawyers.

Our preparation of such a draft constitution will not only demonstrate our good will, sincerity and determination to contribute to the success of the talks, but will also give us the advantage that we will be able to lay it on the negotiating table at the right moment and direct the discussion based on this draft constitution.

The Measures for Rapprochement Must Be Implemented

D) The government must proceed--with determination, without hesitation or deviation--with the implementation of some of the measures you have announced in connection with the rapprochement between Greek and Turkish Cypriots.

Beyond this, a complete program of goals for a rapprochement between Greek and Turkish Cypriots must be announced as quickly as possible. The central goal of this program must be the removal of mistrust and the promotion of a climate of mutual understanding and mutual trust, which are indispensable elements for the restoration of cooperation, friendship and peaceful coexistence under conditions of security for the Greek and Turkish Cypriots.

The working out of a draft constitution for biregional federation and the implementation and completion of measures of rapprochement between Greek and Turkish Cypriots must not be aimed at impressing the world; they must be a constituent part of the policy of the Greek Cypriot side for a Cyprus solution. They must be submitted so that the people may become conscious of the fact that the only road to save Cyprus from total catastrophe is the road to the reconciliation of Greek and Turkish Cypriots and to their peaceful coexistence within a common fatherland under the roof of a biregional federation.

The Domestic Front

It is an indisputable fact, which everyone admits, that our domestic front has been suffering from deep cracks. The present discord within the domestic front, mainly within the patriotic democratic forces that cooperated during and after 1976, is the worst of all and inevitably becomes the object of exploitation by imperialism. Undoubtedly, such a state of affairs can only cause serious damage to our anti-imperialist liberation struggle.

Basic Cause for the cracks, the Disagreements Over the Line-Tactics

Our party firmly believes that the main and basic cause for the cracks in our domestic front and for the disruption of the patriotic democratic forces are the substantive and radical disagreements regarding the line and tactics for the solution of the Cyprus problem.

Our party, which is undeviatingly devoted to the line and tactics laid down by the national-ministerial councils at the initiative of President Makarios, has been consistently struggling for a Cyprus solution based on this line and tactics. In contrast to our party, the DISI [Democratic Rally] leadership has identified itself with the West and accepts a NATOite Cyprus solution which is contrary to our people's vital interests. The EDEK leadership and other political and church figures disagree, laugh at and openly oppose the defined line and tactics, while DIKO [Democratic Party] or its leading figures show reservation or hesitation toward matters of line and tactics.

As for the question of defense organization, again this is not viewed in the same way by all the parties and political forces of the country.

Our party's position on this question is clear: We support the best possible and most perfect strengthening of our defense organization, not in order to launch an attack for the liberation of our occupied territories--this is not achievable--but in order to be in a position to put up the most effective defense in case of fresh aggression by the Turkish occupation troops. Our party believes that Cyprus' defense organization and the education of the people with the spirit of defense and sacrifice for the sake of our defense must be responsibly achieved by the government, not by the various "captaincies."

Unity as the Basis for the Charted Line

It is obvious that as long as this basic cause exists, the disruption among the patriotic democratic forces will remain unbridged with all the negative consequences this disruption entails for our struggle. Our party reaffirms its devotion to and its readiness for unity. But this unity must be based on the charted line and tactics and on the acceptance by everyone of a program that should at least be based on this line and tactics.

Our party favors bridging the deep cracks and achieving the broadest possible unity of the Cypriot people--unity not for the sake of unity nor unity as an end in itself, but unity that would constitute the means to wage our struggle more effectively. We believe that all those who sincerely believe in the charted line and tactics and who are struggling consistently to promote a Cyprus solution on the basis of this line and tactics must have a place in such a unit and in such a front. On the contrary, there is no place in such a front for the coupists or mainly the leading figures [presumably of the coup] or those who have not expressed repentance; nor is there room for those political forces which have identified themselves with or have been supporting a NATOite Cyprus solution. We consider the DISI leadership among such forces.

Provided, Mr President, that you agree with and accept fully the line and tactics of the national-ministerial councils for a Cyprus solution and that you are resolved to seek and struggle for the practical implementation of this line and tactics, you could play a positive role in connection with unity and cooperation not only between our party and DIKO but in general among all the people's patriotic democratic forces.

Other Negative Factors for Unity

Apart from this basic question of line and tactics which constitute the main cause for the disruption and the cracks in our domestic front, there are some other questions as well toward which the position of the government constitutes a negative factor for the unity of the patriotic democratic forces.

Such questions are the following:

A) The purge and cleansing of the state machinery, the security forces, the quasistate organizations and so forth. The decision, made by the government after so much delay, to close the question of purge with the termination of the services of 61 members of the civil and educational services and to give them full pension and other rights and to consider the question of purge as having definitely "ended" constitutes a real challenge to the people's feelings and to the feelings of all those with dead or missing relatives, to the refugees, and to every patriotic and democratic citizen of Cyprus.

This decision of the government can only have negative influence on the relations of our party with the government and you personally, Mr President.

B) The continuing policy of discrimination against AKEL and the leftwing. This policy, which is implemented both in the case of appointments to the various authorities [quasistate organizations] and bodies and in the case of employment, posting and promotion in the various fields of the civil service, the security forces, the quasistate organizations and so forth, can only negatively affect the relations of our party with the government.

As our party has repeatedly charged, this state of affairs is really scandalous and unacceptable. We believe that it is the duty of the government and you personally, Mr President, to take radical measures to put an end to this scandal forever.

C) The failure of the government to dissolve the EOKA-B [National Organization of Cypriot Fighters] armed groups as well as other states of affairs and the recovery of illegally held arms.

As we stressed in an earlier letter, although in your statement of March 1978 you gave 2 months notice for the surrender of illegally-held arms and you warned that after the expiration of this notice you were going to take extremely strict measures against those who would not answer your appeal, the results achieved thus far have been very poor. Despite this fact the government has failed to take any measure either to arrest those who illegally possess arms or to dissolve the EOKA-B or any other groups which illegally possess arms.

D) The continuing disregard of the people's will and sentiments in connection with the democratization of the political and social life of the country. As has been repeatedly declared on many occasions, our party considers it necessary to terminate the unacceptable state of affairs in connection with the system of appointing [village, municipal and other local councils] and the holding of elections for municipal authorities, school boards and for other bodies. Our party also considers the democratization of the cooperative movement necessary.

E) Finally, in connection with the economic policy of the government, our party considers it necessary to revise and readjust this policy in the direction of a fairer distribution of economic burdens and a fairer distribution and redistribution of the national income in a way that would serve the interests of workers and employees, and the working people in general, through the solution of the people's burning problems and, above all, the problems of refugees.

Mr President: As we have declared many times, our position toward your government--a position that has been defined by resolutions at congresses--is clear. We support every decision or action by your government which is of a political or other nature that we believe we are in agreement with or to respond to the interests of the Cypriot people's struggle, particularly that of the patriotic democratic forces. On the other hand, we criticize every decision or action of your government which in our assessment does not respond to or serve the interests of the Cypriot people's struggle.

No Room for Compromise in Matters of Line-Tactics

Of course the method, tone and sharpness of our criticism of the government is always dependent on the seriousness of the issue and on the extent and the size of the damage which, in our opinion, a government decision or action could cause. There are matters over which compromise is not possible. Such matters are mainly, and above all, the matters of line and tactics for the solution of the Cyprus problem. If it is established that there is disagreement over these matters and that the policy which is being followed is destructive for Cyprus, our party, so that it may not be held coresponsible in such a case, will have no other choice but to disassociate its position from that of the government.

By making our position toward this question clear, we simultaneously stress that our sincere and "ardent" desire is to avoid such a negative development and instead to make possible the identification of views among us in connection with the fundamental question of line and tactics for the solution of the Cyprus problem. As long as there is such an identification of views--we repeat it, just as we sincerely desire--this will serve both the struggle for a peaceful, fair, mutually acceptable and viable Cyprus solution and will also facilitate the unity and cooperation not only of our parties but of the patriotic democratic forces in general on the basis of the charted line and tactics of the national-ministerial councils, which constituts the minimum program.

We consider it our duty at this crucial turn and delicate phase of the Cyprus problem to again state to you with lucidity and clarity our views in a way that will not allow for misunderstanding or misinterpretations.

We believe that our action will be appreciated according and that it will serve as an serve as an opportunity for the exchange of views between us, the main goal being to arrive at join decisions in connection with the line and tactics of the struggle for a peaceful, fair and viable Cyprus solution and of the struggle for the salvation and vindication of Cyprus.

We are prepared to discuss the contents of this memorandum whenever and at whatever level you would like.

We remain,

[Signed] E. Papaioannou, secretary general, on behalf of the AKEL Central Committee.

[Text of President Kiprianou's reply to the AKEL 3 March 1980 memorandum]

[Text] Nicosia, 19 April 1980

To honorable Mr Ezekias Papaioannou, AKEL secretary general, Nicosia.

Dear Mr Papaioannou, I have studied your memorandum dated 3 March 1980 which conveys your positions on current Cyprus developments and on certain basic questions that concern the Cypriot people. I share your anxiety, which is also my anxiety, at the developments of the Cyprus problem and the continuing deadlock that prevents finding a peaceful Cyprus solution through the intercommunal dialogue.

As you know, this deadlock has not been overcome because of Turkish intransigence and insistence that we accept conditions that would effectively lead to a solution of confederation rather than bicommunal federation. Despite this, we believe that, under the circumstances. the talks constitute the appropriate path to a Cyprus solution and we shall continue our efforts to resolve the deadlock through the UN process.

I believe that we must remain firm in pursuing a biregional federation based on the agreements concluded during the summit meetings between Makarios and Denktas on 12 February 1977 and between Kiprianou and Denktas on 19 May 1979, which constitute the line which has been charted by the national and the ministerial councils.

The above agreements, as well as the pertinent UN resolutions, correctly and clearly define the basis of a peaceful, just mutually acceptable and viable Cyprus solution. [paragraph continues]

As you understand, the basic prerequisite for pursuing the charted line and tactics is the existence of a domestic front that would help implementation and acceptance of this line and tactics by all the Greek Cypriots or by the vast majority of the Cypriot people because, under the circumstances, this is the most correct line and tactic. I am certain that I shall have the assistance of all forces in this field, which will work to consolidate the unity of the people, particularly that of the political parties.

On my part, I will exert every possible effort--with determination and firmness--in pursuing and implementing this line and tactics, as well as in studying and working out the constitutional aspects of a biregional federation.

I agree--within the framework of our policy--with the fact you note: that the rapprochement of Greek and Turkish Cypriots must be continuously pursued because this greatly helps our struggle. Within the framework of this government policy for such a rapprochement--beyond the measures which have already been announced and which the government is pushing toward implementation--more measures that promote this goal will be considered.

It is a fact that our country is at the most critical turn of its history today and that it is the duty of all to continuously work, plan and correctly face and resolve the basic problems confronting our country, with special emphasis on the Cyprus problem--around which are revolving the domestic front, the defense organization, the mobilization of the people and in general the creation of the necessary social-economic foundation for maintaining our struggle. It is the critical nature of present times that requires everyone to show self-restraint, faithful devotion to the charted line and tactics of the struggle, caution in word and deed, moderation and sincere cooperation, because Cyprus' struggle is joint and the success or failure--failure that we all hope will never happen--will be common.

I deeply appreciate the responsible way in which your party faces the Cyprus problem and I again reiterate the certainty that with your help and the help of all the patriotic forces of the country the domestic front will be strengthened to the expected degree that would allow the implementation of the correct line and tactics of our struggle. I do not deal with specific issues in this letter. I am ready to discuss with you the views that you put forward in your memorandum.

With respect,

[Signed] S.A. Kiprianou, 29 May.

DEMOCRATIC RALLY CALLS ON KIPRIANOU GOVERNMENT TO RESIGN

NC292036 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 29 May 80

[Text] A statement issued by the Democratic Rally party tonight in connection with the latest developments criticizes the president of the republic and the government, talks about mistakes in the entire handling of the national issue as well as tolerance of extravagancies in the economy and describes the state of affairs as unacceptable. The Democratic Rally statement also talks about the impotence and indecisiveness of the president of the republic as well as about financial chaos in the central cooperative bank and calls on the president and the government to resign. The statement also criticizes the government for the aid of millions of pounds to the cooperative movement without, as the statement puts it, a public probe and without control or approval by the House of Representatives; it stresses that the government must impose effective control in order to save the useful and essential institution of the cooperative movement.

I DHIMOKRATIKI CALLS FOR GOVERNMENT OF DEMOCRATIC COOPERATION

NC261217 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 26 May 80 pp 1,10

[Editorial: "The Hour of Reckoning"]

[Text] The pro-Makarios forces in the country are entering a period of terrible hardship, with recent developments marking the beginning of decisive trends--and this at a time when:

One: Subversive forces from the outside and imperialist bridgehead groups from inside Cyprus are moving methodically to destroy our people's resistance, thus facilitating specific changes.

Two: Greatly inflated dangers are multiplying at every level as a result of deadlocks on the one hand and bad handling on the other.

The people are already painfully following [current events] and fearfully conjecturing about the future. They feel ungoverned and wait disappointedly.

This is precisely where the great responsibility of the democratic political leadership lies, which should have managed adequately and led the entire spectrum of the pro-Makarios forces--the forces that invested their expectations in a government--to which they gave a very strong vote--and have collected a disappointing incapability in return.

We have repeatedly pointed out and repeatedly warned by asking for a change, demanding indepth investigations and noting the simple fact that:

When the government found itself in power, having received the popular mandate with a pledge to follow the Makarios line, it neither served the popular will sufficiently nor consistently protected the Makarios line.

The result was inevitable. The extreme right (with its NATOist bridgeheads) acquires access through the open gates of weaknesses and mistakes while the pro-Makarios democratic world feels extremely vulnerable and almost condemned by a government that bears no relation to the one which they voted for and which is nonexistent in dealing with the strong popular will it should represent!

All the democratic forces of the progressive right, center and left are facing many responsibilities now and they must fulfill them correctly and immediately. Those who lead have the duty to systematize developments by averting the polarization that the extreme right is pursuing while simultaneously laying the foundations for a revived democratic unity based on the axes of common lines and coordinated common programs.

If they fail, then the consequences will not only be lamentable for the democratic world; they will be disastrous for Cyprus because the anti-Cypriot forces, which lie in wait with their known plans and imperialist bridgehead groups and await an opportunity--and they will have it.

We firmly believe that the only correct way out of the crisis is the establishment of a government of democratic cooperation that will base itself on a common program and line. The only common line is that of Makarios and the only common program is one that very clearly outlines the popular will and sovereignty.

The spokesman said that with representations to embassies of Islamic countries in Athens, the Greek Government asked them to object if the question of Muslims in western Thrace were raised or if the Turkish Cypriots asked for admission [to the conference] in any state capacity. The Greek Government also asked the Islamic embassies to object if an effort were exerted for the approval of a one-sided resolution on the Cyprus problem.

AUSTRIAN CHANCELLOR KREISKY'S VISIT CONTINUES

Comments on Iranian Situation

AU291304 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 29 May 80 p 5

[Special correspondent Ilse Keller report on Chancellor Kreisky's statements in Athens: "Iranians Feel Threatened by the United States"]

[Excerpt] Athens (AZ)--The revolution in Iran feels threatened by the United States. Consequently, in reaction to that, a process of strong identification by the people with the government has occurred. This was stated by Chancellor Kreisky on Wednesday to journalists in Athens. As he had done immediately after his arrival from Tehran, Chancellor Kreisky again declared that only an atmosphere free of pressure can lead to a satisfactory solution of the problem of the 53 U.S. hostages who have been detained in Iran since 4 November 1979.

The Iranians feel threatened by attacks and military raids, Kreisky said. The official visit of the chancellor to Greece is undoubtedly marked by the 2-day Iranian mission of the three Socialist International Vice Chairmen Kreisky, Palme and Gonzalez. Kreisky said the means of pressure that have been employed so far against Iran, such as the economic boycott by the United States, would not produce any results. Such measures merely hit the people, he said. Moreover, he added, it has not turned out that the boycott is being dodged simply by antedating agreements. The grain export freeze used by the United States as a means of pressure against the USSR in protest against Afghanistan's occupation has also proved to be inexpedient. It is another measure taken at the expense of the people, he said, adding that for people living in a dictatorship a nonpolitical event is a great occurrence.

Rather Carter Than Reagan

Kreisky declared that he had been assured by the influential national front leader Ayatollah Beheshti that the 53 American hostages, who have now been taken from the Tehran U.S. Embassy premises to several places in Iran, are doing fine. Beheshti had promised him that they would not be harmed in any way, Kreisky said. He then spoke about various current views in Tehran, for example the idea that the United States is not really interested in the release of the hostages, that every time the release has entered a concrete stage, the United States has done something to compel the Iranians to step back a pace.

The U.S. election campaign also has its effects on the Iranian conflict, Kreisky said, particularly in view of the fact that it compels the United States to play a more active role. "In view of the alternative," Kreisky said--obviously alluding to Reagan--"I hope Carter becomes President again."

Final Meetings

AU291423 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 29 May 80 p 1

[Excerpts] Athens--On the second day of his official visit to Greece, [28 May] in the morning, Chancellor Bruno Kreisky had another talk in strict privacy with Greek Prime Minister Yeoryios Rallis. It was followed by a 2-hour working meeting in which Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis participated. On that occasion both economic and international political topics were discussed.

The Austrian chancellor's official visit ended last night with a reception given by the Austrian side. Kreisky will remain in Greece for the rest of the week as a private visitor.

At the working meeting, and during his talk with Prime Minister Rallis in strict privacy, Kreisky again referred to the Socialist International delegation's Tehran visit. The chancellor declared that in Iran he gained the impression that the revolution there feels threatened by the various measures by the Americans. In addition to questions concerning the international policy of detente, the two government chiefs also discussed the Middle East issue, and in this context the PLO.

The bilateral questions between Greece and Austria that were discussed in the talks were primarily confined to Greece's accession to the Common Market and Greek transit truck traffic through Austria. At present Austria cannot comply with the hosts' wishes to increase their truck transit quotas, the chancellor declared. On the other hand, he said, it is understandable that the Greek side could not make Austria any major concessions during the transition period following its joining of the European Community.

In the afternoon the chancellor had an unscheduled meeting with Greek Defense Minister Evangelos Averof.

AVEROF, PESMAZOGLOU COMMENT ON PASOK POSITIONS

AT291341 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 29 May 80 p 1

[Text] The people, not other forces, at election time will close PASOK's road to power. This emerges from a statement made yesterday by National Defense Minister E. Averof which is as follows: "In connection with comments by certain newspapers according to which cadres of New Democracy, among which I am included, have taken positions--regarding the possibility of PASOK's assuming power--contrary to those taken by the prime minister, I consider it useful to make the following statement: In the texts that have been cited I have stressed that 'the people and only the people will close the road to PASOK.'

"Consequently, my position is lucid and crystal clear. With their verdict the people will not give power to a party that has many ideologies, let me not mention them, to a party whose factions prefer to have as their symbol Aris Veloukhiotis [a civil war communist leader] and not Venizelos, to a party which, I believe, aims at the establishment of a one-party state."

Furthermore, in a talk yesterday with political editors, [KODISO leader] Pesmazoglou said that he has ascertained with joy that Papandreou "has diametrically changed his position on the issue of the role that Europe can play in international detente. Papandreou now accepts that Europe can become politically independent of the United States and supports that Greek progressive forces can contribute to this development."

ECEVIT MEETS PARTY LEADERS ON ELECTION AMENDMENT

Demirel Meeting

TA291753 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 29 May 80

[Text] Justice Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel and RPP leader Bulent Ecevit met again today to discuss the issue of presidential elections. Ecevit then met with National Salvation Party [NSP] leader Necmettin Erbakan. The meeting is still continuing. Demirel and Ecevit met at the latter's parliamentary office at 1700 for 45 minutes.

In a statement following the meeting, Ecevit said that Demirel told him that the RPP proposal for a process to elect the president was not found to be an effective one. Ecevit rejected the allegation that this process had already been tried unsuccessfully and added that they still believed it would be beneficial to use this method. Ecevit continued: As I have already pointed out, Demirel told me that this method was not found to be appropriate. He added that the Justice Party supported only the constitutional amendment for the election of the president and that if the RPP came up with a new proposal on this issue it would be duly considered. Demirel further told me that if the Justice Party could come up with a new solution they would submit this proposal to us. Ecevit concluded by saying that if a new solution was proposed by either of the two parties, it might lead to another meeting with Demirel.

In a statement after he met with Ecevit, Demirel said that the proposal made by Ecevit in their meeting yesterday was not an effective and democratic enough process to elect the president. Demirel recalled that this method had already been tried unsuccessfully in the past and added: If you ask me what will be done now, our views are clear. It has already been a week since we proposed the election of the president by the nation. We believe that 5 weeks should be enough to get a result in this manner. However, I would like to point out that if there are other solutions to this problem, then I am open for discussions, if these solutions do not contradict the democratic system, the Constitution and the national conscience. I am not excluding the continuation of the dialogue. If we can think of any new way to solve this problem, we will discuss it with all party officials and the RPP's Ecevit. I conveyed this to Ecevit during our talks and I begged Ecevit that if they can come up with a new proposal that will eliminate our objections, then we are ready to discuss it as well. The dialogue will continue.

In reply to a question by a journalist who recalled that the RPP Administrative Council statement which was issued today referred to the establishment of a new government, Demirel said: Let whoever thinks he can do it come and assume power. Let him deal with the current circumstances in Turkey if he can. We did not overthrow the RPP government. The RPP government was not able to cope with Turkey's problems. Does this mean that the RPP is a candidate for the government once more? Let us have elections so that this issue can be settled.

After his meeting with Demirel, Ecevit visited NSP leader Erbakan. The meeting is still continuing.

Erbakan Meeting

TA292201 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 29 May 80

[Text] In a statement after he met with National Salvation Party [NSP] leader Necmettin Erbakan for about an hour, RPP leader Bulent Ecevit said that he had briefed Erbakan on his talks with Prime Minister Demirel. The meeting was held at Erbakan's parliamentary office.

Recalling that he could not reach an agreement with Demirel on the way the Turkish president should be elected, Ecevit said: In the light of this development we agreed with Erbakan that both the RPP and NSP party groups should convene in the next few days in a bid to accelerate the presidential election process and exert efforts in this direction. Ecevit pointed out that no candidate's name had come up during the talks. Noting that they had reviewed various national issues, Ecevit said that he shared with Erbakan the same worries about escalating terror incidents and about the economic policies being pursued.

In a statement after he met with RPP leader Ecevit, Erbakan said that Turkey was heading for a great disaster and added: Under the circumstances, we have to shoulder our responsibilities. Erbakan said that they held the same views with Ecevit on the issues of the effective functioning of the parliament, the early conclusion of the presidential elections, the elimination of the terror incidents and the easing of the strained atmosphere in the country. Erbakan said that, taking the strained political atmosphere into consideration, it was imperative for political party leaders to be conciliatory with each other.

Defining the Justice Party constitutional amendment proposal for the election of the president as insincere, Erbakan said that such a stand would only aggravate the crisis in the country. In reply to a question, Erbakan reiterated his view that the issue of a government should be taken up only after the president is elected.

ECEVIT ANNOUNCES RPP DECISION, CALLS FOR BROAD-BASED GOVERNMENT

TA291614 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 29 May 80

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit held a news conference this afternoon and announced the decisions taken by the RPP Administrative Council. Ecevit called for the formation of a broad-based government. Ecevit said:

[Begin Ecevit recording] Since the Justice Party administration assumed power it has been claiming that the dimensions of anarchy and terror in the country have exceeded those of a problem which concerns the government alone and have reached those of a problem involving the state and the nation. Again, since the formation of the current government, the prime minister and the Justice Party administration--as was also reiterated in the statement issued following yesterday's Justice Party parliamentary group meeting--have been asking all parties to adopt a joint stand in the face of anarchy and terror. The government has been stating for months that the dimensions of anarchy and terror have reached limits beyond the government's control. Actually, terror in Turkey has increased in such proportions that even a government formed by a strong party can hardly overcome it. It is evident that a government such as the current one--a government which depends upon the support of one of the parties involved in terror for its existence--can never cope with terror and anarchy.

As a matter of fact, terror and anarchy have reached a point--both qualitatively and quantitatively--where they seriously threaten the state and democracy. Each day we are confronted with the bitter proofs of the invalid and objectionable stand the government adopts, or is forced to adopt, in the face of anarchy and terror. The RPP cannot be expected to be a partner in this stand. On the other hand, the government has confessed that it cannot be successful in the struggle it will wage alone against terror and anarchy. Therefore, it is a fact that a joint stand and solidarity on the issue will be beneficial. The most valid method for adopting a joint stand against anarchy and terror--which has brought democracy and the state to the brink of a chasm, or rather has actually pushed them into the chasm--is to jointly assume government responsibility and to jointly determine the stand to be adopted and to implement it. This cooperation can be secured through a broad-based government, or a government supported by not only the two big parties but also by all political parties and forces loyal to democracy and not connected--directly or indirectly--with incidents of violence.

We believe that it is our historic duty to reiterate our call--which we have been making for months in view of the developments in Turkey--to that effect, now that the threat has become more apparent. We are not making this call for the sake of our democracy, state and nation alone. We believe that this call will also save the Justice Party. However, even if this path is rejected, the fall of the current government will open the way to new solutions. The crisis which has intensified in the last 6 months, mostly due to the stand and structure of the government, reveals that there is an urgent government problem in Turkey and that it should be solved as soon as possible. [end recording]

Condemnation of NAP Boycott

TA291842 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 29 May 80

[Excerpts] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit said that the most valid way to adopt a joint stand against anarchy and terror--which have brought democracy and the state to the brink of a chasm--is to jointly assume government responsibility. Ecevit proposed the formation of a broad-based government with the participation of the Justice Party, RPP and the National Salvation Party.

Noting that recently the attacks by perpetrators of violence--united in their aim of destroying the democratic system--were directed at the political parties and their officials, Ecevit said that preventing the political party officials from working out of fear for their lives would greatly limit the activities of political parties, which are defined in our Constitution as the indispensable elements of our political life. This will immobilize the democratic system, Ecevit added.

Blaming the Justice Party and the Nationalist Action Party [NAP] for their stand, which prevented the functioning of the parliament, Ecevit said that this widely damaged the democratic system. Ecevit added that the government and its main supporters were not worried by this situation and launched campaigns to change the Constitution, which threatened the democratic system. He said that this was a stand that would damage democracy. Ecevit said that the economic model that the government was trying to implement was not compatible with either the liberal democratic system or the democratic workers rights.

Recalling that the NAP parliamentary groups had decided to continue the struggle with the help of the people and to suspend parliamentary work until the party administrative council passed a resolution to this effect, Ecevit said that this resolution was different from decisions by certain other parties from time to time to boycott parliamentary work. Ecevit said that for a political party--which is primarily responsible for carrying out work in the parliament--to choose to struggle and work outside the parliament meant a definite step in dragging the democratic system off its legal track.

Ecevit said that to talk about continuing the struggle with the help of the people was a trick and added that this meant avoiding responsibilities to the people. Referring to the many terror incidents caused by the NAP militants in various parts of the country, Ecevit said that in some places they had not abided by the curfews and had attempted to intimidate the people, particularly the RPP followers, by force. Ecevit said that this constituted disobedience of the laws of the state. This, Ecevit said, was a rehearsal for a countrywide uprising and an action directed against the state. Ecevit added: These incidents have exposed what they meant by continuing the struggle with the help of the people.

Recalling that, in his news conference held yesterday, NAP leader Turkes blamed the RPP for the violent incidents, Ecevit said that at no time was the RPP involved in such incidents and was opposed to them whatever their source.

NAP COUNCIL AGAIN BLAMES ECEVIT FOR ASSASSINATIONS

TA291818 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 29 May 80

[Text] Nationalist Action Party [NAP] Chairmanship Council has issued a statement saying that the assassination of NAP deputy leader Gun Sazak shows that those who support the Turkish State should exert more efforts with determination, faith and an invincible willpower. The statement issued after the NAP Chairmanship Council meeting held under leader Alpaslan Turkes says that RPP leader Bulent Ecevit and those connected with him had a decisive role in the assassination of those who support the state and the nation.

The statement adds: While so many NAP members are treacherously being assassinated, all the authorized NAP organs have counseled NAP members and the nation to keep cool and be moderate and patient. However, Ecevit's attempts to set Turkey ablaze because an RPP member was killed should be a warning to those who are unaware of his role and position within the communist anarchy.

Noting that serious responsibilities befall those who wish to protect the unity of the state and the nation against all kinds of threats and to put an end to fraternal bloodshed and to foreign slavery, the statement adds that the greatest of responsibilities befall our patriotic RPP member brothers.

VOTCP RAPS 'FASCIST MOVEMENT' FOR MURDER OF SAZAK

TA291204 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 29 May 80

[Unattributed commentary: "The Fascist Movement and an Extremely Dangerous New Bloody Provocation"]

[Text] Gun Sazak, one of the leaders of the fascist Nationalist Action Party [NAP], has been killed. This bloody provocation is part of the bloody incidents organized by the CIA and MIT [National Intelligence Organization] agents and the fascist movement. The aims and the consequences of this provocation are also very clear.

Firstly, there is within the fascist NAP itself the issue of settling accounts, which is becoming increasingly more obvious. This settling of accounts has assumed bloody forms following the orders of Turkes, the head of the fascist NAP which started the period of political murders and massacres in Turkey, to shoot those who deviate from the cause. Through bloodshed, the fascist NAP is eliminating all living evidence of its political murders and massacres and the slightest opposition to fascist Turkes. The military prosecutor of the Istanbul Martial Law Command made an extremely important statement at the end of March. In his statement, the military prosecutor said that the murderer of Abdi Ipekci, the fascist Agca affiliated with NAP, shot and killed two NAP members after being assisted in his escape from prison and that these murders show once more that Ipekci was killed for political reasons.

The fascist NAP is being managed with Nazi methods. The same Nazi methods are being used within the party structure as well. The fascist NAP is organizing mass massacres such as the Kahramanmaras massacre. It is trying to incite civil war. It is hiring assassins to commit murders and to throw bombs and it is then attempting to attribute these atrocious and savage crimes and massacres to all progressive, patriotic and democratic organizations and forces without discrimination. It is thus escalating the fascist movement.

The information and files on the political murders and massacres committed by the fascist NAP are more than sufficient to have that party--which has transformed the country into a sea of blood-banned and its leaders tried. This fascist party is directly linked with the CIA AND Nazi remnant imperialist circles.

It is known that fascist Turkes has held secret meetings with Strauss, who is one of the supporters of fascist terrorist organizations in Europe. It is also known that the fascist NAP is also involved in the smuggling of arms and narcotics and that fascist Turkes and former Customs and Monopolies Minister Sazak have special relations with the most dangerous gangsters who are believed to be the extensions of the Mafia.

This fascist and blood-stained party is being protected by the collaborationist and monopolist bosses and the likes of Demirel, and its members have been placed in key positions in the government. This party, Turkes and Demirel, who is in a bloody cooperation with Turkes, have transformed fascist terrorism into state terrorism.

Dear listeners, the recent killings of RPP administrators one after the other, and the statements by the likes of Demirel and Eren that the victims are not normal RPP members, clearly show that fascist terrorism is being directed against the people and against all progressive and patriotic persons in the form of state terrorism. Demirel, who is receiving bloody support from the fascist NAP, is approving these fascist murders. The motive of the likes of Demirel, who defends the interests of the collaborationist and monopolist bosses such as Sabanci and Koc and of the imperialist monopolies, consists of imposing on the people a semimilitary despotic system and eliminating the democratic rights and freedoms stipulated by the Constitution. This is why they are supporting fascist terrorism and transforming it into state terrorism.

Meanwhile, the CIA and MIT are establishing--in a more intense manner--supposedly leftist terrorist organizations. They are thus attempting to deceive the people, to disguise the growing fascist threat and to justify the laws of oppression they wish to enact and their attempts to amend the Constitution in a reactionary fashion. The likes of Demirel and Turkes are for this purpose exploiting all their political murders and massacres and the provocations organised by the CIA and MIT. Now, they will attempt to use the murder of Sazak for the same purpose. The murder of Sazak, which has clearly been exposed as a new bloody provocation by the fascists within the CIA and MIT, could have extremely dangerous consequences. Like Sivas, many cities in various parts of the country are already facing the danger of massacres organized by fascist NAP and Demirel, in collaboration with governors and security directors. This threat is even greater now. It is evident that the armed mobs of bullies from the NAP have indiscriminately intensified their bloody attacks against all progressive, patriotic and democratic forces and persons.

All antifascists, all class and mass unionists, all the leaders and members of democratic organizations, the Turkish Labor Party, the Turkish Socialist Workers Party, all RPP members, all democrats regardless of party affiliation, and all communists and progressive, patriotic and revolutionary youths should unite closely against this threat and to insure security of life. The main conditions for facing this threat consist of adopting a coolheaded attitude, not being influenced by provocations and maintaining an organized and unified stand.

Despite all the bloody attacks, schemes and provocations, the fascist NAP and its ringleaders will not be able to escape from our people. All antifascist forces and persons should act in solidarity. All democratic persons and writers should act in solidarity in a bid to fully expose with evidence the bloody facade of the fascist NAP and the bloody collaborarion between men such as Demirel and the fascist NAP and to ensure security of life.

OPEC FINANCE MINISTERS RAISE AID FUND CAPITAL

AU291633 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 29 May 80 p 8

[Summary] Vienna--After tough negotiations lasting more than 9 1/2 hours, the OPEC finance ministers finally reached agreement about raising the OPEC fund capital by $1.6 billion [to $4 billion]. "As OPEC Secretary General Ortiz declared at a short press conference late Tuesday night at the Hofburg Palace, 'some member states were rather reserved' when it came to fixing their voluntary contributions to the fund that was established to help reduce balance of payments deficits, and to finance projects of developing countries.

"Especially the Iranian delegation opposed the amount envisaged for it and eventually consented only to a 'substantially lower amount.'" The major contributions to the fund have been made by Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates, while Iran, Algeria, Libya and Nigeria made only minor contributors. "The 13 OPEC finance ministers failed to reach agreement on the exact final amounts of the individual payments to be made for replenishing the fund." Therefore, Ibrahim Shihata, director general of the OPEC fund that has its headquarters in Vienna, was instructed to immediately open negotiations with the oil-producing countries regarding their contributions. "The next regular session of the OPEC finance ministers will be held on 22 September in Quito (Ecuador)." It will discuss the granting of development loans to Third World countries.

CONSCRIPTS' REPRESENTATIVES FROM EUROPEAN ARMIES MEET

ID271525 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 16 May 80 pt 1 p 1

[Mogens Auning report: "European Soldiers to Action Meeting"]

[Text] Noncommissioned conscripts from a number of West European nations are gathering today and tomorrow for a planning meeting in Copenhagen.

The meeting is taking place at the Egmont H. Petersens College on Norre Alle and has been arranged by the executive committee of the spokesmen for noncommissioned conscripts in the defense forces. It had originally been intended to hold the meeting at a Danish military establishment. Defense Minister Poul Sogaard was opposed to this, however, since the participants include representatives of countries where soldiers are forbidden to organize themselves in trade union-like associations.

A spokesman for the executive committee, Kaj Petersen, told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that the object of the meeting is to discuss what courses of action conscripts can follow to bring about more democratic conditions within the defense systems in their respective countries.

According to information given to BERLINGSKE TIDENDE, two Danes, one Swede, one Finn, one Spaniard, one Frenchman, an Italian, a Belgian and two Dutchmen will be taking part.

Regulations governing Danish conscripts state that they may only take part in such meetings in their free time.

The meeting in Copenhagen is part of the work being done among conscripts in a number of West European countries to form a European organization to protect the interests of conscripts in matters related to wages, working time and criminal law.

STARIBACHER, USSR'S ORUDZHEV OPEN NEW GAS PIPELINE

AU301326 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 30 May 80 p 7

[Summary] The new European and transnational gas pipeline system of the West Austria Gas (WAG) pipeline and the Central European Gas (MEGAL) pipeline was opened on 29 May with a ceremony held at the Baumgarten natural gas station of the Austrian Oil Administration (OEMV) near the CSSR border. The new pipeline system has been built jointly by the OEMV, the FRG Ruhrgas and the French Gaz de France companies, and will also be operated by these companies. The opening ceremony was attended by USSR Gas Minister Sabit A. Orudzhev, Trade Minister Josef Staribacher, the ambassadors of the USSR, the FRG and France, representatives of the gas companies of these three countries as well as numerous other prominent public and business figures. The Baumgarten station is so favorably located that it was also chosen as the delivery point for Soviet natural gas destined for Yugoslavia and Italy via the Trans-Austria Gas (TAG) pipeline that has been in operation since 1974.

In his speech OEMV Director General Bauer termed the 1968 Austrian-Soviet gas agreement a model for subsequent Soviet agreements with the FRG, Italy and France, and noted that Austria is now seeking to conclude the fourth long-term gas agreement with the USSR. "Minister Orudzhev also stressed the significance of the first gas delivery agreement with Austria which marked the beginning of a close cooperation with West European countries in the gas sector. By the end of this month, he said, Austria will have imported more than 22 billion cubic meters of natural gas from the USSR. France has already imported over 8 billion cubic meters. Next month the Soviet gas deliveries to all partner countries will exceed the noteworthy 100 billion cubic meter mark. At present the Soviet Union is exporting 28 billion cubic meters annually, part of which is delivered through the WAG-MEGAL pipeline system, he said." [figures as published]

Trade Minister Staribacher termed the new pipeline an important step toward Austria's aim of acquiring a pivotal function between the state trade countries and the West European free market economies. A similar role is sought by Austria in the electric power sector where the pending negotiations give rise to the hope that here, too, a satisfactory solution will be achieved soon. As far as oil is concerned, Austria would welcome a connection to the Druzhba oil pipeline near Bratislava, he said, adding that all these efforts should be regarded as part of Austria's active policy of neutrality.

STATEMENT ON FOREIGN MINISTER PAHR'S VISIT TO BRAZIL

AU301056 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 30 May 80 p 2

[Report on Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr's official visit to Brazil 25-29 May 1980]

Both ministers reaffirmed their government's support for the unrestricted application of the principles of the United Nations and their endeavors to strengthen that organization. Discussing the international situation the two foreign ministers agreed that the current state of international relations gives cause for concern and expressed their hope for an early improvement. During the talks, which passed in an atmosphere of cordial friendship and mutual understanding, it was noted with satisfaction that the two sides hold identical views on the overwhelming majority of the questions discussed.

Both ministers reaffirmed their mutual wish to further deepen and expand the bilateral relations between the two countries. They noted with satisfaction that favorable prerequisites for this exist, especially in the economic, industrial, financial and cultural fields. The sides also discussed possibilities of scientific-technical cooperation in various fields. To implement these projects it was suggested that a high-ranking Austrian Government delegation be dispatched to Brazil.

In order to intensify and further expand bilateral economic relations, an invitation was extended for a Brazilian economic delegation to visit Austria. The invitation was received with interest. Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr invited Brazilian Foreign Minister Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro to pay an official visit to Austria. The invitation was accepted with pleasure.

INCIDENT AT HUNGARIAN BORDER; REFUGEE INJURED

AU301125 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1000 GMT 30 May 80

[Text] There was a serious incident this morning [30 May] at the Klingenbach border checkpoint at the Austrain-Hungarian border: A semitrailer tractor with a Turkish license number broke through the customs barriers shortly before 0600, local time. Austrian customs officers heard several shots and a loud noise, and saw a huge cloud of dust. The vehicle had stopped, heavily damaged, half on Hungarian and half on Austrian territory. The driver's cab, clearly showing bullet holes, was torn off. A West German couple, who wanted to cross the border into Hungary, witnessed the incident. According to them, there were three young men in the tractor, one of whom was injured and lay on the ground. The other two ran back to the Hungarian side of the border for reasons so far unknown. The injured person was taken to the Eisenstadt Hospital but could not be questioned yet. The border crossing point, which had been closed for hours, is now open again for cars. The Foreign Ministry in Vienna has called for a session of the Austrian-Hungarian Border Commission to clear up the incident. The commission will have to submit its report within 24 hours.

MATTHOEFER REJECTION OF UK BUDGET ARRANGEMENT SPARKS CONTROVERSY

LD311757 Hamburg DPA in German 1716 GMT 31 May 80

Wehner, who apparently supports Matthoefer's line, made a statement concerning the Brussels compromise, which is rather costly for the Federal Republic: Bonn, like the other EC states is interested in preventing a division within the Community, but has no intention of allowing itself to be "milked like a cow" if and when required. According to Wehner, Matthoefer is to inform both Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher of his attitude before the Cabinet meeting next Wednesday. Already on Friday it was stated that the Federal Government at next Wednesday's session is likely to deal with the EC foreign ministers' compromise agreement which had been assessed by Genscher as a "success for Europe."

Cabinet agreement against Matthoefer's will will not be possible for the time being since he can use his suspensive veto in financial decisions which he disapproves of.

Minister Wants 'Cover Proposals'

LD011707 Hamburg DPA in German 1336 GMT 1 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer has made his assent to the Brussels contribution compromise dependent on cost-covering proposals. At the same time, he would like to see European agricultural policy reformed. This emerged from a statement by the minister which was published in Bonn on Sunday, after SPD Group Chairman Herbert Wehner had reported yesterday about the minister's critical attitude.

Matthoefer (?said): "Anyone giving his assent to these (contribution compromise) proposals must submit cover proposals." Anyone who, for reasons which he quite understood, expected the German people to make sacrifices would have to say just how these sacrifices were to be made. "An increase in net borrowing is out of the question." The minister added that, at present, he was unable to see where the cut of DM500-600 million, the cost of the Brussels compromise to the federal budget, could be made. He pointed out that Bonn had only recently, in the supplementary budget, made a cut of about DM2 billion in order to finance new, also international obligations, and that a global expenditure shortfall of DM2.8 billion would still have to be covered.

According to Matthoefer, Bonn will have to withstand a financial strain of about DM1.3 billion in 1981. Some DM600 million are already contained in the Bundestag's fiscal plans. Matthoefer said further that it was important for Europe to remain capable of action in the present international situation, but it was also important to help people in Europe's economically underdeveloped regions rather than to finance the overflowing butter mountains. Hence, pressure to reform the agricultural policy would have to be kept up.

Strong FDP Criticism

[Excerpts] Bonn--The announcement by SPD Group Chairman Herbert Wehner that Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer (SPD) does not intend to accept the compromise on the British EC budget contribution negotiated by the foreign ministers in Brussels last week has led to sharp criticism from the FDP leadership.

Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Economics Minister Otto Count Lambsdorff have warned against Bonn "putting a question mark" over the compromise, and against risking the European ability to act in international politics. Federal Food Minister Josef Ertl spoke of the "biggest defeat for the democratic world since 1945" should the compromise settlement on the EC contributions fail.

Foreign Minister Genscher, who pointed out the advantages derived by the Federal Republic from Europe, said on Hesse radio on Sunday that the finance minister had every right to expect support from his Cabinet colleagues for the necessary financial decisions. However, everyone must realize that the European Community's capacity to act was at stake--and this is part of the political equilibrium, including East and West, in the world.

Lambsdorff Welcomes EC Compromise

LD011136 Hamburg DPA in German 1027 GMT 1 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Bonn/Coldone--Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff (FDP) has expressly welcomed the Brussels EC compromise to help Great Britain. At the same time, he sharply criticizing SPD Group Chairman Herbert Wehner and Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer (SPD) on account of their disapproving attitude. Speaking at the North Rhine-Westphalian FDP's party congress in Cologne on Sunday, Lambsdorff said that anyone rejecting the EC budget compromise by resorting to the "wornout paymaster argument" ought to bear in mind that the current offer was less expensive for the Federal Republic than the earlier offer by the federal chancellor.

Schmidt, Giscard Confer

LD020944 Hamburg DPA in German 0746 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Paris--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt reportedly reached an agreement with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing by telephone on Sunday regarding Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer's objections to the Brussels compromise on the British contribution to the EC budget, according to unofficial sources in Paris this morning.

A French Government statement expressed "astonishment that the German delegation in Brussels had agreed very quickly to a solution of the British contribution to the Community budget going far beyond the German-French proposals of the Luxembourg summit." France had, the statement went on, accepted the compromise to the same extent as the other partner countries in order to avoid serious consequences for the Community's future.

SOVIET DEPUTY PREMIER CONTINUES ECONOMIC TALKS

Schmidt-Tikhonov Discussions

LD301115 Hamburg DPA in German 1042 GMT 30 May 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--Chancellor Schmidt today received Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister [title as received] Nikolay Tikhonov who is in Bonn for the meeting of the German-Soviet Economic Commission.

Asked whether Tikhonov had conveyed a message from the Soviet head of state and party, Leonid Brezhnev, Government Spokesman Boelling later told the press that he knew nothing of this.

According to Boelling no official date has yet been fixed for the proposed visit of the federal chancellor and foreign minister to the USSR. Boelling said that the chancellor and Tikhonov had assessed the visit as being important because it would contribute to an "absolutely necessary dialogue."

According to Boelling, Schmidt and Tikhonov exchanged views on the present international situation. The discussion had also turned to "what weighs on our mind." However, the main subject was German-Soviet economic relations which were positively assessed by both sides. The chancellor also made it clear that the international situation was not conducive to economic relations. Political relations between Bonn and Moscow were described as satisfactory.

Lambsdorff, Tikhonov Remarks

LD301444 Hamburg DPA in German 1345 GMT 30 May 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--The Federal Republic and the USSR will continue to develop their economic cooperation, especially in the energy sector, in the coming years. This was made clear by Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff and Soviet First Deputy Premier Nikolay Tikhonov at the end of the ninth meeting of the German-Soviet Economic Commission in Bonn today. Chancellor Schmidt and Foreign Minister Genscher will probably sign a long-term program for cooperation between the two countries in the economic and industrial sector in Moscow at the end of the month. This program contains recommendations to enterprises in the Federal Republic and organizations in the USSR as to how the German-Soviet skeleton agreement on economic and industrial cooperation, which was signed in 1978, can be translated into reality during the next 23 years.

At the end of the 2-day meeting of the commission, Lambsdorff and Tikhonov declared themselves satisfied with its progress. Economic relations are satisfactory, Lambsdorff said, "but they cannot be detached from the background of the international situation."

Economic relations between the two countries and the international situation were also discussed at a meeting between Tikhonov and Chancellor Schmidt this morning. Afterwards, Tikhonov limited himself to telling the press conference that he had also discussed with the chancellor the complicated international situation. He refused to make any further statement on this subject.

During a meeting with Federal Foreign Minister Genscher, both sides once again made it clear how important it was, especially in difficult times, not to allow the dialogue to be disrupted and to discuss all problems frankly with one another. According to the Bonn Foreign Office, the talk also touched on the subjects that will play a role during the visit of the chancellor and the foreign minister to Moscow. Both sides were in agreement on the importance of the development of German-Soviet relations for detente in Europe. Tikhonov is the highest ranking Soviet politician to have visited the Federal Republic since the Afghanistan crisis.

According to Lambsdorff the U.S. demand for economic sanctions against the USSR was not raised at the meeting of the commission. Asked whether the limitation of deliveries of of strategic goods to the USSR had played a part, the minister curtly said: "no."

Tikhonov and Lambsdorff see good possibilities for the development of economic relations, mainly in the energy sector. "The two national economies can supplement each other," Lambsdorff said. However, the new program, which is ripe for signature, could in his view only state aims for cooperation. "Their translation into practice depends upon whether or not mutually acceptable conditions can be negotiated in individual cases."

As an "example of successful and sensible cooperation" Lambsdorff mentioned the steel tubes--the natural gas deal wherein the USSR payed for the delivery of large diameter tubes from the Federal Republic with natural gas.

Tikhonov emphasized his country's interest in long-term cooperation with the Federal Republic, hinting at the possibility of additional natural gas supplies from the USSR for the Federal Republic, France, Italy, Belgium, Austria and Holland. A decision in this respect will be taken in conjunction with the next 5-year plan. A new pipeline to carry the gas from the USSR to Western Europe is being considered. Another possibility is to make wider use of the natural gas in the USSR instead of oil and, instead, export Soviet oil to some countries. In this case the building of a new pipeline might be unnecessary.

SCHMIDT: TALKS WITH BREZHNEV NOT 'FRIENDSHIP MEETING'

LD311925 Hamburg DPA in German 1840 GMT 31 May 80

[Excerpt] Bad Segeberg--For Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt the meeting with the Soviet head of state and party Leonid Brezhnev in Moscow at the end of June will be "no friendship meeting." The Federal Republic is unable to accept incursions into other states, Schmidt said on Saturday at an SPD rally in Bad Segeberg, Schleswig-Holstein, concerning the situation in Afghanistan. If "the disturbed equilibrium" is to be restored and peace made more secure, then East and West will have to talk, the chancellor emphasized. The "hot line" between the United States and the Soviet Union will have to be used for contacts in times of crisis.

SCHMIDT, GENSCHER PLAN 'PLAIN SPEAKING' ON MOSCOW VISIT

LD011238 Hamburg DPA in German 1216 GMT 1 Jun 80

[Excerpts] During their visit to Moscow, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher intend to do some plain speaking to the Soviet leadership to explain the Federal Republic's and its European and Atlantic allies' position on the present international situation.

Genscher emphasized in an interview with Hesse radio on Sunday that it was Bonn's intention for this trip to be a contribution to East-West dialogue and to the safeguarding of peace beyond European borders. At the same time he warned against putting a strain on the Moscow talks by expecting too much.

Genscher regarded as unjustified the opposition's fear of Germany going it alone. He pointed out that he had consulted all the EC foreign ministers about this trip and that, in addition, talks with his counterparts in France, Great Britain and the United States had taken place. Further opportunities for coordination are to be offered by the meeting of the European Council in Venice, the subsequent world economic summit, and the NATO foreign ministers conference.

POLAND REFUSES ENTRY TO WEST BERLIN PARLIAMENTARIANS

LD301429 Hamburg DPA in German 1304 GMT 30 May 80

[Text] Berlin--The Polish Government has refused entry to 15 West Berlin parliamentarians for a fact-finding visit on education matters. This was confirmed today by informed sources in Berlin. No official reasons have been given for the refusal.

Behind the dispute apparently is the fact that the trip was to have been organized by the Berlin bureau of the Freidrich Ebert Foundation (Bonn), which is close to the SPD. The members--from the CDU, SPD and FDP--of the Berlin house of representatives' education committee had intended to visit educational establishments in Poland and also to hold talks on German-Polish textbook recommendations.

Sources among those taking part in the planned trip later reported that the parliamentarians' visit to Poland had been prepared confidentially for months. The fact-finding trip planned for the beginning of June was among other things to take place in Warsaw and Krakow. The dispute with the Polish side had arisen over the Bonn letterhead used by the Friedrich Ebert Foundation which had been called (?to do the organizing). The Poles had demanded that the foundation use the letterhead of its Berlin branch.

The trip had fallen through about 2 weeks ago. The collapse had not, however, been made public because it was hoped that it would be possible to begin the trip at a later date.

GENSCHER, SCHMIDT MEET WITH SENGHOR, TRAORE

LD300304 Hamburg DPA in German 1319 GMT 30 May 80

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government sets great store by close cooperation with the West African economic community. Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher gave this assurance today in Bonn to the heads of state Leopold Sedar Senghor (Senegal) and Moussa Traore (Mali). (?The two) African politicians were also received by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who gave a luncheon for them.

In Genscher's talk with the heads of state of Senegal and Mali the plan for a joint dam project which Bonn is helping to finance was again discussed. The two states intend, together with Mauritania, to dam the Senegal River in two places and use the water and the hydropower for irrigation and energy production. The Federal Republic has promised DM190 million for this project, the first phase of which is to cost approximately DM1.5 billion.

Other topics were the results of the African states' economic summit which ended recently, the forthcoming UN special General Assembly for North-South questions and the situation in the Middle East.

APEL VIEWS EGYPTIAN-ISRAELI DIALOGUE, PALESTINIAN ISSUE

LD011448 Hamburg DPA in German 1419 GMT 1 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel said at a meeting of reservists here Sunday that it would have to be ensured, also by way of EC initiatives, that the dialogue between Egypt and Israel, which was full of hope, was not disrupted. (?The) right to self-determination by the Palestinians as well as the guarantee for the State of Israel to live within secure borders would have to become policy. This process would have to continue.

"We must not overlook in this that we are highly dependent on this region," Apel emphasized. Far too great a part of our energy requirements still come from that region. We are still highly dependent on continued oil supplies in the long term.

RESULTS OF FRANCOIS-PONCET'S U.S. VISIT REPORTED

[Text] Relations between Washington and Paris are becoming more relaxed. U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie received French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet for a 3-hour meeting this afternoon. They gave no details regarding their meeting but merely called it constructive. Francois-Poncet has the mission of explaining to the Americans the reasons for the recent Giscard-Brezhnev summit in Poland.

'Amicable Talks'

ID311230 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 31 May 80

[Text] Europe's stand toward the Middle East: French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet said in Washington that West Europe, in the coming weeks, would begin an initiative aimed at restarting the Middle East peace talks--an interesting piece of news indeed. Jean Francois-Poncet admitted that the United States has raised a number of objections regarding this initiative.

One can, however, say that the French foreign minister's visit to the new American secretary of state achieved, above all, a dedramatizing of relations between Paris and Washington. Only 1 week after the polemics regarding the Warsaw summit, the French and the Americans have held detailed, thorough and amicable talks, as they say. They have also had a clear exchange of views on their respective stands. But one should admit that all this does not involve great commitment. Finally, Jean Francois-Poncet emphasized that diversity represents not weakness but the strength of our alliance. And this is the major conclusion I would draw--and this is Jean Francois-Poncet speaking--from our talks with Mr Edmund Muskie.

Michel Rocard will visit the United States from 5-6 June for a study and information journey. He will give several lectures and will have talks with economic and international relations experts.

GISCARD WELCOMES POPE: 'INTERNATIONAL PROBLEMS' DISCUSSED

[Excerpts] Paris, May 31 (ANSA)--The pope voiced understanding for Giscard d'Estaing's recent surprise meeting in Warsaw with Soviet leader [words indistinct] as telling his aides later. According to the sources, Giscard d'Estaing said John Paul II shares his view of the current tension in the world and his conviction that no stone should be left unturned in the attempt to salvage peace. The whole range of international problems--Afghanistan, the Middle East, the Palestinian problem, East-West relations, and inequalities in the world--were covered by French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Pope John Paul II when they met at the Elysee presidential residence here this morning presidential sources said this afternoon.

The reception after the private meeting between the two men was attended by five thousand persons and was ranked by protocol experts with a long memory of these affairs as the largest at the palace since the one held in 1944 to mark the end of the Nazi occupation of France. On hand at the reception were leading figures from all spheres of public life, including high-ranking officials from the French Socialist and Communist parties. The Polish-born pope arrived in Paris yesterday afternoon and was welcomed by Giscard d'Estaing at the Champ Elysees where the French head-of-state recalled it as the first "spontaneous" papal visit to French soil in eight hundred years.

Pope John Paul II's tete a tete with Giscard d'Estaing lasted only fifty minutes, leading many observers to presume that the discussion of the vast range of topics they reportedly dealt with was only formal.

MINISTRY SOURCE: U.S. STAND WILL NOT AFFECT EC MIDEAST MOVES

ID301537 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 30 May 80 p 1

[ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT report: "Paris: Cairo's and Washington's Stands Will Not Affect the European Initiative"]

[Excerpt] Paris--Egyptian Vice President Husni Mubarak's statements following his meeting with President Carter indicated that any European initiative to solve the Middle East problem will not at present enjoy the support of Washington which will use the right of veto at the United Nations to prevent any alteration to Resolution 242.

An official source at the French Foreign Ministry has told ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT that Mr Mubarak's statements will not affect the European stand and will not hinder any European move in the area. The official added that the content of the European move will run counter to the current U.S. move and therefore Washington will not approve it. This is because the only justification for the European Community making any move is simply to reach a comprehensive solution and not a partial solution, which the U.S. administration supports.

PCF'S ANSART CALLS FOR FRENCH WORLD ROLE IN PLENUM REPORT

ID301317 [Editorial Report] Paris L'HUMANITE in French on 28 May carries on page 4 a 2,100-word unattributed report comprising extracts from the report by Gustave Ansart at the PCF Central Committee plenum in Ivry on 27 May. Under the subhead "Major Progressive Changes Throughout the World," Ansart gives a summary of the present world situation before making the following statement: "The Warsaw meeting between Brezhnev, Gierek and Giscard d'Estaing proves not only the possibility of but the need for negotiations to overcome tension. Despite the commotion in France caused by those who long for the cold war--with Jacques Chirac apparently at the head--casting into the nettles the entire heritage of General de Gaulle's foreign policy, and despite the Socialist Party's Atlantist one-upmanship, this Warsaw meeting shows that new progress on detente is possible and that the arms race can be stopped.

"Everything shows that, by the action of the forces of peace, it is now possible to force the government to let our country, whose prestige remains high, play a role more consistent with the needs of detente and international cooperation.

"In this highly eventful period the party's merit will have been to intervene actively for peace and disarmament, for the setting up of a new world economic order and for solidarity with all the struggling peoples: This is particularly the case with the important initiative of the European communist parties' meeting, undertaken with the Polish party, whose success encourages us to strengthen our action on this plane. The party has made more proposals for our country to take positive initiatives.

"France will never be greater than when it serves mankind's great causes, peace, social justice and liberty. Our fight for peace and justice in the world is part of the great tradition of the French working movement. It has been a constant factor in our history. In the present situation it acquires a new importance and a new dimension."

COMMISSION SHELVES FURTHER PROBE OF DONAT-CATTIN AFFAIR

AU312008 Roma ANSA in English 1957 GMT 31 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 21 (ANSA)--The parliamentary inquiry commission voted this evening to shelve further discussion of allegations that Premier Francesco Cossiga aided and abetted [word indistinct], guerrilla son of a leading Christian Democrat (DC) to escape arrest. The votes passed with a simple majority of eleven to nine.

The regulations governing the commission establish that if a case is shelved with less than a four-fifths majority (sixteen votes out of twenty), the vote can be contested by Parliament: If one-third the members of the two houses (315) file a request, within five days a joint session of Parliament is convened for a final decision.

The commission heard two days of testimony from Carlo Donat-Cattin, deputy DC secretary, suspected terrorist Roberto Sandalo and Cossiga himself. The prime minister was named in connection with an alleged cover-up in favor of 28-year old Marco Donat-Cattin who is suspected to be a member, like Sandalo, of the Front Line urban guerrilla organization and is on the run from charges of homicide and membership in an armed gang.

Turin magistrates turned their findings of questioning of Sandalo over to the parliamentary commission.

[Word indistinct] to Sandalo, the DC deputy secretary [words indistinct] that his son was about to be arrested and, thereby, helped the youth to escape.

The commission, which has the power to strip government officials of their immunity to trial, was called in to decide whether to shelve the case because the charges are [words indistinct] vote to refer back to the two houses of Parliament proposing authorization that an indictment be filed against the premier, who would then be tried by the constitutional court.

The commission is made up of twenty members, ten from the lower house and ten from the Senate and proportionally reflects the parties represented in Parliament: eight Christian Democrats, six Communists, two Socialists, one Radical, one Independent Leftist, one Neofascist and one Social Democrat.

Votes in favor of shelving were cast by the Christian Democrats, Socialists and Social Democrat members. Votes in favor of submitting the case to the [words indistinct] debate were cast by the Communists, Radical, Neofascist and Independent Leftist in the commission.

Cossiga Under Heavy Fire

AU020850 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Excerpts] Rome, June 2 (ANSA)--The Donat-Cattin affair dominated political speeches on the last Sunday of the campaign for the administrative elections next weekend.

On Saturday, the parliamentary inquiry commission decided by a one vote majority (eleven to nine) to shelve further discussion of allegations that Premier Francesco Cossiga aided and abetted the urban guerrilla son of a leading Christian Democrat (DC) to escape arrest.

Late Saturday evening, Senator Carlo Donat-Cattin stepped down from the post of DC deputy secretary.

The tone of speeches delivered by the leaders of various political parties Sunday indicated that it is all but certain that Cossiga's troubles are not over and that he will once again have to defend himself of the charges of helping the younger Donat-Cattin escape before a joint session of Parliament.

The Communist Party (PCI) has already announced that it will begin gathering signatures (a minimum of 318 between deputies and senators is required) to bring Cossiga before the two houses, which have the power to authorize that an indictment be filed against the premier who would then be tried by the constitutional court.

The PCI move should be successful since it is backed by the Independent Leftists, the far-leftist PDUP [Proletarian Unity] Party, the Radicals, the Neofascist and Liberals who represent a total of 374 M.P.'s, 56 more than those needed.

Even the Social Democrat Party (PSDI), whose representative in the inquiry commission voted to shelve the Cossiga-Donat-Cattin case, did not treat the premier with kid gloves. PSDI Secretary Pietro Longo called for Cossiga's resignation Sunday. Longo said in part: "Cossiga cannot and must not remain in his post as premier. With this leadership the government has lost credibility in the international field. In the economic field it has stepped up the inflationary spiral and there is the threat of a devaluation of the lira. And the behavior in a such a delicate case, as possibly aiding and abetting the son of a friend and party colleague, has definitely paled the political figure of the prime minister."

The Socialist Party, on the other hand, is divided over the entire affair. Party Secretary Bettino Craxi said Sunday that he has "absolute faith" in the Socialist members of the inquiry commission (who voted to shelve the case), indirectly expressing his agreement with the verdict. However, Craxi added that if Cossiga is placed under Parliament's judgement, the Socialists will also better understand "the nature and origins" of the Donat-Cattin affair.

Foreign Trade Minister Enrico Manca (PSI) said that "it is everyone's duty to submit to the commission's verdict" and that "...no one has the right to cast shadows on the behavior of the prime minister, whose moral qualities and political rigor are well known."

Former PSI Secretary Giacomo Macini, on the other hand, said that the case before the inquiry commission in the last few days "cannot be resolved with a slim majority vote" and that it is necessary "to get down to facts and clearly ascertain how officials behaved in an affair which involves an important Christian Democrat official."

PSI leadership member Fabrizio Cicchitto echoed this position and said that the Donat-Cattin affair "is serious and there are still many unanswered questions."

The secretary of the right-of-center Liberal Party (PLI) Valerio Zanone said that light must be shed on a case which brought a prime minister before the inquiry commission. "Notwithstanding the differences between the opposition parties and the government, the PLI believes that shelving the case with only a one vote majority is not sufficient to reassure citizens who justly demand that the government have an exemplary position in the fight against terrorism," Zanone asserted.

The Christian Democrat Party, on the other hand was mum on the inquiry commission's ruling. Party Chairman Arnoldo Forlani, speaking in Bari Sunday, firmly reiterated his party's stance in the fight against terrorism. "The government, with Parliament's confidence, will continue to reply without uncertainty and resolutely to the conspiracy aimed at overthrowing the democratic system," Forlani said.

For his part, Carlo Donat-Cattin granted a radio interview in which he explained that he stepped down from his party post "to free the DC from any hindrance to shed full light (on this case), to defend itself and to free me from any hindrance and thereby be able to act to ward off this manoeuver."

Pertini's Spokesman Fired

AU311645 Roma ANSA in English 1525 GMT 31 May 80

[Text] Rome, May 31 (ANSA)--Italian head-of-state Sandro Pertini's spokesman Antonio Ghirelli was removed from his post today after a journalistic incident yesterday in which Pertini was quoted as voicing a forthright opinion on the parliamentary investigation into Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga's possible involvement in the Donat-Cattin affair.

Pertini is currently on a private visit to Spain after two days of official talks in Madrid. The incident broke around statements which one of the head-of-state's spokesmen made to the journalists in his retinue.

The parliamentary commission responsible for authorizing court proceedings against members of Parliament has currently been investigating allegations that Cossiga may have aided the escape of the suspected terrorist son of Carlo Donat-Cattin, deputy secretary of Cossiga's own Christian Democrat Party.

The spokesman told the journalists that, if the parliamentary commission did not agree there was a clear lack of foundation for the charges against Cossiga, he should resign and appear for judgement before the constitutional court. The substance of the remark was immediately attributed to Pertini who was seen stepping outside the limits of his competence in voicing an opinion on what would be the incumbent premier's correct course of action.

Some hours later, Ghirelli explained to the journalists with Pertini in Spain that the whole incident was a "big misunderstanding" and denied that Pertini had even been asked about the Donat-Cattin affair. Consequently he clearly voiced "no judgment", said Ghirelli, whose dismissal was announced by the Italian presidency's general secretariat at the Quirinale presidential residence here.

BERLINGUER COMMENTS ON PCI'S LOCAL ELECTIONS HOPES

LD291029 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 23 May 80 pp 1, 15

[Giorgio Frasca Polara report: "Berlinguer and Other PCI Leaders Tell Journalists: Two Aims: Unitary Councils, Defeat of Christian Democratic Party (DC) Leftwing"]

[Text] Rome--At a crowded press conference held at PCI headquarters yesterday to illustrate the themes and contents of the PCI's propaganda, Berlinguer stressed the need for the 8-9 June election results to extend the fabric of the leftwing regional and local councils and also issue a warning to the present DC leadership group and if possible open the way to a change of government.

As [PCI Secretariat member] Adalberto Minucci stressed in his introduction to the intensive exchange with the journalists, the "contamination" between administrative and more general political issues has been progressive and objective, and indeed inevitable in view of the gravity of the unresolved problems in the world and the country and the government's decisions. [paragraph continues]

So there is no basis for the charges that the PCI is "misdirecting" the debate: The Communists proceeded from the problems facing the citizens every day and from the good results achieved by the leftwing democratic administrations. It is the Communists, Minucci pointed out, who carried out the broadest and most thorough public opinion poll (5.5 million questionnaires distributed and over half completed and returned) to verify the validity of their suggestions. But then the political situation was exacerbated thanks to the DC and the government.

Next the PCI secretary general said that we ourselves have helped to raise the major issues in the election debate in view of the DC majority's attempt to shift the national political axis rightward and to introduce splittist elements into the forces of the democratic and peoples movement. The Communists' polemic, Berlinguer added in answer to a question from an IL MESSAGGERO reporter, is therefore not centered mainly on the Italian Socialist Party [PSI], but obviously we cannot fail to voice our criticisms of that party's leadership, particularly concerning the manner in which it joined and is participating in the government (one would have expected signs of a substantial change), but we do so always in a spirit of unity aimed not only at preserving and extending cooperation with the PSI in the local and regional councils but also at promoting a more solid understanding between Communists and Socialists on a national scale--a process which cannot be achieved, however, unless the splittist elements now emerging in Italian politics are defeated.

Answering questions from Italian Radio Newsreel and ADN-KRONOS reporters, Berlinguer issued a stern critique of the work done by the government which, he said, though only a few weeks old, has already amassed so many and such negative actions that it raises the issue of its removal. The criticisms concern: 1--the government's methods, not only in its allocation of ministerial posts with no consideration to professional qualifications or competence, but also in its handling of the National Hydrocarbons Agency chairmanship affair (resolved with a PSI-DC share-out), of the appointments to the savings banks and to other public bodies including the radio and television services; 2--foreign policy, with special reference to its grave conduct in connection with the Olympics and the economic sanctions on Iran, in which its servile acquiescence to the United States and desire always to appear top of the grade have done so much damage also to the nation's economy, to the extent that the Italian Government has been left behind even by the British conservatives; 3--economic policy, with so many examples of inertia in the presence of alarming signs, such as the galloping inflation, the energy crisis, southern Italy and unemployment. All in all, Berlinguer noted in this connection, this laxness stems from the logic of a rightward shift, of a split among the workers and peoples forces inherent in the policy of the dominant forces of the present government, that is, the ones which identify with the "preamble" [majority at DC congress]. These are the reasons which have prompted us to forcefully assert the need for a vote which will issue a warning and if possible also open the way to a change of government.

How is it possible, LA REPUBBLICA's representative asked the PCI secretary general, to hypothesize about a reversal of the present line and a transformation process, with the DC? With regard to a transformation plan (the only kind on which an alliance is possible with the PCI, Berlinguer stressed), there is already not only a fairly well-defined social area but also a political area, both Catholic-democratic and secular-socialist, with which broad convergences can be achieved. We trust that the election results will help to insure the victory in the various parties of the forces favoring a plan for a thorough change in both the government's political aims and its methods and favoring also the realization of a full national solidarity, which must include the PCI's direct government participation.

But did the national unity experiment teach you nothing? LA SINISTRA and PACE E GUERRA asked. We have often pointed out, Berlinguer replied, the DC's predominant and overwhelming responsibility for the negative result of that experiment, without denying, however, (indeed we praised them) the positive results which that policy produced, especially in the economic field and in the state's stand against terrorism. We have also researched, pointed to and discussed a series of defects discovered in our party's conduct and I believe, he added, that we have drawn the necessary conclusions. But I will add that the main factor that has exacerbated the situation over the past year is in fact the Communist losses in the 1979 elections: They undoubtedly constituted an encouragement (as we have seen in subsequent developments within the DC and even the PSI and in the outcome of the goverment crisis) to those setting their sights on a rightward swing. This is why we must defeat the forces which have gained the upper hand in the DC so as to open the way to political solutions based on an understanding among all the major democratic and peoples forces.

A journalist from IL GAZZETTINO asked: On which other forces are you setting your sights with a view to increasing the number of leftwing councils? Berlinguer replied: There are several cases at all levels of profitable cooperation even with the Italian Social Democratic Party and the Italian Republican Party. But we have our sights on extending this area--to the Proletarian Unity Party, for instance, to the MLS [expansion unknown] and all forces truly wanting regeneration. Not the Radical Party, therefore, which is not only not participating directly but is urging people to abstain, thus rendering a service to the DC to which we draw the attention of all those who have voted Radical in the past. In other cases there is a risk of votes being wasted on somewhat or completely unrepresentative lists. Be that as it may, we do not rule out broader understandings, especially where the numerical conditions are lacking for the formation of leftwing councils. But such agreements must always be based on the following two conditions: specific agreements for a regeneration and our direct participation in the councils--that is, excluding outside backing on our part.

POLISARIO'S SEIZURE OF SPANISH FISHING BOAT PROTESTED

LD311350 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 31 May 80

[Text] With regard to the seizing and subsequent sinking of a Spanish fishing boat by the POLISARIO Front, the Diplomatic Information Office of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has issued the following statement:

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has learned of the text of a communique issued in Algiers, attributed to the POLISARIO Front, to the effect that elements belonging to the aforementioned front have attacked a Spanish fishing boat of the Alvarez Entrena Company off the Dakhla coast, sinking it and kidnapping its crew.

The relevant Spanish authorities are taking steps to ascertain the situation of the Spanish boats which operate in the area referred to in the mentioned communique. These checks reveal that it has not been possible up to now to locate the boat, (Gangomar), belonging to the above-montioned company.

Should the statements given in the Algiers comminique turn out to be true, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs expresses its utmost condemnation of this inadmissible act of violence against human rights and the most elemental norms of international law.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs trusts that, should the news be true, the kidnapped crew will be released immediately.

The Spanish Embassies in Rabat and Algiers have received instructions to take immediate steps to obtain a rapid elucidation of these events.

PRC VICE PREMIER ARRIVES TO DISCUSS PETROLEUM TIES

NC311240 Paris AFP in English 1213 GMT 31 May 80

[Text] Oslo, May 30, (AFP)--Chinese Vice-Premier Kang Shien arrived here today on a one-week official visit during which he will study Norwegian oil production methods. Mr Kang will inspect facilities, including the headquarters of the national Statoil company, at Stavanger, Norway's "petroleum capital." He will also go to the Statfjord oil field northwest of Bergen where production began at the end of last year.

According to a communique issued by the Chinese Embassy here, Mr Kang is seeking information on relations between Norway and foreign investors in the area of petroleum production. The 15-member Chinese delegation is also interested in Norwegian legislation, taxation of petroleum companies and other aspects of national oil policy.

The Chinese and Norwegians will discuss increased cooperation between the two countries and it is expected that the Chinese will sign contracts for the purchase of equipment and marine-drilling platforms.

The vice-premier will be received by King Olav V and confer with Premier Odvar Nordli and Petroleum Affairs Minister Bjartmar Gjerde.

FOREIGN MINISTER ACCEPTS INVITATION FOR FALL VISIT TO USSR

LD301443 Helsinki HELSINGIN SANOMAT in Finnish 29 May 80 p 22

[Arne Finborud report: "Frydenlund to Soviet Union in the Fall"]

[Excerpt] Oslo--Norweigan Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund will travel to the Soviet Union next fall on an official visit. Frydenlund announced the visit at a press conference held in Oslo Wednesday.

The surprising announcement was interpreted as an attempt by the Norwegian Government to improve East-West relations and to preserve the dialogue between the alliances by striving to warm up the cool international atmosphere brought about by the Afghanistan crisis.

Foreign Minister Frydenlund announced that he will take up questions that especially affect the two countries in his talks with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko. An especially important question is the Barents Sea dispute, which has been discussed several times at senior civil servant level without result. Foreign Minister Gromyko made the invitation for the visit a week ago. Frydenlund informed NATO about the invitation.

Frydenlund will travel to Moscow as foreign minister. It is 13 years since the previous meeting between Norwegian and Soviet foreign ministers.

FRENCH PREMIER MEETS OFFICIALS, DISCUSSES BILATERAL, WORLD AFFAIRS

ID300940 Paris LE FIGARO in French 28 May 80 p 3

[Irene Jarry reports from Oslo: "The French Presence in the North Sea Is Going To Increase, Raymond Barre States in Norway"]

[Text] "France is not engaging in an attempt to mediate between East and West," Raymond Barre stated yesterday in Oslo at the end of his private talks with his Norwegian counterpart Odvar Nordli: "Since the beginning of the tension which has materialized over recent months," the prime minister explained, "the French Government has affirmed that it could not accept what has happened in Afghanistan and that, moreover, a solution has to be reached which would take the form of the withdrawal of the Soviet forces from Afghanistan. The way to contribute to the realization of this political aim is for dialogue to continue. This why high-level exchanges have occurred and why the president of the republic went to Warsaw in order to proceed to the deepest possible exchange of views with Mr Brezhnev. There was clearly no question of negotiating. I can tell you that these exchanges of views were useful."

Regarding Norway, Mr Barre believes "that it is that country's responsibility to establish its intended modes of conduct. I am happy to state," the prime minister continued, "that the Norwegian authorities, having affirmed, like us, from the outset an unequivocal stance on affairs in Afghanistan, want a dialogue with the USSR and the Eastern countries to continue so that equilibrium and peace may be maintained."

The second major topic in the talks was bilateral relations which have been developing for some years, particularly in the energy sphere (gas and oil). Regarding international relations, the French and the Norwegians reviewed the main problems being posed at the present time: detente, world peace and the situations linked to events in Afghanistan and the Middle East. "On all these points we have established a large convergence of views," Mr Barre stated.

After the exchange of views between Industry Minister Giraud and his Norwegian counterpart, the French side concluded that industrial relations must continue to develop, but also must diversify. A certain number of projects were examined; notably, underwater activities, precision engineering and electronics. Mr Barre considered that it was not the government's duty "to encourage industrialists to do one thing or the other. If they do not see the profit to be derived from developing their activities in Norway it is unfortunate, but their loss." And he concluded: "If industrialists help themselves, the state will help them."

The prime minister subsequently confirmed that the French presence in the North Sea was going to increase. He gave as proof the fact that, contrary to all that has been said, the ELF company is already involved in operations beyond the 62d parallel.

Mr Barre was keen to explain that, with regard to gas and oil, neither he nor Mr Giraud had "come to Norway to sign contracts. We have come to exchange views. We have established a favorable situation and we hope that this will bear fruit. As the scriptures say: 'A little more time and you will see.'"

In the morning, at the end of the first round of talks with Mr Nordli, Mr Barre was received in audience by King Olaf V. A short while later the prime minister, accompanied by his wife, who wore a light almond green coat and a straw hat of the same color, visited the national monument at the foot of the former royal citadel of Akerhus where the opening ceremonies to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the Battle of Narvik took place.

LOPEZ PORTILLO VISIT ENDS WITH ACCORD ON OIL SUPPLIES

LD291345 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 25 May 80 p 4

[Omar Magnergard report: "Agreement With Mexico Ready; the First Oil Tanker Will Leave This Fall."]

[Text] We will be able to buy Mexican oil--and much sooner than the Swedish negotiators had hoped. The first oil tanker will be on its way this fall.

This was an important topic in the negotiations which took place during the state visit and which were given definite shape in the form of several agreements and memoranda yesterday.

Another topic which could be important concerns LKAB [mining company] iron ore. Mexico has recently built iron and steel works in Tampico on the Gulf Coast. LKAB is in a good position to supply them with iron ore. Cooperation in the field of technology was also mentioned.

Negotiations have still not been finalized. But President Lopez Portillo's special advisers in these matters will be returning in a few weeks' time.

As SVENSKA DAGBLADET was able to report yesterday, Mexico is thus fulfilling our hopes of oil supplies. Some 70,000 barrels a day--3.5 million tons of oil a year--are mentioned in the agreement signed by Lopez Portillo and Falldin. The total covers just over 10 percent of Sweden's oil needs at present.

The agreement does not cover a fixed period. This might seem alarming to an oil-thirsty Swede. However, Lopez Portillo promised that there would be no question of reductions in the amounts of oil promised in the agreement unless there are drastic changes in the Mexican oil situation. And there are no signs of anything like that happening.

Some 60 percent of Mexico's oil production is light crude and 40 percent heavy sulphur-rich crude, so-called Maya oil. There can be problems when refining the latter. However, it should be possible to solve these within the framework of greatly intensified cooperation in a number of fields that will now take place.

Among approximately 70 named topics, there are mentions of oil industry, offshore activities, including production and accomodations platforms, auxiliary drilling vessels and different forms of oil storage.

Sweden has the technicians and to a certain extent the materials; Mexico has the primary product. Lopez Portillo gave an assurance that Mexico never intends to use its oil as a political or economic weapon, least of all against Sweden, which he likes so much and sees as a leading country which he would like to emulate in many ways.

"We Mexicans have ourselves been the victims of economic warfare. We know what it means. We would never stoop to anything like that."

Among other projects discussed in the last few days were:

--Spica boats for the Mexican coastguard. There are plans to export 15 boats from Sweden and to build 30 locally in Mexico in collaboration with a Mexican shipyard.

--Electric locomotives for the Mexican railroad from ASEA [Swedish General Electric Corporation] and signal systems from LM Ericsson. In addition, LM Ericsson will help with equipment and technology within the field of telephones.

Foreign Ministers Jorge Castaneda and Ola Ullsten signed a 5-year agreement on scientific and technical cooperation. The agreement is primarily intended to promote the exchange of researchers, cooperation in the field of education, and joint research and study projects.

Industry Minister Jose Andres Oteyza and Trade Minister Staffan Burenstam Linder signed a memorandum intended to deepen cooperation in the industrial sector which is of potential importance for Mexico's development and in which Swedish companies are in a good position to help. This covers the steel and mining industries, the petrochemical industry, shipbuilding and shipping, wood pulp and paper, and equipment for the expansion of ports and for the supply of electric power.

As far as education is concerned, the Swedish Government and some of our largest companies have promised what help they can. Mexican plant managers and instructors will be allowed to come here and learn, and Swedish companies in Mexico will start a training program for 2,000 Mexicans.

Thus there were only good presents when briefcases were opened under the Foreign Ministry's crystal chandeliers. Both Falldin and Lopez Portillo beamed like ecstatic Father Christmases when they raised their champagne glasses after the signings.

PRESIDENT KIPRIANOU ADDRESSES NATIONS, SAYS HE WILL NOT RESIGN

NC311335 Nicosia Public Information Office in English 31 May 80

[Press prerelease of President Kiprianou's address to the Cypriot people over radio and television on May 31--virtually identical to Nicosia Domestic Service apparent recording of same address at 1730 GMT on 31 May 80]

[Text] I feel the need to communicate this evening with the whole Cyprus people, to brief them and to express to them my thoughts and views on various burning problems occupying them--and, of course, mainly on the Cyprus problem. Cyprus is passing through the most tragic moments in its history and its problems become even more serious due to a lack of the necessary concord in the internal front.

Since assuming the thorny office of the president of the republic, in succession to our great leader Ethnarch Makarios, whose policy I have been following with consistency--and I wish to underline here that I know both his policy and his thoughts better than anyone else--I have made and I am making with honesty and devotion to duty every effort to promote our national cause and to serve the people. Since Cyprus suffered the barbarous occupation there has been no progress towards a solution of the Cyprus problem. Repeated UN resolutions fully vindicating the Cyprus people and their struggle have remained unimplemented. The late Ethnarch Makarios made great efforts for a reconciliation through the intercommunal talks, accepted federation and submitted concrete proposals, but his proposals were rejected by the Turkish side, and his efforts came up against Turkish intransigence and chauvinism.

After the ethnarch's death, the efforts for an honourable dialogue continued while at the same time the government and I personally moved systematically in every direction to secure the greatest possible support and solidarity with our sacred struggle for the salvation of the country. The Cyprus problem is not a detail, it is a problem of freedom, occupation, liberation. The Cyprus people and their leadership had the right to refuse from the start any negotiations until the occupation troops left Cyprus. Nevertheless, in our desire to speed up the finding of a nationally acceptable solution we accepted the intercommunal dialogue, which has since been carried out in various phases without any result. The dialogue was carried out on the basis of the well-known Makarios-Denktas agreement without any result. There followed the agreement of Mr Denktas with the president of the republic. We believed at that time that we could move towards better developments. Needless to recall that the May 19 agreement, which is and should be the basis of the intercommunal talks, includes the Makarios-Denktas agreement, the UN resolutions, the inalienable human rights of citizens and their fundamental freedoms, the question of demilitarization and termination of foreign interventions and other substantial and useful elements.

The dialogue started in June 1979, but a few days later it was found that the Turkish side had no intention to negotiate meaningfully. It simply wanted, once more and as always, to use the dialogue in order to promote the faits accomplis. In a few days the dialogue was recessed and was to be repeated in a few weeks' time, as it was then said. A year went by and the dialogue was not resumed despite the UN secretary general's efforts to find ways to resume the intercommunal talks.

We have made and are making every effort as we believe that the intercommunal talks is the proper procedure, at least as far as the internal structure of the Cyprus state is concerned. It has not been possible so far to resume the talks, and this is due entirely to Turkish intransigence. We are not to blame in the least for the non-resumption of the talks so far.

I am sorry that AKEL, in its recent statement, blames, even though partially, what it calls my lack of daring and indecision for the non-starting of the talks. There has been neither lack of daring nor indecision. On the contrary; there is firmness. AKEL in its statement refers to instances when opportunities for resumption of the dialogue were missed. It refers to a proposal or suggestion by the UN secretary general on 23 August 1979, a proposal accepted by Mr Denktas on 1 October 1979. The AKEL leadership considers this proposal to be as a missed opportunity or as an opportunity not exploited by me and my government. AKEL, however, has avoided saying what was the content of that proposal which Mr Denktas accepted on 1 October.

That proposal contained exactly those unacceptable conditions for the resumption of the talks which the Cyprus Government and myself had repeatedly rejected and which AKEL had repeatedly described as unacceptable. The proposal contained the Turkish demand for advance commitment on the question of bizonal federation and separate security for the Turkish Cypriots. Bizonal federation does not mean federation, Mr Denktas has repeatedly declared. Both Mr Denktas himself and his Ankara adviser, Professor Soysal, have made clear what they mean by bizonality and separate security. They mean a separate state with a separate status.

Was it ever possible for us to undertake in advance the commitment to accept this philosophy and go back to the negotiating table? Should we have gone to do what? To implement the things to which we might have committed ourselves? It is inconceivable to put the blame on us for the non-resumption of the dialogue, something which the Turkish side is also doing. This strengthens the Turkish position and Turkish propaganda. What AKEL states in its latest announcement is, to say the least, unfortunate. There was no real opportunity, either in August or in the February-April period, as alleged in the AKEL statement, that we have let slip by. We have always come up against the same problem, the problem of having to accept beforehand unacceptable conditions detrimentally prejudging the continuation of the dialogue and the outcome of the whole problem.

I have all the goodwill and the fervent desire for the resumption of the talks. We have repeatedly stated and proposed that the talks should resume on the basis of the existing agreements without conditions and that each side could present at the negotiating table any philosophies, concepts, proposals, suggestions and views it wished. We, too, would do this in any case. Finally, I would like to stress that I am not against the dialogue, and objective evidence proves this. If more evidence is needed, I am prepared to give it.

The general secretary of AKEL, Mr Papaioannou, himself both in his speech at Dherinia and before his departure for the United Nations General Assembly in November ruled out acceptance of the term "bizonal". The same line has been adopted in successive articles published in AKEL's mouthpiece. There has been agreement on the handling of the national issue on the Council of Ministers, and I am really surprised that it is now suggested that there is no agreement. Until this moment I do not know the reason for the positions set out in AKEL's recent statement. I want a dialogue and I continue to work for the resumption of the intercommunal talks. But I cannot accept conditions which mortgage in a most unacceptable manner the national future of this country. I will not endorse the Turkish positions. I will not endorse the destruction of Cyprus or the renunciation of the rights of the Cyprus people or the right of the refugees to return to their homes. I will continue my efforts for an honourable and meaningful dialogue, and not for a travesty of a dialogue in such a tragedy as is the aim of the Turkish side in order to consolidate the faits accomplis.

Epithets and characterizations were used which I wish to be allowed to reject. It has been claimed that the president does not serve the national cause. For 30 whole years I have been serving the national cause of the Cyprus people, and I will continue to do so. As for the charges about a "lack of daring, inefficiency and indecision", it is the people who will judge, and the people have before them a 30-year record to help them reach their conclusion. As regards my honesty, which, fortunately, no one has so far disputed, again the people of Cyprus are fully aware of the truth. If the refusal to accept unacceptable arrangements, solutions or proposals for the resumption of the talks means lack of daring and indecision, then I accept these characterizations and epithets. I have both daring and determination, provided we follow the right path.

I cannot explain AKEL's attack on me. I would like to hope that it is a misunderstanding. I wish, however, to state categorically that never in my life have I been or shall I be a tool of anyone, Cypriot or foreigner. Guided solely by the national interest I shall continue to offer my services to the people.

And the moment when AKEL is attacking me, and others--whom I do not now wish to name--are undermining me for reasons I do not know, there comes the Democratic Rally to repeat in an announcement, in a more vigorous manner, its demand for my resignation. It is demanded that I should resign, but what would this serve? Should I resign so that Cyprus may abandon the foreign policy it has been following Or should I resign so that this may be followed by further stages of destabilization--for which certain circles have been preparing for some time now--polarization, class strife and possible clashes when an intolerable and tragic situation may be created leading to the imposition of an unacceptable solution on Cyprus?

The Democratic Rally for years now has been talking about "inefficiency, indecision, procrastination and lack of daring". As regards the national question of Cyprus, I have tried hard to follow a consistent line and strived for the rights of the Cypriot people. In this effort, instead of having the necessary support of the Rally and some others, there has been a systematic undermining apparently aimed at creating at least political anomaly.

My reply is simple: I am not going to resign. I will continue the struggle at the head of the people, to whom I address myself this evening, to bring my mission to a conclusion. I will make every effort, standing on the ramparts, to vindicate this martyred people. The determination of the president is not enough. The support of the political and other forces, and particularly of the people, is necessary. All of us have responsibilities, not only the president. As to my responsibilities, I take them up fully. I wish to repeat and underline what I have repeatedly stressed, that for me there is only Cyprus and its people and it is Cyprus and its people that I have been serving with honesty, consistency and unselfishness, above party and other interests. There is no reason whatsoever why there should be party strife at this moment. There may be party differences on various matters, economic, social and other, but no conflicts are permissible on the national issue. If there are different views these are set out courageously and are discussed in a dialogue. It is not my object to blow up bridges. On the contrary; my object is to contribute to the removal of differences so that we may restore a solid front, which is one of the most essential prerequisites to the successful outcome of our struggle. To this end I am willing to do everything possible and I will do all I can.

The people are occupied also with various other problems, and in connection with the other problems, as is for instance the problem of the co-operative movement and that of the economic situation, various views are expressed, criticism is leveled and the well-known charges about lack of daring and indecision are repeated. [paragraph continues]

I want to state categorically that I will give definite solutions to all these problems. Thus, instead of my efforts to solve these problems in the way the people wish and in a way demanded by justice being undermined, I call on all to become conscious of their responsibilities and to help me. I will govern this country with firmness, daring and determination. The tactics did not betray lack of daring or indecision. I simply wanted to follow a policy designed to maintain a balance in our internal front which would gradually lead to greater unity among the people and strengthen our internal front.

Various actions or the postponement of certain decisions by me triggered an undermining campaign mainly on the part of the Rally aimed at lowering my prestige.

They do not realize that by undermining the president's prestige they undermine the state itself. For, it is the lawful government and the lawful president, who is recognised by the whole world, they should strengthen. Any attempt to force me to resign would be a deviation from the constitutional order or at least a political coup.

I am determined to face all adversities. I am determined to solve all burning problems. I am determined to rule this country in a way necessitated by the present conditions, to give a solution to the burning problems, to try to promote solutions for other problems and at the same time to continue firmly our well-known line for a just solution of the Cyprus problem.

We have accepted federation and a biregional federation at that. But we shall not accept any form of partition or legalisation of the faits accomplis under any circumstances. We shall not accept alienation of the rights of our people. I shall continue my struggles for the tracing of missing persons, the return of the refugees, the restoration of justice and moral order and the implementation of UN resolutions, being ready for an honourable and constructive dialogue as regards the internal structures of the Cyprus state.

I would like on this occasion to warn the people to be on the alert during this period and to keep their cool. To foil with all their strength any attempts at destabilisation of the situation. To prevent polarisation, which would bring only catastrophe to the country. In this connection I wish to repeat that I am against polarisation and class strife. In the midst of the world upheaval, economic instability, inflation and anarchy, the people must pay attention to something else. Despite the fact that 40 per cent of the country is under occupation and 1/3 of the population have been uprooted from their ancestral homes, we have reached enviable levels regarding the economy and social benefits. Of course there are problems, there are inflationary tendencies, but if we make a comparison between the inflation in Cyprus and in other countries, our inflation is one of the lowest in the world. There is, however, something in the atmosphere which is not sound. There is self-indulgence and an insatiable demand for more and more. We must realise that much has been achieved and while the government is criticised for not having solved certain problems, I have heard nobody praise the government for the host of decisions it has taken to raise the standard of living of the people and to improve social benefits.

Progress does not come by itself. There is need for the co-operation of all as in the past if we are to attain still higher levels and achieve a still better distribution of the national income. Moreover, we should not concentrate all our efforts on how to gain more. It is everybody's right to do so, but our primary concern must be the national cause of Cyprus, for, if we do not achieve a nationally acceptable solution, what has been achieved will collapse.

We must all set our priorities right. Concord and unity are imperative so that we may show to Turkish chauvinists and also to the third parties which involve themselves in any way in the Cyprus problem that they should not hope for the collapse of our own front. Some persons are whispering that if the present president, who, according to them is an obstacle, goes, there will be soon a solution to the Cyprus problem. If I am an obstacle, I am not an obstacle to a nationally acceptable solution. I am an obstacle to a nationally unacceptable solution, and I will continue to be an obstacle as long as I am at the head of the people. I shall continue the struggle for a decent solution.

These days new efforts are being made for the resumption of the intercommunal talks. As in the past goodwill is being displayed by our side. Let us hope that this time a way will be found for the resumption of the talks without our undertaking any advance commitments disastrous to our national cause. I bear nobody any ill feeling, either the parties criticising my policy or me personally or the persons who should have stood by my side but failed to do so. I have nothing to gain personally from this affair. To rule this country today is a calvary for anyone. I shall continue my calvary. I shall continue my course. Being human I feel bitterness. I have offered everything to my country and to my people. There is bitterness when EDEK votes against the budget, which is unacceptable, when AKEL attacks me regarding the national cause and when the Rally systematically undermines me. Bitterness will not influence me into not taking the right decisions. [as published] I am determined and I am extending a hand of friendship and co-operation to all. Where there are disagreements, let us settle them through a dialogue, through discussion, through an effort so as to build a solid front. At the same time I am determined to rule this country with determination, courage and awareness of my historic responsibilities to the country and you, people of Cyprus.

Denktas Response

TA011153 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 1 Jun 80

[Text] President Rauf Denktas said that it was clear now that Greek Cypriot community leader Spiros Kiprianou cannot represent even his own community. Denktas was replying to Kiprianou's address over the Greek Cypriot radio and television last night.

Recalling that AKEL as well as Kliridhis' and Lissaridhis' parties were opposed to Kiprianou, Denktas said that the Greek Cypriot church was already searching for a new leader. He continued: At such a time when Kiprianou does not even represent his own community, he speaks about the national Cypriot cause and about serving it, hiding behind his so-called post of president. Such a stand, Denktas said, will not bring any good to him or Cyprus.

Reiterating that Cyprus was a country based on the political partnership of two national communities--that is to say two different entities--Denktas said: The national causes of these entities are not and will not ever be the same. The Turkish Cypriot community is well aware of the Greek Cypriot national cause, because since 1963 the Greek Cypriot community has been attacking us in order to implement this so-called national cause, which consists of transforming the Turkish community into a minority in a Greek or Greek Cypriot island and of depriving it of its cofounder and partnership rights. All attacks against the Turkish community since 1963 have been a requisite of the Greek Cypriot national cause. There is no use in hoping for a positive move from a Greek Cypriot leader who adopts such a stand and policy. Our economic rights have been openly usurped and the economic embargo imposed on our community is continuing. This aggressive stand is being taken under the cover of the so-called Cypriot Government. In the light of these realities it is very difficult to find a ray of hope in Kiprianou's statements.

Summary of Political Party Reaction

NC020843 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 2 Jun 80 p 1

[Text] Not only is a defusing of the domestic crisis not in sight, but, on the contrary, the crisis will escalate even more with unforeseeable developments and unpredictable results. Following President Kiprianou's proclamation, the objective reaction of the parties (based on our direct contacts with leading elements of political factions) is summed up as follows:

AKEL: Not only have President Kiprianou's proclamation and the positions he outlined been unsatisfactory, but they have even caused intense reactions.

Party cadres have pointed out that there is a difference between what the president says and what he does or fails to do, particularly on the Cyprus issue.

DISI [Democratic Rally]: Following the proclamation, the Democratic Rally's positions and demand for the president's resignation remain unchanged. We have been told that the demand for his resignation will be explained with facts in a reply statement that will be released by the party.

According to our information, DISI will proceed with certain activities in this connection (a proclamation by Kliridhis or a party rally).

EDEK: Following the president's proclamation, the EDEK stance has not changed either. According to leading circles in the party, EDEK radically disagrees with the socio-economic philosophy and policy of the government, but it agrees with the president's stand on the Cyprus issue.

The same circles added: EDEK did not and does not raise the question of the resignation of the president of the republic.

These are the positions of the parties. It appears that developments in the domestic front will be difficult and without foreseeable solutions.

Party Leader's Response

NC020849 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 2 Jun 80 p 1

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou's proclamation received wide and variable comment yesterday from political and diplomatic circles, leading elements of the parties and people at various levels.

The general impression was that "it was a mild and touching proclamation which, while it created sympathy, politically it did not promise nor could it promise anything toward a decisive solution."

The party leaders yesterday refrained from any official statements. The leader of DISI [Democratic Rally] told our editor the following:

"Allow me to not make any statement for the time being. I have a lot to say. I have asked RIK [Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation] to allot me equal time to address a proclamation to the Greek Cypriot people in reply to yesterday's proclamation by Mr Kiprianou.

"In my opinion, he has no other choice but to resign. Under the circumstances, he does not represent anybody, not even 50 percent of his party members. The gesture of resignation is now a question of dignity and political sensitivity."

Yesterday DISI circles ruled out any possibility for cooperation between DISI and DIKO [Democratic Party] and did not conceal the fact that the only way out today is a proclamation for new elections--parliamentary and presidential.

Answering a question by our editor concerning the possibilities for a Cyprus solution, an AKEL leading element, without even "stopping to think," said:

"No party in Cyprus, and moreover DIKO, can solve the Cyprus problem. The Cyprus problem can only be solved by a strong all-party government or, at least with close and sincere cooperation between the two...'superpowers,' in Cyprus; that is, AKEL and the Democratic Rally, if this could ever exist."

KHARAVYI Commentary

NC010712 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 1 Jun 80 pp 1,6

[Excerpts] President Kiprianou's address over television last night fully confirms the soundness of the AKEL Central Committee resolution to disassociate the party's position so that it may not be coresponsible for the course that the president and the government have been following in the Cyprus problem and in domestic problems.

With last night's address President Kiprianou tries to reverse the AKEL Central Committee criticism of lack of courage and indecisiveness in utilizing the possibilities for resuming the intercommunal talks in Autumn 1979, and describes AKEL as a supporter of confederation. This allegation is groundless and unfounded. AKEL has criticized President Kiprianou for rejecting the Waldheim formula of 21 August 1979 and the efforts in February, March and April 1980 to resume the talks based on the 19 May 1979 agreement.

The Waldheim formula not only carries nothing about confederation but rather most categorically stresses the term federation. The following quotation is the controversial point in Waldheim's aide-memoire that has been rejected:

"(A) the two sides reaffirm the validity of the 19 May high-level agreement, which in point 2 provides that 'the basis for the talks will be the Makarios-Denktas guidelines of 12 February 1977 and the UN resolutions relevant to the Cyprus question.'

"(B) Both sides have reaffirmed their support for a federal solution of the constitutional aspect and for a bizonal solution to the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem.

"(C) The two sides have stated that the question of security can be raised and discussed at the intercommunal talks."

In order to bypass Denktas' intransigence and to secure resumption of the talks, the UN secretary general added after the phrase "for a federal solution of the constitutional aspect" the phrase "of a bizonal solution of the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem." It is obvious to everyone that the Waldheim formula was asking for federation and not confederation while the "bizonal," which referred to the "territorial aspect," clearly meant biregional.

In 1977, President Makarios repeatedly used the term bizonal in the sense of biregional without, of course, implying or supporting confederation. The term bizonal had been used by former Foreign Minister Khristofidhis at the UN General Assembly as the position of the Cyprus Government and in the sense, of course, of biregional federation.

President Kiprianou did not say a word about the travesty of purge, the disarming of EOKA-B [National Organization of Cypriot Fighters] groups--a burning issue that has caused a deep crack in the domestic front and for which AKEL has strongly criticized him.

In his addesss the president reiterates many promises he has given in the past for solving the burning internal issues. However, he does not answer AKEL's criticism concerning the conflict between words and deeds and the failure to keep old promises.

For no apparent reason, the president stated that he has never been and will never become the tool of Cypriots or foreigners. If these words are hinting at the party of the working class, we do not hesitate to observe that this is an unbecoming and impermissible insult.

AKEL PLANTS NICOSIA GATHERING, PAPIAONNOU ADDRESS 10 JUN

NC300717 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 30 May 80 p 1

[Text] On Tuesday, 10 June, 1980, at 2105 the AKEL District Committee for Nicosia-Kyrenia will hold an all-people's gathering at Elevtheria Square, Nicosia. AKEL Secretary General E. Papaioannou will address the gathering on the recent political and other developments and will analyze the resolution of the extraordinary plenum of the AKEL Central Committee and the Central Control Committee.

[Signed] The AKEL District Committee for Nicosia-Kyrenia

Political Observer's Comments

NC300719 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 30 May 80 pp 1, 7

[Excerpt] Political observers, referring to AKEL's announcement, described the AKEL decision to hold a rally at Nicosia's Elevtheria Square as showing not only AKEL's insistence on the positions it presented in its recent statement but also as a first step to an eventual pan-Cypriot scale mobilization of its supporters to back these positions.

Although not ruling out the possibility that the gathering might have been planned in such a way as to be a display of political force by AKEL, the same political observers noted the fact that the announcement of the "all people's gathering" came on the eve of President Kiprianou's statement, but which he intends to answer AKEL's statement. The observers also pointed out that on the day on which the rally is scheduled to take place, the president of the republic will be paying an official visit to Czechoslovakia and that on the following day he will visit East Germany for the same purpose.

PAPAIOANNOU SCORES KIPRIANOU IN ELEVTHEROTIPIA INTERVIEW

AT311150 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 31 May 80 p 20

[Exclusive interview with AKEL Secretary General Ezekias Papaioannou by ELEVTHEROTIPIA--date, place not given]

[Text] Question: Mr Papaioannou, as is well known, AKEL's decision to separate its responsibilities from President Kiprianou, virtually ceasing to support him, has created a serious political crisis in Cyprus. Can you tell us why AKEL took this important decision and particularly at this specific time?

Answer: A long time ago AKEL informed the president of the republic of its views both verbally and in writing.

The most recent memorandum was the one dated 3 March 1980. Unfortunately, however, AKEL's views, which do not differ from the line and practice for the solution of the Cyprus issue which the National-Ministerial Council of March 1977 under Makarios agreed on, were not heeded and AKEL, which does not participate in the government, could not become equally responsible for the destruction of Cyprus.

As a responsible party it had to tell the people the truth and this is what it did. As to why AKEL took this decision at this moment? This is because it had to make this decision. Party members as well as other had even conducted criticism which stressed that the decision should have been taken earlier.

There is absolutely no other expedience for the time chosen by AKEL to take this decision, apart from the fact that conditions for such a decision had overripened a long time ago.

As is stressed in its memorandum, AKEL will not become equally responsible for the destruction of Cyprus.

Question: How do you think the present crisis will develop and how will your party act in order to prevent Cyprus from being led to another tragedy?

Answer: In its resolution AKEL stresses that it is always ready to cooperate with all the peoples' patriotic democratic forces but this always on the basis of the line and tactics for the solution of the Cyprus issue, which was established as "the Makarios line."

All those who are sincerely concerned that Cyprus should not be led into another tragedy have the duty to insist firmly and unshakenly on the implementation of this line and to cooperate with those forces which conscientiously support this line.

Question: Should we assume that there are no more limits for cooperation between AKEL and the president of the republic and that your party will cease to offer him any form of support?

Answer: The resolution of the Central Committee is not open to misinterpretation. AKEL does not support personalities but it supports a line.

Question: EDEK has accused AKEL of undermining the struggle of the people of Cyprus with its decision and claims that your party's decisions on the Cyprus issue are tantamount to an acceptance of a bizonal partition.

What is your reply to these charges and what should the Greek Cypriot side have to do for a resumption of intercommunal dialogue?

Answer: It is EDEK which is undermining the struggle of the people of Cyprus ever since it disagreed with both the first as well as with the second proposal of the Greek Cypriot side and attacked Makarios for his agreement with Denktas and the course he opened with his proposals for an acceptable solution to the Cyprus issue.

If therefore, anyone is undermining the struggle of the people of Cyprus this is none other than EDEK, which has disagreed and continues to disagree with the line and tactics for a solution to the Cyprus issue, and with the talks, which consciously or unconsciously promotes a double union and partition of Cyprus.

If AKEL is undermining the struggle of the people of Cyprus because it firmly and unshakenly insists upon the line and tactics laid down by Makarios, then, according to EDEK, the greatest underminer of this struggle is Makarios himself.

For the purpose of solving the internal aspects of the Cyprus issue there is no better process than the process of intercommunal talks. On the part of the Greek Cypriot side, every effort should be made for such a resumption on the basis of the four directive lines of the Markarios-Denktas agreement and the 10 points of the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement.

Even though the other side may not be sincere on reaching a solution to a bizonal federation the Greek Cypriot side has much to gain by demonstrating full adherence to this. What is of importance is whether the solution will be one of a federation or a confederation.

Words are not important if in essence the solution is that of a federation.

In reference to the foreign aspect of the Cyprus issue this should be discussed and solved by an international conference under UN auspices. The full position of AKEL, which is simultaneously the position of the National-Ministerial Council of 1977, on a solution to the Cyprus issue is the following: an independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, nonalined and demilitarized Cyprus.

Question: Do you support immediate presidential and parliamentary elections?

Answer: AKEL has not spoke either about presidential or parliamentary elections at this time. It is, however, ready for such elections if the issue arises.

Question: What is your comment on the Voskaridhis [not further identified] letter in I KATHIMERINI in which he states that the leadership of AKEL must resign?

Answer: It is a pity for Voskaridhis that the people of Cyprus in their majority have an opposite viewpoint than that of his guided pen. The "friendly" sentiments of Voskaridhis toward AKEL are well known. Voskaridhis, however, should better limit his recommendation abilities to Greece because he has no idea about the Cyprus issue. The newspaper which published such ridiculous views, like those of Voskharidhis, ought to be more careful in the future.

LISSARIDHIS COMMENTS ON POLITICAL CRISIS IN GREEK PAPER

AT011547 Athens KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 1 Jun 80 p 24

[Exclusive interview with EDEK Chairman Vasos Lissaridhis by KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA--date, place not given]

[Text] Question: Mr Chairman, how do you analyze the current political crisis which has erupted in Cyprus and what do you attribute it to?

Answer: For us, the Cyprus question is an issue of invasion, occupation and liberation. It is an issue of the implementation of UN resolutions. It is an issue of respect for basic human rights, the right of settlement, ownership and free movement. It is an issue of the removal of foreign occupation forces and every foreign base or presence in Cyrpus. It is an issue of a unitary economic entity that will provide the opportunity for an essential mixing of the communities.

Some people believe that through continuous concessions to Turkish expansionism and by extenstion to imperialism we could open the way for a solution to the Cyprus problem. It would be naive for one to believe that either imperialism or the chauvinistic Turkish circles will willingly abandon their plans and allow solutions which are compatible with the national survival of the Cyprus people, their independence and their sovereignty.

It is well known that the Greek Cypriot side submitted proposals--they were described as painful by Markarios--which were considered most concessionary even by Turkey's traditional friends while the Turkish side has submitted proposals that have been considered totally unacceptable because they were tantamount to the establishment of essentially two separate states.

Efforts were made to resume the talks and, although the Greek Cypriot side agreed to attend the talks, even with an open agenda and on the basis of the basic principles which had been accepted during the Makarios-Denktas and Kiprianou-Denktas meetings, from the outset the Turkish side submitted demands for the acceptance of the bizonal solution, after it had defined the term, which is tantamount to two separate state entities.

Unfortunately, it seems that even now on the Greek Cypriot side there are those who would be willing to enter into a dialogue even with such prerequisites.

Question: What are the possible repercussions of this crisis and what role does EDEK intend to play to prevent Cyprus from being led into a new tragedy?

Answer: I have already replied with regard to the possible repercussions. At the head of the people, the socialist party of EDEK will preclude a policy of a slide to constant concessions--without gaining anything in return--to Turkish expansionism, a slide that will lead to a national catastrophe.

We shall not endorse our voluntary slavery. We are sure that the broad masses of the Cypriot people will follow us in this course.

Question: How do you interpret the recent decision of AKEL concerning President Kiprianou and what do you believe has led AKEL to this decision?

Answer: It is truly difficult for one to understand the motive that prompted the AKEL Central Committee to state that the president of the Cyprus republic and, naturally by extension, the negotiator and the Greek Cypriot side are to blame for the current deadlock because this is the principal argument of the other side, an argument which I am afraid will have unpleasant consequences for the course of the national cause.

It is well known that the United States, NATO, Ankara and Denktas have been trying--thus far in vain--to convince the world that the nonresumption of the intercommunal talks was allegedly due to our intransigence.

I fear very much that the AKEL Central Committee has now provided all the arguments that Turkey, the United States, NATO and Denktas need in order to attribute the responsibility or joint responsibility for the nonresumption of the dialogue to our side. Yet Denktas' proposals had been openly rejected by several sides of the Turkish Cypriot opposition.

It is a fact that the same views were expressed long ago by the party of the extreme right, the "Sinayermos" [Rally], which, as is well known houses all the coupists. However, "Sinayermos" was easily impugnable. Now with its open support of "Sinayermos" the AKEL leadership unfortunately is offering the worst possible service to our national cause. We are sure that many AKEL followers do not agree with this position which was taken by their leadership.

Question: Will EDEK also stop supporting President Kiprianou?

Answer: EDEK has expressed with actions, not words, complete disagreement with the socio-economic policy which is being followed by voting against draft bills in the House of Representatives. EDEK will support any correct activity and will criticize activities which, in its opinion, are wrong. However, EDEK does not attribute any responsibility to the president of the Cyprus Republic regarding the stalemate on the Cyprus issue. The responsibility is borne by the circles of Turkish expansionism and their international supporters, especially the United States and NATO, and Denktas as the plenipotentiary of these interests.

Question: Your opponents describe you as intransigent on the Cyprus question, that you reject the Waldheim formulas, that you want a military confrontation and generally dynamic action. What is your reply to your accusers?

Answer: If the rejection of the surrender of the fatherland and rights and if persistence on UN resolutions is intransigence, then I gladly accept that description. [passage indistinct] refers to the bizonal but tacitly insists that we agree that we have already adopted the meaning of the bizonal. I am sure that if the text were put before the Cypriot people the huge majority would reject it and Waldehim would be exposed [passage indistinct].

Certainly we support a defense shield. We certainly support a people's guard. Certainly we support preparation for the confrontation of a possible expansionist aggression.

Certainly this is not tantamount to adventurism, to "aggressive" war as it is being publicized because these possibilities are beyond reality.

BULGARIAN SIGNS CULTURAL COOPERATION PROGRAM IN NICOSIA

NC292029 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 29 May 80

Speaking after the signing of the program, Mr Pelayias expressed thanks on behalf of the Cyprus Government and people for the support which the government and people of Bulgaria rendered in the past, and continue to render, in the Cyprus struggle. In his response, Mr Ribarov said that the signing of the program contributes to the further strengthening of relations between Cyprus and Bulgaria. The Bulgarian official has described his visit to Cyprus as successful, and stressed that Bulgaria's stand on the Cyprus issue is crystal clear and consistent in as much as the independence and the unity of the island are concerned.

NEW NATO PLAN REPORTED UNDER PREPARATION

AT311512 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 31 May 80 p 1

[Excerpt] Within the next two weeks and in any case prior to the meeting of the NATO foreign ministers scheduled in Ankara for 15 and 16 June, it is probably that there will be a new NATO proposal for the return of Greece to the military wing of the Atlantic Alliance. According to authoritative circles this proposal will to a certain extent have the formal character of the Rogers plan submitted to date. It was explained that the Greek side is waiting for the new NATO initiative but that it has no knowledge of the content of the proposals to be submitted. A new--and strong--fluidity was obvious in recent days in the uncertainty of Greek-NATO relations and this is attributable not only to the imminent meeting of NATO foreign ministers in Ankara but also to the view which is developing within Allied circles that the Mediterranean area, after Tito's death and the developments in Southeast Asia, is being turned into "the soft underbelly of Europe," according to the definition of the new commander of the Southeast wing of NATO, U.S. Admiral William Crowe. Yesterday's article in the London TIMES which demands that Turkey should lift its reservations against Greece's immediate return to the Alliance in order to restore the "special relations," is considered of equal importance.

In accordance to experience gained to date, however, it is possible to stress with certainty that even these new proposals are not likely to produce any results if they fail to absolutely serve Greek positions as they have been expressed in the well-known Haig-Davos agreement.

Authoritative circles in Athens revealed that, within the framework of expected developments, U.S. Ambassador to Greece McCloskey visited Foreign Minister Mitsotakis in a protocol visit. Despite the nature of this visit, however, it was reported that reference was made to the U.S.-Turkish agreement, the examination of which has not yet been completed by the Greek side for the purpose of establishing its own positions in the equivalent Greek-U.S. agreement, which is still pending.

The Greek foreign minister discussed with McCloskey the possibility of meeting his U.S. counterpart, Muskie, in Ankara during the NATO conference. It is also considered likely that Mitsotakis may also meet Turkish Foreign Minister Erkmen during the conference.

TA NEA Washington Dispatch

AT311634 Athens TA NEA in Greek 31 May 80 p 15

[Report by TA NEA correspondent in New York, St. Evstathiadhis: "The U.S. Always Has a Special Weakness for Turkey"]

[Excerpt] A new phase of feverish political, diplomatic and military activity with the return of Greece to NATO's military wing as its goal has been taking place as of yesterday while pressures, recommendations, suggestions and advice on this central issue are being fired at Greece from Washington, Brussels, London and even from Naples, Italy.

Specifically and in reference to U.S. policy within the NATO-Greece-Turkey complex, our correspondent in New York, St. Evstathiadhis reports:

Although no "dramatic changes" are expected in Greek-Turkish relations the State Department does believe that there is a certain development. A department spokesman described the recent statements by Demirel and Rallis which included violent expressions as "nationalist intransigence" and argued there is no reason for pessimism.

Regarding Greece, the State Department still limits itself to "studying the facts" and the conditions through which the policy of the Rallis government appears to be evolving, noting with satisfaction that this policy will follow the policy of the Karamanlis government as well as the fact that it was accepted by Greek public opinion without any negative reactions. Washington continues to attribute "a completely special significance" to the Turkish factor and it continues to declare this at every opportunity adding that in no way will it intervene in the Demirel government policy at least not on issues which by their very nature or their history could possible create a reaction in Ankara.

I VRADHINI Comment

[Editorial: "We Shall Wait"]

[Text] We do not have any knowledge to what extent the indications that a new plan is being prepared for Greece's return to the military wing of NATO could be considered as omens of an Alliance effort which may prove more satisfactory to us than the previous ones. At the same time, we do not believe that excessive significance should be attributed to yesterday's statements by Admiral Shear. These statements, however, as well as the article of THE TIMES of London under the headline, "A Valuable NATO Ally," do in any case indicate some change, at least in tone. If this change also demonstrates a turn in the handling of the Greek factor then, most certainly, it does have a certain greater importance.

We have been inured to hearing or to reading statements and articles lauding the strategic significance of Turkey, particularly after the developments in Iran. We never questioned nor are we likely to question it. We have always maintained, however, that in no case could Greece be considered of a lesser strategic importance. We have also maintained that our reattachment to the unified military command of NATO could in no way be connected with any concessions by us, concessions which might affect our sovereign rights.

It is a comforting fact that THE TIMES of London with its well-known authority and prestige adopts approximatley the positions of Greece. It finds these positions just and logical and stressed the need to make every possible effort to bring Greece back to NATO on a proper basis to the degree that this is still possible.

THE TIMES correctly stressed the sensitivity of Greek public opinion on whatever it considers as attempts by the West to placate Turkey both in the Aegean and in Cyprus. The newspaper does not hesitate to observe that the least that Turkey could do for the West as well as for itself, in face of the billions of dollars being offered to it, is to facilitate the reattachment of Greece with NATO under conditions which will guarantee Greek independence and self-respect without affecting Turkish sovereignty.

On our part we have nothing more to add. We consider that if the other NATO member states faced the problem in the same way then the solution would have been found despite the recent intransigence of Turkish Prime Minister S. Demirel. We will just wait. The next move is up to NATO.

DHROSOS SCORES DEMIREL'S INACCURACY ON RETURN TO NATO

AT301310 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 30 May 80 p 6

[The "Political Issues" column by Yeoryios Dhrosos: "Demirel's Reaction"]

[Text] With his reasoning Demirel managed to surpass both his predecessors as well as himself. [paragraph continues]

He replied in a calm way--and this is true--to the statements of the Greek prime minister and he approximately said that dialogue or resort to international processes are impossible or rather they have no usefulness because Greek views on the questions of the east Aegean, airspace and on conditions for Greece's return to NATO's military wing differ from those of Turkey.

If these views coincided, however, there would have been no need for either dialogue or international arbitration. All issues would have been solved and everything would have been fine.

Negotiations are conducted and a resort to international justice is undertaken when two countries fail to agree between themselves on some issue. It must also be said that some sort of a dialogue is being conducted at present even though it has had no spectacular results so far. As to international processes, these have already been rejected repeatedly by Turkey and they are once again rejected by the Turkish prime minister. He does not explain to us why this is so, but things are very clear. The Turks know that they are in the wrong and they want to avoid an international recognition of this fact.

When a country refuses international negotiations because they may fail to produce the results it wants and when it refuses international arbitration or even a resort to some international court, then it has the elemental obligation to state to us what it is that it wants, what method it approves. The way in which Demirel raises the issue and then leaves it hanging only gives the impression that only through some political confrontation will it be possible to solve pending issues. Are these the proposals of the Turkish prime minister? This is something which he most certainly has to explain.

When someone refuses some proposed method then it is understandable that he must propose a different one. Otherwise we reach the automatic conclusion that since all peaceful processes are rejected then the only thing left is force itself.

So much, therefore, on questions of principle and reasoning which arise from the Turkish prime minister's statements. As a second point one ought to stress the inaccuracies which Demirel incidentally mentioned and which, however, cannot even support or justify his own line of reasoning.

He stated that Greece lays down conditions for its return to NATO. Greece, however, has laid down absolutely no conditions. It is Turkey which lays down conditions and demands changes in the status which has prevailed only until a short time ago. At the same time Greece negotiated and reached an agreement with the recent chief of NATO, General Haig. This agreement was accepted by all NATO member states. Among all the other member states it was only Turkey which rejected it or rather proposed fundamental amendments to it. This is because Turkey wanted to glean some benefit from this entire issue, even if this was detrimental to the Atlantic Alliance itself and to its unity.

Therefore the fact that Turkey lays down conditions is interpreted by Demirel to mean that it is Greece which lays down conditions. The same is happening when he says that Greece lays down conditions on the Aegean and its islands. In reference to this Greece is asking for absolutely nothing. All Greece asks is that the conditions which have applied to date will continue to apply. It is Turkey which makes sly claims. We are not the ones who ask for changes or alterations to the existing status but we propose clear and specific ways for the solution of arising differences. Demirel says absolutely nothing on this. He only states that we disagree and everyone is aware of this. He also states that he loves peace. It is, therefore, quite possible that all this may create some impression among some foreigners who are not aware of or only partially know the facts. It is alleged that the Turks want peace but that the settlement of the differences between the two countries cannot be achieved because it is the Greeks who are asking for something.

In other words it is alleged that the Greeks are trying to snatch something from long-suffering Turkey which wants both a peaceful settlement and also has the best of intentions. The snag is that Turkey is suffering from a certain allergy to international justice and international practices.

Rallis stated it very correctly and irrevocably in the chamber of deputies, both during his statement and his interjections. It could, perhaps, be necessary to simplify Greek positions a little bit for the sake of international public opinion: that it is we who seek dialogue and not the Turks, who reject it under the excuse that there is a discrepancy between the two viewpoints. It is also the Turks and not we who raise conditions on the status of the Aegean islands and against our return to NATO's military wing. From this point on, everyone can make his own judgement.

MITSOTAKIS CONDEMNS DIVISION IN CYPRUS

AT311529 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 31 May 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis made the following statement today: At this moment when efforts are once again being made for the resumption of dialogue under the auspices of the UN secretary general, it is regrettable that instead of there being unity of spirit in Cyprus there are examples of division which even threaten to develop into a crisis. This would undermine the struggle of the people of Cyprus and the Cyprus Government.

I AVYI SCORES PRESS 'EXPLOITATION' OF CYPRUS CRISIS

AT311309 Athens I AVYI in Greek 31 May 80 p 10

[From the "I AVYI" column: "A Sense of Responsibility"]

[Text] The political tension now existing in Cyprus as a result of the recent AKEL decision ought to be overcome on the basis of understanding which must serve the struggle of the people of Cyprus and the cooperation of political patriotic forces in the best possible way. In this light we consider the efforts by certain rightwing newspapers in Greece to exploit Cypriot political tension for their well-known petty party and anti-communist goals as extremely harmful.

The national line pursued to date by the Cyprus Government was based upon cooperation by all patriotic, democratic forces on the island. The disagreements which AKEL has now brought to light in no way destroy this foundation for a joint line. On the contrary, this only goes to prove the great possibilities which exist even at this very moment for the continuation of the national front so that the differences which have appeared are overcome in a constructive and democratic way, without futile confrontations and rifts which are unjustified in themselves.

Under these conditions there can be no other position for all the patriotic forces of Greece other than that dictated in the interests of a militant unity and preparedness of the people of Cyprus. Any attempt at petty party exploitation of the disagreements created in Cyprus is a blow against the struggle of the people of Cyprus and generally against national interests.

We are living through an extremely difficult and delicate phase of the Cyprus problem. Imperialist efforts to break up the home front in Cyprus must primarily be dealt with in the most decisive way because at such moments nothing could be more destructive than to slander and to undermine one of the most conscientious and decisive forces of the Cypriot national front such as that of AKEL.

All past experience as well as current international reality prove that there can be no anticommunist, anti-Soviet, NATO solution to the Cyprus problem without such a "solution" coming into a direct clash with our own national interests. This is an additional and indisputable conclusion which demonstrates, from this aspect as well, the destructive influence of every anticommunist trend on the Cyprus issue.

Let, therefore, "all fishing in murky waters" cease on an issue which demands a sense of responsibility and sobriety. Let us not forget--at this opportunity--that the Cypriot calamity was prepared and executed not naturally by the communists--Greek or Cypriot--but by the most stentorian "nationalists" who in this way earned for themselves the "glory" of the nightmare of obedience to U.S. and NATO states.

KREISKY CRITICIZED ON CYPRUS STATEMENT

AT301614 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 30 May 80 p 2

[From the "Evening" column: "The Chancellor"]

[Text] Chancellor Kreisky clearly stated that Austria is not interested in the Cyprus issue nor in the thousands of refugees nor the hundreds of missing persons after "Attila." Yet it is, however, interested in the 49 Tehran hostages. This is why he undertook his visit. Rules of hospitality do not permit us to criticize the Austrian chancellor over this position which he so starkly explained on an issue which is so sensitive for Greek public opinion. The same rules, however, ought to have applied for Kreisky.

When, however, questions of international moral order and protection of human rights get mixed up with international expediencies then this could often happen. Austria has long-standing relations with Turkey. The position of this country during the 1921 revolution and after the Iasion defeat is very well known. A few words of sympathy for Cypriot Hellenism, however, which has suffered so much as a result of the Turkish invasion and the illegal occupation of 40 percent of Cypriot territory would not have been difficult to find, even for politeness' sake.

ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS WARNS AGAINST AKEL-USSR PLOTS IN CYPRUS

[Editorial: "Is a Soviet Action Developing in Cyprus?"]

[Text] The Cypriot communist party, the well-known AKEL (which was denounced by Archbishop Makarios and General Grivas as the tool of British colonialism), not at all coincidentally but deliberately chose the moment to create a political crisis and a disturbance in the long-suffering island for the purpose of attempting, by virtually capturing all decision-making centers, to impose its own one-party regime. This development would result in the establishment of Russian influence over the island. Why was this not a coincidence?

--Because the situation in the Middle East is tense.

--Because the oil crisis is worsening as a result of new and serious fuel price hikes.

--Because the explosive consequences of the Soviet incursion in Afghanistan have been added to the disturbance of detente which resulted from the U.S.-Iranian dispute over the hostages.

--Because Soviet expansionism through the east Mediterranean is being dynamically readjusted as was also stressed in the joint report addressed to NATO by Italian, Greek and Turkish officers.

--Because a climate of uncertainty prevails after Marshal Tito's death.

--Because the internal situation in Turkey is as complicated as never since the military revolt of 20 years ago.

Suspicions that something was being planned against Cyprus were first created by the repeated cancellations--without reason and unjustified--of the official invitation for President Kiprianou to visit Moscow. They became clearer with AKEL's insistence on preventing a reshuffle of the Cyprus Government--and on keeping Sofianos as minister of education, a man whose educational policy has been described an anti-Hellenic. The leaders of AKEL, the very same personswho fought against Makarios, Grivad and Eoka (to whom we supplied the halls of our universities so that they could speak about Cyprus...), appear to have consideredthe moment appropriate and opportune to carry their own one-party control over Cyprus to its final phase, with even the use of pro-Turkish slogans as already reported and stressed by the center-left in Nicosia.

When the Soviets gave their concent for the "Attila" raid on 20 July 1974, the Kremlin's ambassador to Ankara at that time, our well-known Grubyakov, was then interested in nothing more than in Turkish guarantees about limitation and the gradual exclusion of any fundamental Athens influence in Cyprus (as it can be revealingly concluded in the book by N. Sarris). Since that time the Soviets have never pressured Ankara to withdraw its occupation forces. Moscow moves with developments which it considers as faits accomplis. It is not bothered by the permanent establishment of "Attila" in northern Cyprus so long as it can achieve the establishment of its own AKEL in the southern portion of the island--with even Ankara's tolerance since the basic partition between "Attila" and AKEL--in other words between Turkey and the USSR--will rid Turkey of the irritations and pressures to conform with UN resolutions.

We greatly fear the Cyprus issue is entering a new critical phase--through processes which our diplomacy never foresaw or imagined. Are we determined, both here and in Nicosia, to deal with it with determination, in time and successfully? What is needed are cohesion of spirit, unity and an abandoning of all delusions.

A 'New Afghanistan'

[Editorial "A Type of Afghanistan Is Being Hatched in Cyprus"]

[Text] AKEL, the communist party of Cyprus, in its document dated 3 March 80 addressed to President Spiros Kiprianou, talked of "a compromise solution" to the Cyprus issue and blamed the stagnation in intercommunal dialogue from the viewpoint of reponsibilities, equally, the Greek and Turkish Cypriot sides. This policy is consistent with its continued line of national betrayal which was denounced both by Archbishop Makarios and by General Grivas. Apparently AKEL has now determined that the time has come for it to share the long-suffering island with "Attila"--to partition it between Turkey and the Soviet Union. This is an old goal. On 1 May 1955, only one month after the commencement of the EOKA-B [National Organization of Cypriot Fighters] national liberation struggle it published the following report in NEOS DHIMOKRATIS, its own newspaper:

"The liberation of the people of Cyprus cannot be true except also as a liberation of the Turkish Cypriots. By claiming the right of self-determination even as far as separation for the Greeks we cannot deny the very same right to the Turkish minority. [paragraph continues]

"Unity in struggle can be achieved only through recognition of the right for national autonomy, their political self-administration for the Turks." The notorious Zorlu [former Turkish foreign minister] did not have to think too deeply later on. The arguments of AKEL's NEOS DHIMOKRATIS paved the way for "Attila" and for partition. It must also be noted that the article published in AKEL's newspaper was adopted by him completely in order to strike against Makarios, Dhighenis and EOKA-B. This was an article by the KKE and its leader at that time, Zakhariadhis. At that very same time the KKE, AKEL and the then EDA [United Democratic Left] denounced Dhighenis to British colonialism--they revealed that Yeoryios Grivas was hiding behind that pseudonym.

AKEL's current tactics, by making full use of many mistakes and delusions, are aimed at turning the free portion of Cyprus into a zone of political and strategic Soviet influence--a fact which will be achieved through imposition of its own one-party regime. AKEL considers that it will not have to face many serious obstacles toward this end. It is neither interested in the national interests of Hellenism nor in whether it will transfer international tension, in the form of a new Afghanistan, in essence to the Greek seas and our Mediterranean area. Will AKEL be permitted to sweep us away to adventures with unforeseeable consequences which will, in any case, turn out to be to the benefit of the Turks and the Russians?

AVEROF TOURS NORTHERN MILITARY UNITS

AT301649 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 30 May 80 p 16

[Text] National Defense Minister Evangelos Averof accompanied by the Chief of the Army General Staff Lieutenant General Karayiannis, arrived in Thessaloniki at 1030 [0730 GMT] yessterday, the first stop of his tour of units and garrisons in northern Greece. Upon his arrival Averof proceeded to the headquarters of the III Army Corps where he was briefed by the commander and his staff, at noon he addressed approximately 800 officers at the corps' club.

"I have just come from a briefing on the activities of the III Army Corps," he stated, "and I am full of satisfaction and pride inspired by your commanders and your officers, and I am happy to talk with you after such a briefing. As your superior I believe that I must often come into contact with you and to brief you on the general facts of the nation's life. You who make up the Greek officer corps are fulfilling a difficult and sacred mission and I believe that you have a right to know directly and from the responsible political leadership the course on which the country finds itself." After reviewing the international situation, which he described as "murky" and full of danger, Averof referred to the critical issues which Greece faces today and emphasized Greek-Turkish differences. At this point he stressed the positions of Greece on the questions of the continental shelf and airspace and reiterated Greece's position for a solution of these issues through peaceful means.

In another part of his address Averof stated, "we are in a world which does not permit us to lead a quiet life. We live in a world within which, first of all, we must have a strong and calm internal situation. At the same time we require armed forces which will be in a position to defend us against anyone who would dare to attack us. It is for this very reason," he stressed, "that I attribute so much significance to strong armed forces. I am happy because I continually see their increasing capabilities, their high morale and their devotion to duty. I would like to stress that experience has proved that equipment alone, no matter how modern it may be, is not sufficient. What counts most of all is [high] morale and devotion to ideals."

In conclusion the minister referred to the personal problems of the officers. "I know," he stated, "that you also have personal and economic problems which I cannot solve because they fall in the general problem of public functions. I will try and I know that very soon I will be able to solve some of your other problems such as the housing problem and the reorganization of your shopping facilities."

TA020524 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Excerpt] An investigation is being conducted in connection with the incident in which Iraqi helicopters killed, with machineguns, 10 of the 18 Turkish villagers from Cukurca, a district of Hakkari, who had crossed the Iraqi border to cut grass. The Council of Ministers convened last night to discuss the incident. Following the meeting, which lasted about 1 and 1/2 hours, Prime Minister Demirel said: We are investigating the incident. The foreign minister summoned the Iraqi ambassador and conferred with him. We have instructions to our ambassador in Baghdad. Tomorrow the governor [of Hakkari] will give us more information about the incident. We will then announce our stand on the issue. I am very sorry about my citizens who lost their lives. The Turkish Republic is a great state. We will not let anyone's rights be trampled.

Our correspondent has learned from Hakkari Governor Irfan Kurucu that the incident occurred as follows: Eighteen persons from Cukurca went 5 to 6 kilometers beyond border stone no 49 yesterday morning and began to cut grass in the vicinity of (Depkar) village which was evacuated by Iraq a while ago. Six Iraqi helicopters fired upon the Turkish villagers between 1030 and 1100. Ten of the 18 villagers died instantly. Three were wounded, two of them seriously. Another two fled. The remaining three were released [presumably by the Iraqis] because they were children. The wounded who could return back were taken to Van State Hospital.

Hakkari Governor Irfan Kurucu and the Hakkari gendarme commander left for Cukurca this morning. The former has said that a delegation headed by the district officer of Cukurca would meet with an official delegation from (Emadieh), Iraq, at border stone no 43 at around 1000 today and that a joint investigation would be conducted.

DEMIREL OPENS JUSTICE PARTY CONGRESS IN ANKARA

TA311103 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 31 May 80

[Text] Pointing out that Turkey's problems could be solved, Justice Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that there are hopeful developments and reassuring signs. Demirel noted that the government reached its most sensitive point in fulfilling its tasks and added that purposeful and effective efforts were being made. Demirel made this statement at the opening of the Justice Party representatives congress in Ankara today. Demirel asked either to be left free to work or to go to elections.

Pointing out that Turkey seemed to be the only country in which the government party wanted new elections while the opposition party avoided it, Demirel said that his government was not in danger of being toppled. He addedthat his government was in power not as a result of elections, but rather by the force of the country's circumstances. Demirel said that his government was not responsible for any of the difficulties the country was experiencing.

Noting that the government was engaged in a relentless struggle against anarchy, terror and divisiveness, Demirel said: If no complete results have been achieved in this fight, this is not because we did not wage a strong enough struggle but because of the scope of the fire. Demirel reiterated that the struggle against shortages of goods was successful and added that this was due to courageous measures.

Referring to the presidential elections, Demirel said that the proposal of amending the Constitution has already been submitted to the parliament and added: No one should be afraid to go to the people for elections.

Criticizes Erbakan

TA011802 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 1 Jun 80

[Excerpts] Addressing the Justice Party congress in Ankara today, Justice Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that those who were trying to come to power did not have to organize intrigues. Criticizing National Salvation Party [NSP] leader Necmettin Erbakan's mentality, Demirel charged that the NSP supported the government in order to hurt its political rivals at the expense of the sufferings of the nation [as heard]. Demirel added that Erbakan was bargaining with the RPP behind closed doors trying to help that party to come to power. With this attitude, the prime minister added, Erbakan was becoming an admirer of the Eastern bloc and was helping that bloc, which is extending its hands into Turkey.

Demirel said: The problems our opponents are exploiting for their political aims are not problems that were created by our government. Our opponents must not forget the past and try to obtain political capital from the problems we are facing. They are the national probelms of our country. The prime minister pointed out that during the 22 months it was in power, the RPP had only brought blood, tears, suffering and grief to the country and that the NSP was refraining from supporting the government in solving the national problems of the country.

Demirel said: Mr Erbakan is making himself look ridiculous by denying everything and by saying whatever comes to his mind. It is as if Mr Erbakan is pleased about the suffering of the nation.

ECEVIT SAYS RPP WILL TRY TO SOLVE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION CRISIS

TA301746 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 30 May 80

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit said that, since there is no hope of conducting a dialogue with the Justice Party, the RPP will exert all its efforts to conclude the presidential election next week. Ecevit held a news conference at the parliament today and said that the RPP respects the Constitution and its articles related to the election of a president. Ecevit added that Justice Party leader Demirel does not approve of the Constitution and seems to be determined not to adhere to its articles. Ecevit noted that Demirel was trying to prevent the implementation of the Constitution and was subsequently using this failure in its implementation as a reason for its amendment.

Noting that incompatibility between the views of the leader of a big party and the Constitution can be a major factor in creating a crisis, Ecevit said: Honorable Demirel said that no Justice Party member can cast a vote in favor of an RPP candidate. He also said that an RPP member cannot a cast a vote in favor of a Justice Party candidate. He has no right to speak on our behalf. If it becomes apparent that a Justice Party candidate has more chance of being elected, I could easily suggest that members of my group choose a Justice Party candidate who might be eligible for the presidency. I consider this a democratic duty. Actually, this is stipulated by the Constitution. The Constitution calls for a conciliation. However, stating that no Justice Party member can cast a vote for an RPP presidential candidate, Honorable Demirel is engaging in antidemocratic pressures. Ecevit noted that Demirel is concerned that Justice Party legislators will vote according to their consciences in the voting to be held in line with RPP proposals and that he is trying to impose an embargo on their consciences.

Pointing out that Demirel was pursuing a tactic of leading parliamentary developments to an impasse and of proposing a constitutional amendment to solve the impasse, Ecevit said: We agree with the Constitution. We believe that it is right. When we say that we do not approve of an amendment, he calls for elections. When the time comes elections will be held. However, an election held under the current circumstances cannot be considered a real election. It can only be an overcast and bloody election.

Ecevit said that attacks against RPP members were continuing throughout Turkey and that the followers of a party supporting the government are stepping up mass terror in many regions in Turkey. Ecevit said: They are revolting against the state. In constitutional terms they are engaging in active revolt against the state and the state is yielding in the face of all these activities. The state is keeping silent. Persons are being killed. Party offices and shops owned by party members are being set ablaze. Many shopowners were forced to close their shops in Ankara and in many other provinces today. Flags are at half mast. Ecevit said that this silence was either due to impotence or it was a confession of shared responsibility in the crimes being committed. Noting that the RPP wanted to know what measures the state had taken against various civil servants who encouraged such crimes, Ecevit added that the state is no longer effective and democracy is no longer functioning. Ecevit concluded by saying that after his meetings with the leaders of the National Unity Group, the senators from the Presidential Quota Group and the independents, he will bring concrete proposals to the group meeting on Tuesday.

After the news conference, Ecevit separately called on the leader of the Senate National Unity Group, Fahri Ozdilek, and the leader of the presidentially-appointed senators, Zeyyat Baykara. The presidential election issue was discussed at the meetings.

In a statement after his meeting with Ozdilek, Ecevit said: I expressed the belief that the National Unity Group will continue its contribution--as it has always done with conviction--to our efforts, which we will increase as of next week. I asked for their views, which are very important to me. Ozdilek said that he was asked whether or not the group will support an RPP candidate. Ozdilek added that the group will support an RPP candidate to ensure the speedy election of a president.

After his meeting with Baykara, Ecevit said that the presidentially-appointed senators were exerting constructive efforts to elect a president. Ecevit said: I was happy to hear that they will continue to make the same contribution in the next phase as well. Baykara said that he had informed Ecevit that the group will be happy to contribute to the solution of the presidential election issue.

GHALI WANTS SUPPORT FOR CAMP DAVID INITIATIVE

NC302047 Paris AFP in English 2004 GMT 30 May 80

[Text] Rome, 30 May (AFP)--Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Butrus Ghali today asked Italy to urge the European Economic Community (EEC) not to disregard Egyptian gains in the Palestinian autonomy talks.

He asked Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, as a representative of the country chairing the EEC, to present Egypt's case during consideration of any European Mideast initiative during the Venice summit.

"Any initiative that ignores the efforts already made and the principles adopted at Camp David or at Washington in March 1979, will settle nothing and on the contrary will risk the creation of new difficulties," Mr Ghali said in a press conference here.

Europe should try not to upset contacts now being made by Egypt with some moderate Arab countries and not to take stands contrary to those adopted by the United States on the Mideast talks, he added.

He said recent statements of Saudi officials on conditions for possible negotiations with Israel were "an extremely positive step, revealing that positions are moving closer." He said Egypt and Saudi Arabia have indirect contacts on this subject.

But he added: "After two and one-half years of negotiations with Israel, no progress, however small, has been made because of Israeli intransigence."

SINGAPORE'S RAJARATNAM ON SRV ABSENCE FROM GENEVA CONFERENCE

BK270251 Hong Kong AFP in English 1623 GMT 26 May 80

[Text] Geneva, 26 May (AFP)--Foreign Minister S. Rajaratnam of Singapore had harsh words here today for Vietnam, saying he regretted, but was not surprised, at Hanoi's absence from the conference here on humanitarian aid to Cambodia. Referring to Vietnam and its allies, Mr Rajaratnam said: "Their objective in Cambodia today is winning a war, not saving Kampuchean lives. If that was the objective, they would not have started a war."

Those who claim authority over the Cambodian people, he alleged, "cannot provide them with the most elementary of human rights--the right to eat. That is why the Vietnamese are not here." Evoking the best "debt of honor we all owe to Thailand," Mr Rajaratnam urged that the international community not "leave the Thais holding the baby".

"Maybe, for a change, we should band together on the side of the Kampuchean people and the Thais, who at our instigation, did not close their doors to people who need help," he said. Singapore, he said, fully supports the Thai proposal for safe encampments along the Thai-Cambodian border. He called for a realistic approach to the problem of relief, saying that Cambodians "are not going to go to Hanoi or Phnom Penh for food. They are going to go to the Thai border."

In Mr Rajaratnam's view, Vietnam was boycotting the conference "because it has not been politicized" and because it had been unable to obtain recognition of the Heng Samrin regime as a pre-condition. "Even discussing the humanitarian aspects can be awkward for the Vietnamese," he said, for Hanoi would be forced to admit that, "after 18 months of liberation, the people are still fleeing, and hunger is still growing."

OECD NATIONS EXPECTED TO COOPERATE ON ANTIPROTECTIONISM

OW030233 Tokyo KYODO in English 0227 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Text] Paris June 2 KYODO--Western industrial nations, including Japan, are expected to agree at this week's ministerial meeting here to set up their first cooperative effort to counter trade protectionism.

The foreign and economic ministers from the 24 member nations of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) will wind up the two-day meeting Wednesday with a communique giving the formal go-ahead for an economic policy monitoring system, conference sources said.

Under the system, designed to add teeth to what OECD countries have thus far pledged only in general terms, the ministerial council will hear periodic reviews of member countries' trade policy.

Key subjects for discussion at the meeting include inflation resulting from higher crude oil prices and economic problems facing leading industrial nations.

The ministers will consider ways to ride out the anticipated economic downturn.

An agreement is also expected to be reached to give more weight to fight against inflation.

[Summary] At the invitation of Austrian Nationalrat Chairman Anton Benya, GDR People's Chamber Chairman Horst Sindermann, member of the SED Central Committee Politburo, is making a trip through several Austrian provinces designed to foster contacts with the GDR's most important partner firms in Austria. On Friday [30 May] he and his delegation visited the Chemie Linz Corporation. This visit not only reflected the good cooperation that has existed for many years between the company and its GDR partners, but it also served to exchange information and to sound out possibilities for cooperation projects. Earlier, on Thursday, Sindermann had visited the Vienna City Hall where he was received by Hubert Pfoch, chairman of the Vienna Landtag. Afterwards, the delegation visited the "Austrian freedom struggle" exhibition.

Talks With KPOe

AU021131 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 31 May 80 p 1

[Text] Vienna--Accompanied by GDR Ambassador to Austria Comrade Gerhard Schramm, Comrade Horst Sindermann, SED Central Committee Politburo member and chairman of the GDR People's Chamber, who is currently in Austria as head of a People's Chamber delegation, paid a visit to the Austrian Communist Party [KPOe] Central Committee on Thursday [26 May]. The guests were received by Comrade Erwin Scharf, KPOe Central Committee secretary, and by Comrade Hans Steiner, head of the Central Committee's foreign relations department. A friendly talk resulted in full agreement in assessing world political events. The sides were equally unanimous in their positive assessment of the development of Austrian-GDR relations. The meeting was marked by a spirit of fraternal and cordial affinity.

BULGARIAN TRADE OFFICIAL STRESSES INTEREST IN JOINT VENTURES

[Unattributed report: "Bulgaria Seeking Cooperation"]

[Summary] "Bulgaria is strongly interested in all kinds of cooperation projects with Austria and sees better chances for such projects as a result of a new law." This emerges from statements made by Bulgarian First Deputy Foreign Trade Minister Ginev at a press conference held in Vienna [no date given] on the occasion of a symposium on economic relations with Bulgaria, sponsored by the Erste Oesterreichische Spar-Casse Savings Bank. According to Ginev, the new law passed at the end of March--in addition to industrial cooperation projects that were already permitted--authorizes joint ventures [English term used] with Western partners, who may even acquire more than a 50 percent share, and provides for a guaranteed profit transfer after taxes. Such joint enterprises are intended to produce exclusively for export. Should any of their products be used in Bulgaria they would nevertheless be treated as export goods; in other words, they would be paid for in hard currency. The duration of joint venture contracts with Western partners is to be at least 15 years, and chairmen of the joint company leading bodies must be Bulgarian citizens. In the past, no such joint venture enterprises existed in Bulgaria--there were only a few joint companies abroad that had nothing to do with production but confined their activities to the marketing of Bulgarian export products.

Under the formerly valid cooperation regulations, no Austrian firm participated in any joint venture project with Bulgaria, but it is hoped that the new regulations will now lead to increased interest in such projects on the part of Austrian businessmen. Negotiations on joint ventures under the provisions of the new law are already under way with business representatives from several countries, notably Japan. In principle, such joint ventures are possible in a wide range of branches, but Bulgaria is particularly interested in developing the machine building and metallurgy sectors through cooperation with Western partners.

CREDIT AGREEMENTS SIGNED WITH MEXICO

PA300222 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2022 GMT 28 May 80

[By Julian Martinez]

[Text] Toronto, Canada, 28 May (EFE)--Canada and Mexico signed financial agreements today for a total of $1 billion, in the presence of Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo, who concluded his 2-week tour of France, the FRG, Sweden and Canada.

Lopez Portillo spent this morning in Toronto, capital of Ontario Province in Canada, where he inaugurated a Mayan art exposition and attended the signing of six Canadian credits to Mexico for $1 billion. He also lunched with 1,000 Canadian businessmen in a gathering organized by the Canadian Club and the Canadian Association for Latin America and the Caribbean. At 1400 the presidential aircraft "Couezalcoatl-1" took off from the Toronto International Airport and flew to Mexico.

The Mexican president's visit to Canada was made basically for economic reasons. This was evident by his visit to Toronto, the country's economic and financial center.

The agreement for $1 billion signed by the two countries today includes $500 million granted by the Canadian Export Corporation to the Mexican Development Bank. Two other sums of $100 million and $50 million were granted to the same Mexican bank at the Nova Scotia and Toronto Dominion Bank. A $100 million operation was granted by the Montreal Bank to the Mexican Foreign Trade National Bank and finally the same Canadian bank granted a $250 million Eurodollar loan to the Mexican state.

"The signing of these agreements with the Canadian banks reveals the reciprocal interest between the two countries in expanding their trade relations which have a great future," Hector Hernandez, deputy secretary of Mexican commerce said during the signing of the agreements.

Hernandez said that the amount of Canadian credits to Mexico have quadrupled in recent years and that today they amount to 8 percent of the total Mexican foreign national debt.

Other important economic agreements signed during the Mexican president's visit deal with tourism and Canadian investments to build 3,500 hotel rooms in regions like Cozumel, Acapulco, Puerto Vallarta and Cancun. Last year 300,000 Canadians visited Mexico, and Mexico is very interested in increasing this tourist flow from Canada since it has a huge potential.

Yesterday afternoon, shortly after the sale of Mexican petroleum to Canada had been announced at the Canadian Parliament, a violent dispute occurred in which the Conservative opposition to Pierre Trudeau's Liberal government was harshly criticized for having merely obtained an agreement for 50,000 barrels of petroleum a day.

The opposition accused Trudeau of incompetence because he failed to make a broader contract with Mexico. The Canadian prime minister replied to the opposition's criticism by saying that the Conservatives are responsible for not having obtained more of Mexico's petroleum.

In the meantime the Mexican Government decided to reduce the volume of petroleum by one-half.

The Canadian Parliament incident over Mexican petroleum occured while President Lopez Portillo was still in the country. This was a political indiscretion, but it also reflects the growing Canadian interest in Mexico's rich energy potential.

BONN: EC INITIATIVE NOT AIMED AT CHANGING RESOLUTION 242

[Text] Bonn--The Middle East initiative planned by the nine EC countries is not aimed at changing UN Resolution No. 242 of November 1967. The governments of the European Community simply want to lend support and not to introduce new Middle East resolutions in the United Nations. This was how competent Bonn sources reacted today to the statement by U.S. President Jimmy Carter to the effect that the United States will veto any UN resolution launched by the EC in favor of self-determination for the Palestinians. Carter stressed in an interview on Sunday that the Israeli-Egyptian peace process ushered in at Camp David must not be disturbed. The U.S. President said he was confident that Israel and Egypt will shortly resume their interrupted negotiations and agree on an autonomy solution for the occupied West [Bank of] Jordan and the Gaza Strip.

Competent Bonn sources stressed that it is not the intention of the EC governments to disturb this peace process or to present an alternative to Camp David. By their Middle East declaration to be adopted at the EC summit on 11-12 June in Venice, the Community's heads of state and government want to express their desire for making progress in order to guarantee peace.

According to these sources the text of the Middle East declaration is still being formulated.

According to Bonn sources the Middle East declaration might contain three important elements, among others:

An avowal of Israel's right to exist and of the right of the Palestinians to self-determination; a statement on the settlement policy of Menahem Begin's government which has provoked criticism on several occasions in Bonn also; and a reference to the importance of solving the Jerusalem question.

Several Arab governments and the PLO have in the past indicated that an initiative by the EC countries would in their eyes only have meaning if it was linked to an alteration of UN Resolution No. 242. Although this resolution recognizes the right of every state in this region to exist, it refers to the Palestinian population only insofar as it demands "a just settlement of the refugee problem."

The latest statement by U.S. President Carter, threatening a veto, came immediately after talks between French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet and his U.S. counterpart, Edmund Muskie, in Washington. Francois-Poncet, when asked about the content of the EC initiative, stated that the security of Israel and the legitimate rights of the Palestinians are two factors of equal importance. When asked whether this refers to the creation of a Palestinian state, Francois-Poncet said that France does not rule out this possibility, but there are other solutions too.

PRESS REACTS TO CARTER WARNING ON NEW MIDEAST INITIATIVES

'Warning' Aimed at U.S. Jewish Voters

DW021225 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 2 Jun 80 p 10

[Commentary signed K.A.O.: "Carter's Veto"]

[Text] About a year ago Carter was thinking out loud about better relations between America and the Palestinians. This shocked American Jews, and they traditionally vote Democratic. [paragraph continues]

The loss of votes which is now threatening Carter would be catastrophic due to his deteriorating popularity. The President has learned, the closer the elections come, the less he takes the risk of urging Begin to compromise with As-Sadat. As long as Begin need not make further foreign policy sacrifices, such as returning the Sinai Peninsula, he spares his rickety coalition of burdens. Negotiations with the Egyptians on autonomy for the Arabs in the occupied areas, therefore, are rotting away. For the West Europeans, whose zones of industrial concentration are just a few hours flying time from Palestine, this contains the lasting danger of spreading unrest. A settlement of the Israel-Arab conflict is of vital interest for Europe. Without the right of self-determination for the Arabs in the West Jordan area, no solution can be a lasting one. The hint that the Europeans could make their own suggestions evoked Carter's threat that he could exercise a veto in the Security Council. This instrument is usually served for bridling the Soviets. The fact that Carter brandishes it now is probably meant less to impress the Europeans than the Jewish voters in America.

DIE WELT: 'Heed Warning'

DW021221 Bonn DIE WELT in German 2 Jun 80 p 6

[Commentary signed Kem.: "Washington's Warning"]

[Text] Th re is reason indeed to sit up, listen and think if Europe in these weeks speaks with one voice despite, or also because of the fact that the Community can show little in the way of economic and political accord. But offering themselves as an alternative to the peace program of Camp David in the Middle East conflict, of all fields, would be choosing a totally unsuitable object for relaxation exercises after all the cramps of the most recent past. The smallest common denominator of the initiative--oil--may yet be big enough. But a Middle East statement or even efforts toward a renewal of UN Resolution No 242 clearly would be bound to be against the partners of Camp David. In the meantime, the United States, Egypt and Israel have strictly warned against European intervention at this time; protectively, the United States has announced its veto in the Security Council. This would be grist on the mill of the PLO and the radical Arab frontline. The political conflict with the United States, however, would be inevitable and would make the bucket of Atlantic quarrels spill over; this is what has to be deduced from Washington's warning.

SPORTS OFFICIAL SAYS OLYMPIC BOYCOTT STANDS FIRM

DW021210 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0905 GMT 1 Jun 80

[Excerpt] [Question] Since 15 May it has been a fact that no Federal German Olympic team will go to the 22d summer Olympic games in Moscow. The full assembly of the National Olympic Committee in Duesseldorf decided with 59 votes to 40 against Moscow. Mr Weyer, it has been said lately--and National Olympic Committee President Willi Daume made a similar statement--that there are still certain hopes and that the door has not been fully closed. What is the situation like at present?

[Answer] Unchanged with regard to 15 May. No change has taken place with regard to the prerequisites for that decision. The justification for calling the members together was that the Russians have marched into Afghanistan, they have stationed troops there; it is impossible for peaceful games to take place in a country waging war against a small nation.

In a majority decision the American Olympic Committee decided not to go to Moscow--a recommendation supported by the American President, the House of Representatives and the Senate. The reason is that the Americans are Germany's most important allies--it is a political argumentation.

We are in a very special situation because of Berlin and the border with the GDR--the border with the socialist camp. Nothing has changed with regard to these prerequisites either.

Daume should be understood as saying that a change in the international situation could take place; this would create new prerequisites. It would pertain not only to Germany and sports coming under the National Olympic Committee; it would also pertain to the Americans. In other words, if the Russians withdrew from Afghanistan, a new situation would come about. In such a case I would say what Willi Daume has said, namely, that we could then send a team.

[Question] There was speculation and maybe hope that the Duesseldorf decision would serve as a signal with regard to other European countries. But the FRG is now the only country of the European Community that will not go to Moscow. The much-avoided solidarity among the states of the NATO alliance has not taken place. [sentence as heard] Are we not sitting in an isolated situation, so to speak? Some have said that German sports has been left out in the cold.

[Answer] I agree with you that this is more than a precarious situation for us German sportsmen. We believed that the statements we heard from the political sphere would come about. Prominent representatives of German politics, also from the government camp, created hopes which later turned out to be unrealistic. So we are alone together with Norway.

But our decision is an autonomous decision. In my justification I pointed out the special situation of the FRG, independent of the decisions of the British and the French, independent of the decisions of Italy, Luxembourg, Belgium and Holland.

[Question] Your clear statement, Mr Weyer--that nothing has changed in the meantime and that matters are still as they were after 15 May--is somewhat of a surprise when one hears that individual presidents of special sports associations have uttered their disappointment. It has been learned, among other things, that the president of the judo association and the president of the basketball association, who voted in Duesseldorf against appearing in Moscow, have said in the meantime that if there were another vote today they might possibly decide differently. Do you rule out another meeting of the National Olympic Committee at present and that the vote would then differ from the 59 to 40 vote on 15 May in Duesseldorf?

[Answer] The president of the German judo association told me in Frankfurt that this statement which he had read in the paper was absolutely wrong. Nothing has changed with regard to his standpoint. I do not know whether the basketball association voted for or against Moscow. The voting was secret. President Kartak has not indicated to me whether he voted for participation or against it. I doubt that he voted against participation.

Third, prerequisites do not exist for convoking a new meeting of the members. And if I may interpret the Daume quotation again--interpret it as an expert--they do not exist because they have not been created. The prerequisite is still the withdrawal of the Red Army from Afghanistan. As long as this prerequisite is unchanged, the decision will remain as is; there will be no change in the result of the vote. It would be foolish to say that on 15 May the international situation in Afghanistan was different from what it is today.

GOVERNMENT LIKELY TO APPROVE EC BUDGET COMPROMISE

LD021544 Hamburg DPA in German 1410 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Summary] Bonn--Although the Federal Government has still not made a pronouncement on the Brussels compromise on Britain's EC budget contribution, there are indications that the Bonn Cabinet will give its assent on Wednesday. Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling said on Monday, with reference to the differences of opinion which had become apparent between the Bonn coalition partners concerning the question of British contributions: "A favorable and positive consensus has emerged today."

Schmidt Indicates Assent

LD030952 Hamburg DPA in German 0859 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--At a meeting of the SPD Presidium in Bonn on Monday evening, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said that the EC compromise on the British contribution to the EC is causing "grave problems" for the federal budget. Schmidt indicated to the SPD Presidium, however, that the Federal Cabinet will agree to the EC decision on Wednesday. He said that the Cabinet's deliberations will be determined by the recognition and affirmation of the Federal Republic's joint responsibility in European and world policy.

With regard to the Cabinet's deliberations, Schmidt supported the demand by Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer for clarification of how the considerable additional expenditure resulting from the Brussels decision will be covered. Schmidt also announced that the chairmen and financial experts of the two coalition parties will be present at the Cabinet meeting.

PAPERS NOTE INTERNAL STRIFE UNDERLYING EC BUDGET CONFLICT

DW021052 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Press review]

[Text] SUEDKURIER of Konstanz writes: What Genscher obviously and very hastily considered a success for Europe could turn out to be a rather rotten egg in the nest of the European Community: namely, the compromise on the repayment of British contributions for which Bonn is supposed to pay DM2.6 billion over 2 years. Wehner's announcement that one does not want to be milked like a cow certainly corresponds to the feelings of many citizens in this country. But this reflects just one side of the coin. Nervousness and lack of coordination in the Federal Government can again be observed. How can the vice chancellor and foreign minister, fatigued after a very hard struggle with his European Community colleagues, agree to a formula which will be thrown back at him a few hours later by the strong man and moving force of the chancellor's party?

The daily DIE WELT states: In fact, Matthoefer made a much less dramatic statement than was indicated by Wehner. He wants to see suggestions as to how to cover the expenditures. That is his right and his duty, and he will get them. Wehner's remark was surprising because the experts have not yet examined what financial burdens Bonn would finally have to cope with. In this situation statements do not count, figures do. The tough way in which a position was arrived at in Europe has actually resulted in the washing of a lot of dirty linen. There is no need for premature statements creating the suspicion that foreign and finance policies are running along two different tracks.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU notes: Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FDP chairman and foreign minister, was the first to correctly set the standards by showing solidarity with regard to the financial decisions made by the cashier of the Cabinet, who took a beating from his fellow Liberal Party members.

This gives the weekend tempest in Bonn meaning. But it also digs up roots of uneasiness within the coalition which lie deeper. The SPD obviously does not agree with the role the FDP wants it to play, namely, to be permanently told to make corrections for the sake of liberal commonsense. Naturally Matthoefer also knows that the European idea cannot be compensated for with money, and that its advantages would be worth any price for the German economy. But he also knows what he owes to his personal reputation as the highest cashier of the nation.

Essen's WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG writes: The federal finance minister is in a dilemma several times over. Apart from the opposition, naturally the federal bank, the council of experts and research institutes, on the one hand, bluntly charge him with having tackled the consolidation of finances too late and having been too timid. On the other hand, he is fighting for a package which will entail a considerable loss in revenue without any coverage for this loss in sight. Additional burdens now loom ahead for the Federal Government which come from Brussels in an amount not anticipated. Small wonder that Matthoefer is taking stock.

The Kassel HESSISCH-NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE makes the following comment: The fact that coffers were empty was known even before the Bonn negotiating delegation went to Brussels. When the delegation finally conceded the sacrifice of the DM2.6 billion, at first nobody in Bonn officially had any objection to the whole world being pleased to see this compromise sacrifice for the salvation of the European Community. Once more it was left to Herbert Wehner to set off the bomb. The wounds thereby inflicted on the smaller partner, the Free Democrats, will probably not heal so soon. Meanwhile, the projection of Bonn's discord onto Europe may be of greater significance, a Europe which in times of worldwide crises threatens to drift apart rather than remember its strength.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE states: What remains is the impression that, in the background, more motives contributed to this surprise than just the honorable fiscal strictness which a finance minister cannot but exercise. We should not forget that a day earlier Genscher was abused by the JUSO [Young Socialists] chief for vassal loyalty to the Americans. Any observer of the epoch is aware that what comes from the mouth of the young people is often what has long been spreading in the minds of the older generation. The present policy of the chancellor, just as the initiation of Ostpolitik earlier, is only possible in a state of balance which in turn is possible for us as a result of the return support we gain from our vassal loyalty toward Washington. But unless the chancellor can make it clear to the smart alecks in his ranks that such a balancing act must not be mistaken for a seesaw policy, greater trouble will soon be forthcoming. The Soviets will only appear to honor mistakes we make, and the Americans by now are so sensitive that they already react to mistakes which we have not even made yet, FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE writes.

GENSCHER ON PURPOSE, EXPECTATIONS OF MOSCOW TALKS

DW021136 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 0930 GMT 1 Jun 80

[Correspondents Kemper and Maddeldorf interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Bonn; date not given--apparently recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] Quite often, Mr Genscher, the public sees different emphases appearing in the assessment of foreign policy.

To put it briefly and bluntly, they are as follows: Genscher places more emphasis on security and the alliance with the United States while Helmut Schmidt emphasizes detente and continued cooperation with the Soviet Union. What really is the true picture?

[Answer] Everything you can imagine is wrong with this picture because the basic elements of German foreign policy are formulated jointly and they are based on common convictions. Therefore, nobody can derive anything from this to suit himself, nor can he add anything or insert anything.

[Question] You and the chancellor will also go to Moscow together. A test of the Soviet Union's dialogue with the West has been conducted. French President Giscard d'Estaing saw Brezhnev in Warsaw, and this remained a dialogue for the sake of dialogue. Will your trip to Moscow have to be assessed in a similar way, or will you be going to the Soviet capital with concrete concepts in mind?

[Answer] We are responding to an invitation made long ago which was recently renewed. We have a regular exchange of visitors between the Soviet Union and our country, and it would be a political mistake to interrupt this traffic in difficult times. On the contrary, it is especially necessary at this time to expound our own positions which, as far as we are concerned, are always positions of the European Community and the Alliance, and to do our share toward overcoming tension in the world. We consider European policy and the mission of European policy as meaning that Europe, from which formerly so many wars emanated and where so many wars took place, today contributes its share toward safeguarding peace, not only in Europe itself but also beyond its bounds. If we make the positions we share with our allies and partners quite clear and visible in such a dialogue, then this is an aspect of predictability, not only of German foreign policy but of Western foreign policy as a whole and is a contribution toward East-West dialogue.

I think this is a necessity which nobody should deny, and I must state quite frankly that to me it is regrettable that, in assessing this trip, the opposition--the CDU/CSU--cannot reach a uniform stance but is not even capable of defining its position on such a trip. Rather it vacillates between approval and assertion that it would be a black day if such a trip took place. This goes to show how difficult it is for them to form an opinion about such an issue.

[Question] At the week's end CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl said that this Moscow trip is burdened with misunderstandings since it might be interpreted as a unilateral action by the Germans. Do you see this danger as well and, if so, how do you propose to avoid it?

[Answer] I do not see this danger, nor would I have seen it if Mr Strauss had been able to go through with his plan to travel to Moscow because I always proceed from the assumption that German politicians seek to make an attitude prevail which is advocated jointly by the Alliance and the European Community. I have consulted with my colleagues in the European Community about this trip and again, separately, with the French and British foreign ministers and the U.S. secretary of state. We will have an opportunity to discuss the trip at the meeting of the European Council in Venice, at the world economic summit in Venice and at the meeting of the NATO foreign ministers. So, aside from some people in the FRG, I do not think anybody will get the idea that we might advocate positions there which differ from those we have jointly mapped out, on which we have exerted essential influence and which we deem appropriate and necessary for the security of our country and of our partners.

[Question] Mr Foreign Minister, you will stay in Moscow for only 2 days, including arrival and departure. Will the time be sufficient to discuss what needs to be discussed?

[Answer] We assume that both sides--we and the Soviet side--will make the best possible use of this time for talks. What I mean is that there will be no nebulous discussions, but rather objective, thorough, well-prepared talks. A broad exchange of opinions is necessary, and if we make use of the available time, then this envisaged time is not only justifiable but also properly chosen.

[Question] Does this mean, Mr Genscher, that basically it is adequate just to go to Moscow and make one's own position clear to the other side, or will you have to return with concrete promises and agreements in order to call your trip a success?

[Answer] You must not burden talks with expectations of success. This curtails your own options and prevents a dialogue. I think that governments ought not to deal with each other via the media, but should utilize the option of dialogue. Seen from this angle this dialogue is part of the continuity of the foreign ministers talks in Vienna between Messrs Muskie and Gromyko, my talks with Mr Gromyko and other East European foreign ministers and the meeting of the French with the Soviet leadership. This constitutes a development of talks which, in the sense of clarifying positions, can only be useful as a prerequisite for political solutions as well.

DER SPIEGEL: SOVIETS APPARENTLY RECEPTIVE TO MISSILE TALKS

DW021242 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 2 Jun 80 pp 19-22

[Unattributed article: "Changed Climate"]

[Text] Just prior to the Schmidt visit to Moscow the circumstantial evidence in Bonn is increasing what the Soviets would like to get away from their rigid attitude in the Afghanistan conflict.

When Guenther van Well, state secretary in the Foreign Ministry, goes to the Soviet capital for consultations next week he will advance a modest request: that the final statement on the Moscow trip by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in late June should not have the excessive length customary in the East bloc--many words, little content. The West German head of government would rather prefer a brief communique--little content, few words.

Not even Afghanistan needs to be mentioned expressly. If the Soviet leadership will not have it any other way, the problem could also be hidden in a generally phrased formulation, for instance: The international hotbeds of crisis also played a role during the top-level talks.

Such a conciliatory attitude, however, is not intended to come free of charge. In return, Bonn plans to obtain the assent from the Soviets that the results of the talks between Schmidt and Leonid Brezhnev that the Kremlin prefers not to have listed in the communique will be fixed publicly and bindingly in writing. Just as at the time of conclusion of the treaties with the East, the German side would like to deliver unilateral statements on the communique text which will have been cleared beforehand with Moscow down to the last detail. The interpretations are to be given special weight by the fact that the Soviet Union will not contest them.

In such unilateral commentaries Schmidt could, after his visit, show prospects as to the circumstances and period of time in which the Soviet troops will withdraw from Afghanistan and how East-West negotiations on the mitigation of nuclear medium-range weapons could be achieved.

The chancellor hopes that this tactful diplomatic procedure will make it easier for his hosts to get away from their inflexible positions on the Afghanistan conflict and on the issue of the medium-range weapons without losing face.

In the meantime Bonn believes it has received some hints showing that the Russians want to move. All skepticism notwithstanding, the optimism is growing in the chancellor's office that the Schmidt-Brezhnev meeting could produce more than the Warsaw meeting between French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and the Soviet head of party and state.

The chancellor gave a cautiously optimistic word concerning the East-West situation in the Cabinet the week before last: "The critical aggravation continues, but it is slowly being brought under control by the development of negotiations."

Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher agreed that there is a "triad": First the meeting of Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko with his U.S. counterpart Edmund Muskie in Vienna, then the meeting of Giscard d'Estaing with Brezhnev and finally the Moscow trip by the Bonn government chief and his foreign minister.

Schmidt and Genscher hope that, unlike the meeting of the Frenchman with the Soviet Communist Party boss, something even binding might come out of their strange encounter of the third kind.

The two West Germans plan to try to commit the Soviets in an otherwise meager communique to at least two political principles: that Moscow will also adhere to the Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin in times of tension between East and West and that the Kremlin continues to be interested in improving intra-German relations.

Unlike Giscard d'Estaing, Schmidt and Genscher feel compelled to talk with Brezhnev about medium-range weapons as well. France's president, who does not share in last December's double NATO decision on closing the arms gap and simultaneous disarmament negotiations anyway, for the time being rejects talks on the medium-range weapons of the French nuclear force. Still, upon his return from Warsaw Giscard d'Estaing passed the word to the Bonn people that "the climate has changed for the better" in Moscow concerning the medium-range systems.

There are other encouraging signals. At the fourth conference of the Interparliamentary Union on security and cooperation in Europe in Brussels in mid-May the Soviet delegation had intended to approve an appeal to the states and parliaments concerned "to ensure the adoption of measures suited for the immediate opening of negotiations on nuclear medium-range weapons systems without trying to attain military superiority before the beginning, or in the course, of these negotiations."

The adoption of this resolution would have meant that the Soviet Union for the first time would have publicly refrained from the demand that NATO's arms decision be rescinded or postponed prior to the opening of negotiations on nuclear medium-range missiles and bombers. The declaration failed because of the French veto.

Soviet diplomats sold optimism in Bonn even more plainly last week during the visit of Nikolay Tikhonov, Soviet deputy premier, to the federal capital: It may well turn out during the chancellor's Moscow visit that the Soviet Union is seriously prepared to open East-West negotiations on the mitigation of medium-range weapons without any preconditions in the fall, after the elections in the Federal Republic and in the United States. The Soviet Union would want to conclude these negotiations successfully by 1983--before the expiration of the 3-year period in which Pershing-2 and cruise missiles are to be delivered to U.S. units stationed in Western Europe.

"In the ideal case," Schmidt announced publicly some months ago to the irritation of some NATO military men, NATO could fully renounce the deploymentof the new arms if the Soviets, on their part, stopped the continuing stepped-up production of medium-range missiles and if they reduced the existing potential: not to zero, but to a degree within the framework of a global balance that would still have to be negotiated. However, the chancellor could be hit by a ricocheting bullet from his own ranks prior to his Moscow visit if the Essen SPD election congress early next week were to dissociate itself from NATO's decision to close the arms gap. Then new doubts would be nourished in Washington with regard to Bonn's loyalty to the Alliance, and in Moscow the illusion could be strengthened that NATO was actually not so serious about closing the arms gap.

The chancellor's spokesman, Klaus Boelling, appealed last week to the comrades' reason: "The people will know that one cannot strip [ausziehen] the chancellor prior to his visit to Moscow."

The Essen meeting was planned to acclaim the SPD election program--long before the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan. At their Berlin party congress last December the SPD strategists started out from the assumption that half a year later they would be able to celebrate in Essen the wisdom of the Berlin decision to accept closing the arms gap, as demanded by NATO, but to lay the main emphasis on disarmament negotiations.

Willy Brandt in Berlin said: "We expect that in these 6 months...SALT II will be ratified in the United States and that in these 6 months the prerequisites for negotiations will be created...The party will observe these developments, observe them vigilantly."

The party has followed precisely the appeal of its chairman--to the irritation of the chancellor and his government team. SPD Federal Manager Egon Bahr said: "We have had such a thing before, an election party congress with real factual problems--and with all the dangers." SPD President Hans Koschnick said: "In matters of foreign and security policies we will have a new discussion of closing the arms gap. Helmut Schmidt can iron it out because he will be going to Moscow."

The party congress strategists carefully put the chancellor at the top of the list of spokesmen. Schmidt wants to solemnly announce the date of his Moscow visit, simultaneously with its official announcement in the Soviet Union, in order to then swear the comrades to his course: Only with strict adherence to the NATO decision with regard to missile armament can the Soviets be forced to the negotiating table.

The Bonn government chief will nevertheless have to deal with a lot of applications which could offer pretexts for the opposition to say that the Schmidt party was steering toward a neutralist policy between the blocs in the field of sympathizers for Moscow.

The South Suavian party organization [unterbezirk] demands that the party congress pass a resolution--in contrast to the chancellor's approach that "NATO's decisions to close the arms gap are not so much suited to safeguarding peace but rather to increasing the danger of further arms races." The Southern Suavians demand simultaneously "that the arms control decision of the Berlin party congress be turned into a serious offer to the East."

In two applications from the Ulm local organization and the Munich party organization, Schmidt's confusing Hamburg offer to the East is taken up, an offer that was corrected [zurechtgerueckt] under pressure from the Free Democratic coalition partner, "to renounce for a certain number of years the deployment of new or additional medium-range arms and to use this time for negotiations."

The Osterholz-Scharmbeck local party organization does not want "to admit any kind of stationing of newly developed combat arms (among other things also the neutron weapon) on the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany." The comrades from the north of Bonn even demand that the Berlin party congress decision to changed so as to "renounce" the stationing of nuclear medium-range missiles."

The application commission under the thumb of faction chief Herbert Wehner tried to remove the toughest obstacles out of Schmidt's way, recommending that the delegates reject all radical applications. But the new issue of the Berlin discussion at any rate will offer an opportunity again to the opposition to warm up its campaign against the "Moscow faction" in the SPD, and cast doubts on the forthcoming Kremlin visit of the chancellor.

The chancellor secretly hopes that the criticism of his visit to Brezhnev could backfire completely on the opposition--at the least if the Moscow visit should make an inroad with regard to the Afghanistan conflict. Then, said Boelling, the visit would experience its "last impressive justification."

Schmidt's slight optimism is based on Brezhnev's words at a banquet last week: "a political settlement is possible." The Federal Government believes that this is not empty propaganda, but that the Soviet leader means it seriously.

A high-ranking Soviet diplomat in Bonn said last week auspiciously to DER SPIEGEL: "If the West will play ball, our troops will be withdrawn from Afghanistan before an agreement is achieved on medium-range missiles, that is, prior to 1983".

SECOND NUCLEAR POWERPLANT TO BE BUILT IN ARGENTINA

ID021320 Hamburg DPA in German 1206 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--The Federal Republic's controversial nuclear deal with Argentina is settled. It became known today in Bonn during the visit by Argentinian Minister of Economy Martinez de Hoz that an export license for the supply of a heavy water reactor for the Atucha II nuclear powerplant by the German Kraftwerk Union Inc (KWU) will be granted in the next few days.

According to Bonn sources the Argentinian Government has meanwhile approved an extensive control system to guarantee the plant's peaceful use. Argentina has not as yet signed the 1979 nuclear nonproliferation treaty.

The powerplant, with a capacity of about 700 megawatts, is to be built 100 kilometers north of Buenos Aires and will be commissioned in the middle of 1987. The KWU, which has already supplied the Atucha I natural uranium reactor to Argentina, will also be involved in the construction of other Argentinian nuclear power stations.

The visit by the Argentinian minister, who will meet Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Federal President Karl Carstens on Tuesday, was accompanied by protests from several organizations including the human rights organization, Amnesty International.

Representatives of the Argentina Solidarity Committee dressed in prisoners' clothing distributed pamphlets to draw attention to the fate of political prisoners in Argentina. SPD Bundestag Deputy Klaus Thuesing, speaking to the press, accused the Argentinian military regime of systematic violations of human rights, murder and torture. Twenty-eight Germans or persons of German descent have been affected by the measures of the military dictatorship.

RESEARCH MINISTER COMMENTS ON RECENT GDR VISIT

ID301516 Hamburg DPA in German 1211 GMT 30 May 80

[Excerpt] Weimar--According to Federal Research Minister Volker Hauff, neither "blue-eyed innocence nor fear of contact" is appropriate in the relationship between the two German states. At a press conference today in Weimar at the close of his 4-day official visit to the GDR, Hauff said that the strains to which German-German relations can be subjected should not be exaggerated.

"It is very thin ice we are standing on here." It did not bear "our constantly trampling on it." There should be no blind faith in its firmness.

Referring to the atmosphere of his talks with GDR politicians, Hauff said that with regard to the climate in the mutual relationship it was now possible to speak of an extraordinarily good phase. He had no doubts that the GDR was interested in continuing the international dialogue in order to advance the policy of detente and to develop as far as possible the stage arrived at in relations between the two German states. He had no indications of possible reactions to the Federal Republic's boycott of the Olympic games. Hauff confirmed that he did not discuss humanitarian problems.

Hauff had talks in East Berlin with SED Politburo member Kurt Hager and Deputy Premiers Herbert Weiz and Wolfgang Rauchfuss. Weiz, who is also minister of science and technology, also came to Weimar on Friday for a farewell luncheon with Hauff and he will visit the Federal Republic at a time yet to be agreed upon. Hauff said that the atmosphere of his political talks was extraordinarily good, very openminded and marked by mutual respect. He underlined the realistic assessment of the scope for action of the two states, whose relations could not be viewed in isolation from the international situation.

With reference to the opportunities for cooperation between the Federal Republic and the GDR in science and technology, Hauff said that the two sides agreed that this was only possible on the basis of a formal agreement. He again pointed out that the talks being conducted since the end of 1973 on a scientific agreement are to be resumed after the summer break. In Hauff's opinion there are at least three particularly promising areas for cooperation. He named nonnuclear energy research, in particular in the technology of coal transformation; cancer research, in which GDR work on cancer diagnosis above all promised fruitful scientific cooperation; and the industrial sciences of noise prevention and industrial medicine.

PAPER QUESTIONS WISDOM OF SCHMIDT FOREIGN POLICY

DW291123 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 29 May 80 p 1

[Johann Georg Reissmueller editorial: "What Schmidt Ought Not To Abide By"]

[Text] In recent weeks Chancellor Schmidt paradoxically has been as sure of himself as he has been irritable where his foreign policy is involved. The irascibility is easily explained: Helmut Schmidt has a hard time dodging doubts about the correctness of some of his foreign policy moves.

For example, was it expedient to let the relationship with the U.S. President decay to a point where the poverty of content of the mutual manifestations of sympathy and confidence finally became obvious to everybody here and in the United States? Did it not contribute to the predominantly miserable attitude on the Olympics of the European sports world that the German federal chancellor peeled away the U.S. concept of sanctions against the Soviet Union because of Afghanistan as he would an onion, so that in the end nothing was left but the mere contribution to the Olympic boycott? Has the advice to Washington to talk with Moscow, advice which was advanced publicly and in a reprimanding tone, led to anything but displeasure in the United States? And has Schmidt's response to Moscow's offer to talk done any good? The result so far has only been that the French president beat the German chancellor to Brezhnev--with a show which improved the damaged reputation of the aggressor state Soviet Union a bit, but which did not produce anything for Afghanistan or for the Western position in the world crisis.

Schmidt will be allowed to behold Brezhnev too--with a very similar result. What of all this could be cause for satisfaction on the chancellor's part? He is a sober man. Or were the excessively loud protestations of German-French solidarity on the part of Bonn worthwhile when signals of European support for the United States would have been more urgent?

At least one or another of these questions would be bound to preoccupy the chancellor's mind--let us hope that this is so. Doubts in oneself, for which there is so much cause, cannot discredit the one harboring such doubts. But let us assume that Schmidt were free from any self-criticism, that he sees Western mistakes in the world crisis made only by others, above all by Carter. Schmidt is bound to be profoundly disturbed by the course of the Afghanistan crisis and the manner in which the West is tackling it. After all, displeasure about the consequences of mistakes made by others also frays one's nerves. This is the nervously irritable Schmidt which he has shown himself to be lately.

But at the same time there is, besides, a self-reliant, self-confident Schmidt--and his self-reliance and his self-confidence are attributable to obvious reasons. Does the Federal Republic, the chancellor tells himself and others, not behave best among all the allies of the United States in the world crisis? Is it not the only larger European state whose sports associations have decided to stay away from the Moscow games? Is there, except the Federal Republic, a country stating that it would fill the gaps created by a transfer of American armed forces to the Middle East which is threatened by the Soviet Union, and fill them as well as possible?

The chancellor can claim for himself one thing after another. None of this should be underrated. But does a comparison with the others--including those who long ago reduced their membership in the Atlantic Alliance to the role of being protected free of charge--produce a standard acceptable to us, to the West? Or does it not lead to a reduction of commitments to the Alliance?

Will Helmut Schmidt rely more on support from within than on comparisons with the outer world? He seems to take the result of recent landtag elections as a justification for his foreign policy. Indeed, would the chancellor's party have scored such a victory in North Rhine-Westphalia if the majority of the voters there had been discontent with Schmidt's Ostpolitik and his policy toward the West? Don't the signs of the October elections indicate a (Schmidt) victory?

Tempting and misleading arguments. Election results (not opinion poll figures) can legitimize a policy in the sense that the statesman conducting it, and the party supporting it in parliament, can feel in accord with the majority and derive confirmation from it. But only that which is correct in itself can be confirmed. An election success is not a guarantee of the correctness of a policy. The rules of democracy say that the majority has to decide; but it does not necessarily have to be right. The voters and the people can be terribly wrong. Were not the European nations on the eve of World War II almost possessed by the desire to yield, which eventually spoiled peace?

We are still far away from that. But our politicians, particularly the government and most of all the chancellor, must warn the people against a misguided, peace-endangering yearning for peace at any price. Pulling the people along with wrong arguments, with senseless slogans such as the one that we are "fed up" with keeping things secret or playing them down, pulling them toward a wrong path of peace and then claiming that the people have agreed with it--this will not be a legitimation for anybody.

POLITICAL DEBATE HEATS UP OVER DONAT-CATTIN, ELECTIONS

[Text] Rome, June 3 (ANSA)--Political debate in Italy was heating up less than a week away from regional and administrative elections up and down the peninsula on June 8.

The Donat-Cattin affair has only served to fuel mounting pelemic among the various political forces, particularly in the wake of Monday's announcement that the Communist Party (PCI) will promote a collection of signatures in Parliament to virtually ensure public debate on allegations that Premier Francesco Cossiga had aided and abetted the escape of a suspected terrorist. The crux of the allegations was that Cossiga somehow tipped off Carlo Donat-Cattin, deputy secretary of his own Christian Democrat Party, so that Donat-Cattin's 28-year-old son Marco could escape arrest. Marco Donat-Cattin is sought by the police as a member of the Front Line urban guerrilla organization, the second most powerful in Italy after the Red Brigades, and in connection with a number of political slayings as well.

On Saturday, a parliamentary commission shelved the case by a simple majority (eleven votes against nine) of its twenty members, asserting that the charges against the premier were "manifestly unfounded". The vote would have had to reach four-fifths of the commission members, sixteen out of twenty, for the allegations against Cossiga to have been definitively.

With the more restricted majority, the minority have the right to collect the signatures of at least one-third of the members of the two houses of Parliament to demand an investigation of the affair before a joint session of the lower house and the Senate. The total they must reach is 318. The Neofascists and the Radicals have already said they will sign the request. The Social Democrats, right of center Liberals, Leftwing Independents, and leftwingers sitting on the left of the PCI seem inclined in the same direction.

The total would be about half the deputies and senators, well over the third required by law. In the commission of enquiry, Social Democrat Alessandro Reggiani votes for shelving the charges, a position his party now seems likely to reserve.

Yesterday, during a meeting with Cossiga, the secretaries of the coalition parties (Christian Democrat Flaminio Piccoli, Socialist Bettino Craxi and Republican Giovanni Spadolini) all confirmed their full confidence and esteem for the premier. Later, Cossiga issued a statement saying that he would not resign as head of government.

To the election campaign, DC Secretary Flaminio Piccoli told a weekly that the PCI tended to turn the campaign into a frontal attack on the government and on the DC "to hide its (own) weakness". Piccoli also claimed that the fate of the present government did not hinge on these elections which are administrative.

PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer said that out of substantial gains for the party at the polls, out of the liquidation of the current tripartite government and out of a more vigorous cooperation and solidarity among the popular and democratic parties, a government might emerge which although not perhaps immediately including the Communists, would nevertheless be "less harmful" than the present one.

According to Socialist Deputy Secretary Claudio Signorile, the PSI must not be judged on the basis of the present government but on its overall behavior at a local level, with the unions in the battles for liberty.

Marco Pannella, speaking for the Radical Party, pushed for a deliberated abstention from the Sunday vote. Such abstention was wholely legitimate when programs and candidates did not reflect the voter, he said.

Speaking at Savona yesterday, Liberal Party Secretary Valerio Zanone said that this last week of the campaign was sweeping away the policy of ambiguity which was at the basis of the present government and the majority that supports it.

Cossiga Statement

LD022024 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1900 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Statement by Prime Minister Cossiga on the Donat-Cattin affair--read by announcer]

[Text] I have remained silent up to now out of due respect for the investigating commission. It is now my duty and political and personal right to speak out.

I firmly and confidently reject not only every accusation but also any doubt that I may have in some way violated accepted standards in order to suit whomever it may be, as the commission itself ascertained.

I believe that my government action, and the commitment of my entire political life to the defense of legality and democratic values, provide reliable testimony of the correctness of my behavior. I see with sorrow that this is not so for some. Nevertheless, this fails to deflect me from my position or from my convictions.

As I have always asserted, the struggle against terrorism demands great solidarity, and I see with profound regret that this solidarity is breaking up.

I shall continue, despite the bitterness of this affair to fulfill my task as a citizen and political figure because of the duty which we all have to the institutions and in particular to those who are engaged in the struggle against terrorism and violence.

Piccoli: 'Full Confidence' in Cossiga

AU030906 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Text] Rome, June 3, (ANSA)--The secretary of the Christian Democratic Party, Flaminio Piccoli, reconfirmed his full confidence in Premier Francesco Cossiga and in the forces upholding the present government in an interview appearing today in the Rome daily IL MESSAGGERO.

Last night Cossiga indicated that he will not bow to demands for his resignation in connection with allegations that he helped the urban guerrilla son of a Christian Democrat Party official to escape arrest. The premier firmly rejected the charges and said he would continue to carry out his duties as citizen and as a political figure.

In today's interview, Piccoli said that Cossiga enjoyed a prestige and respect that could not be even slightly tarnished "by the insinuations of a young terrorist". He was referring to Roberto Sandalo who belongs to the urban guerrilla "Front Line" movement and who told Turin judges and a parliamentary investigative commission that Cossiga warned DC Deputy-Secretary Carlo Donat-Cattin that his son Marco was about to be arrested on charges of terrorism.

Piccoli also denied that Sandalo was ever enrolled in the "GIP" (Political Commitment Group), an association close to the DC. In any case, Piccoli added, one can be enrolled in the "GIP" without being a member of the DC.

COLOMBO VIEWS ITALIAN-NATO RELATIONS, OTHER ISSUES

LD021311 Rome L'ESPRESSO in Italian 25 May 80 pp 33, 34, 257, 258

[Livio Zanotti undated interview with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo: "Summer Is Here But The War Is Still Cold"]

[Excerpt] Question: Very few Italians understood exactly what Prime Minister Cossiga meant when he said at the Christian Democratic foreign policy conference in Florence that "in the near future we will have to make complex decisions which might divide us." As foreign minister, could you explain to us the exact meaning of those remarks?

Answer: I believe that the prime minister's remarks on the international situation were intended to convey what every Italian believes and above all what those more directly informed believe, with their better acquaintance with the facts--namely deep concern and fear concerning the future of detente and peace. Never since the war have so many factors conspired to challenge peace and the continuity of our development: Afghanistan, Iran, the Middle East, the Horn of Africa, the threats to oil supplies, the pessimistic forecasts of developments in the world economy. Let nobody claim that all this does not directly affect Europe and Italy. Unless the tension diminished, the handling of such a situation could demand the shouldering of responsibilities on which, as Cossiga pointed out, there could be differing political stances. As Europeans, we have adopted a joint stance on sanctions against Iran. But we have differing opinions on competing in the Olympics. Also, we have been called on to shoulder responsibilities for strengthening and reinforcing the Atlantic Alliance and have done so bearing in mind the possible effects upon it of an exacerbation of the situation in neighboring areas. I believe that it was to this situation and to its resulting consequences that the prime minister intended to refer.

Question: The opposition parties have asked on what conditions and on the basis of what provisions the Americans have been granted their bases in Italy, which are partly NATO bases but partly also exclusively U.S. bases. Would you care to explain to us how things stand in fact?

Answer: There are no foreign bases in Italy--that is, areas allocated for exclusive use even by foreign powers linked to us by bonds of friendship and alliance, such as the United States.

On the other hand, there are the multilateral structures of the Atlantic Alliance, of which Italy is a full member having the responsibilities endorsed by a parliamentary decision. Article 3 of the treaty states that the contracting parties "will grant mutual assistance with the aim of increasing individual and collective capabilities within the context of the Alliance's boundaries." It is on this basis and within the context of the Alliance that the facilities and mutual assistance agreements have been reached with allied countries.

Question: Is it true that the agreements for granting exclusive U.S. bases--the La Maddalena submarine base, for instance--were ratified by the government without ever seeking Parliament's prior approval?

Answer: There are no "exclusive U.S. bases" in our country. The case of La Maddalena which you mention is different. Italy has authorized the stationing in La Maddalena harbor of a U.S. support ship to insure regular support for U.S. submarines assigned to Mediterranean surveillance. It is therefore cooperation within the NATO context designed to protect our country's security requirements and to guarantee the balance of forces, which remains an indispensable precondition for maintaining peace in the Mediterranean area.

As for the need for prior parliamentary approval for concluding such operational agreements which you mention, I must point out that such agreements do not constitute new bilateral agreements, but lie within the context of the defense solidarity envisaged in the Atlantic pact which Parliament did debate and approve.

Question: Do you not believe that given the nature of the international crisis in which we are living, it would be opportune to make the contents of these agreements, however routine, public?

Answer: I do not agree with you. In view of the specifically technical nature of the operational agreements concerning the Atlantic Alliance's defense structure. There are legitimate considerations of national security which stand in the way of divulging the contents of these agreements.

Question: Is it true that the United States has asked the Italian Government to grant new bases or to extend the operational duties of the existing ones?

Answer: No, the U.S. administration has not asked us to grant any further facilities or to extend existing ones. Of course there must be a rigorous commitment from all countries of the Alliance to reestablish the balance of forces on the European chessboard, thus maintaining NATO's defense capability at a satisfactory level. The pact has its own precise orbit, but also envisages consultations on events outside the Alliance's own area because of their possible repercussions, as clearly stated in the Ottawa declarations.

Question: Do you believe it would be opportune for there to be greater military cooperation among the European countries? If so, what form should it take?

Answer: Europe's security is guaranteed by the Atlantic Alliance, which is also the essential instrument for our own country's security. Within the context of the Alliance there are forms of cooperation of a European nature.

I believe you are referring to Europe's greater and more direct involvement in its own defense. This was the aim of the European Defense Community, which collapsed in summer 1954 as a result of France's failure to ratify it. The failure to achieve hitherto this objective has helped to render the desired "European identity" less definitive and its presence on the international scene less effective. If we were now able to do more for our own defense and if the EC operated also on the defense plane, our presence within the Atlantic Alliance would carry more weight and so would our political influence both inside and outside the Alliance.

Question: In your opinion, what is the underlying reason for the present detente crisis?

Answer: The cause lies primarily in the Soviet Union's differing concept of detente. We consider it global and indivisible, while for the Soviet Union it is selective, does not observe existing balances and implies interferences and resulting destabilizations.

The foreign minister of a friendly country said recently that according to the Soviet view, detente means that the USSR can advance and that we must retreat." [quotation marks as published] This being the case, we must still work to reopen East-West dialogue and reestablish the preconditions for the resumption of the detente process.

Question: What initiatives can Western Europe and Italy in particular take to surmount the present stalemate?

Answer: Western Europe can make a contribution to surmounting the present situation primarily by strengthening its cohesion, increasing its ability to decide jointly what stances to adopt and rigorously maintaining the bond of solidarity with all Western countries, especially the United States.

This must be the starting position for imparting a new thrust to the dialogue: The first opportunity for working effectively in this direction will be the coming CSCE conference in Madrid. At that forum specific initiatives can be adopted both in the field of economic cooperation and in the military security and humanitarian fields.

As Europeans, we must put forward proposals for starting to resolve the Afghan problem and must steadfastly maintain the stance on Iran which has hitherto made it possible to keep open the dialogue with a view to the hostages' release.

Question: Do you believe that the persistence of a serious hotbed of tension in the Middle East such as the Palestinian issue will help to aggravate the imbalances throughout that area of the world? And do you believe that the situation could be improved by means of an official acknowledgement of the Palestinians' right to self-determination of the West Bank and in Gaza? What is the Italian Government's position on this point?

Answer: The failure to resolve the Arab-Israeli conflict is still the most serious factor of uncertainty and destabilization in the Mediterranean and the Middle East. Both as Italians and as Europeans, we have considered the Camp David agreements an important contribution to resolving this crisis. We have always pointed out and still point out that peace in the area can only be achieved through a global solution comprising the solution of the Palestinian problem. Therefore, we accept self-determination as part of a process for a gradual solution to the Arab-Israeli crisis, as was confirmed during the recent parliamentary debate.

Question: President al-Qadhdhafi has demanded compensation from the Italian Government for the 1911-1943 occupation. What is the Italian Government's reply to this extraordinary demand?

Answer: The Libyan authorities have recently made only public statements on the complex issue to which you refer. I am therefore not in a position to express any official assessments.

PCI SENATORS SUBMIT FOREIGN POLICY QUESTIONS

LD301605 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 22 May 80 p 1

[Unattributed report: "International Decisions: PCI Demands a Reply From Cossiga"--quotation marks as published]

[Text] Rome--Communist Senators Perna, Bufalini, Fiori, Pieralli, Procacci, Calamandrei, Valori, Felicetti, Milani and Morandi have presented an interpellation to the prime minister and foreign and defense ministers "for information making possible an assessment both on the discussions held and decisions taken by the recent NATO and EEC ministers meeting and on recent meetings in various forums or officially announced as imminent between representatives of NATO and Warsaw Pact countries and also--and above all--on the government's stances and decisions in this context, particularly concerning:

1--Why the government has not yet confirmed--and whether it intends to confirm--the willingness which the prime minister expressed to the Senate, in answer to a question from a Christian Democratic senator, to establish contacts--on a bilateral basis and also on the basis of Italy's 6-month term of EEC chairmanship--with the Soviet Government to facilitate the resumption of the East-West dialogue and negotiations and to contribute to the quest for solutions to the serious problems, such as Euromissile rearmament, which interrupted them (bearing in mind the fact that other EEC governments, namely the French and FRG governments, have already taken, or are preparing to take, steps in this direction).

2--How, in authorizing the foreign minister to put forward at the Naples EEC ministers' meeting the proposed decision to proceed with implementing economic sanctions against Iran, the government could have ignored (apart from the primary need to avoid exacerbations damaging to the objective of securing the illegally held U.S. hostages' release) the fact that of all the EEC countries Italy is the one most vulnerable financially in Iran and that the volume of national interests in danger of being hit following such a decision (16,000 Italian workers in Iran at the start of the revolutionary process, a turnover of 6 trillion lire by both public and private enterprises--these latter are insured against risks by a state guarantee from the special section for export credit insurance--and credit totaling 2 trillion lire for work carried out by Industrial Reconstruction Institute companies in that country which could now become much more difficult to recover promptly), unlike other EEC governments, such as the Conservative British Government which immediately disassociated itself from the Naples decisions;

3--What forms of foreign political pressure dictated the otherwise inexplicable decision taken by the government that Italy should not take part in the Olympic games--a decision taken without the slightest accordance with national sporting opinion, as shown by the opposite decision taken autonomously by the Italian National Olympic Committee [CONI], and how the government plans to abide by CONI's decision by allowing Italian athletes to compete in the Olympics and abandoning the attempt to discriminate against athletes fulfilling their military service;

4--Whether, in confirming the Atlantic Alliance and NATO as political and military commitments for Italy, the government can assure the Senate that such commitments remain and will remain, in accordance with their institutional provisions, territorially limited (and defensive in purpose) with regard to both our own country's armed forces and the bases on our national territory and, furthermore, whether the government can indicate and justify, in both politicomilitary and budgetary terms, the increased Italian spending--reckoned as a real 3 percent of the current budget--stemming from the increased and accelerated armament measures decided at the recent NATO meeting in Brussels."

BERLINGUER: PSI WILL FOLLOW DC LINE, SPLITTING LEFT

LD021109 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 23 May 80 p 15

[Unattributed report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer undated interview with Milan weekly: "Comrade Berlinguer Interview with PANORMA"

[Text] The Communists' attitude to the three-party government and PCI-Italian Socialist Party [PSI] relations in particular are the topics discussed by Comrade Enrico Berlinguer in an interview with PANORAMA. Is a government including the Socialists worse than Andreotti's single-party Christian Democratic government? Berlinguer replied to this question that the PCI's verdict is based on the government's behavior and attitudes, although, before the Andreotti single-party government, we had a program agreement supported and drawn up by the Communists among others, Berlinguer points out, "we did not hestitate to cause government crises on at least two occasions when we judged that actions, decisions, and measures taken by that government were contrary to the workers' and the country's interests. Our polemic with the present three-party coalition also involves the PSI, because its actions hitherto and the logic which it is following are those of splitting the left, lurching to the right, showing a lack of autonomy in the international field and returning even more blatantly to the old practices of distributing offices and abusing party patronage."

In answer to the question: Has the PCI-PSI understanding which produced a unitary document last September been broken? Berlinguer points out that at that meeting an undertaking was made to reject "every form of ideological and political barrier and prejudice from the Christian Democratic Party [DC] to government participation by both the PSI and the PCI." This prejudice was sanctioned by the latest DC congress, and it cannot be said that the PSI has waged a "steadfast battle" against such a stance. One might have at least expected the Socialists' presence in the government to start a change in methods and approaches. This has not happened, however. "Therefore," Berlinguer points out, "partly for the sake of consistency with what we stated in last September's unitary document. we resolutely oppose this policy, this DC and this government, which are pursuing an essentially anticommunist logic and which in practice are not only unequal to the country's problems and needs but are even becoming dangerous. But we do so always with the desire to reach a solid agreement among all the people's forces, and primarily between ourselves and the PSI."

But is the "difficulty in relations with Craxi" not due to the fact that the PCI is seeking its interlocutors among the PSI secretary's internal opposition? Is a Socialist split possible and, above all, of any value to the left? In answer to these questions Berlinguer points out that "we did not create the divergences within the PSI." Obviously, he adds, "we regard with interest anyone with stances different and autonomous from our own who regards the political plan of the 'preamble' DC as dangerous and who combats it, but we are certainly not aiming at a Socialist split." Berlinguer declares himself "convinced that it is both useful and necessary for the workers and the country to have a united PSI which does not allow itself to be influenced by the present DC Secretariat's policy and which opposes it. This would lead to more unitary PSI-PCI relations and more incisive leftwing action for change."

Next the interview returns to the topic of the government. Should one believe "Craxi, who points to the Cossiga Cabinet as a tool for rebuilding national solidarity, or Piccoli and Donat-Cattin, who present it as an anticommunist bastion?" Berlinguer replies that "actions count more than intentions" and that the facts "show that this government is not acting and moving to build a real and full national solidarity: If it had done so, our attitude would be quite different." [paragraph continues]

As for building a "bastion" against the PCI, the government in fact seems "rather weak, both in Parliament, where it has been left in a minority on several occasions at our initiative, and in the country, where we are gathering sufficient energies and alliances to disappoint--both in and after the elections--those who are hoping for a return in Italy of governments whose main objective is anticommunism."

Answering further questions, Comrade Berlinguer denies among other things that the argument between the PCI and PSI could "exert a negative influence on the voters' decision" or on the possibility of reestablishing leftwing councils. Berlinguer points out that "our relations with the Socialists in local administrations and regional governments have led to positive results, and the polemic concerning the government must not compromise the continuation of our joint work." As for the effect on the voting: "We believe that we are presenting a clear, honest and true argument to the voters, based on the facts and actions which they can see and which the government and its component parties are performing."

POPE JOHN PAUL II RETURNS FROM FRANCE

[Text] Rome, June 3, (ANSA)--Pope John Paul II was back in Italy today after his four-day visit to France but will return to that country next year for the international eucharistic congress to be held in Lourdes. The pope arrived at Rome's airport last night shortly after ten o'clock. He was met by Education Minister Adolfo Sarti who was representing the Italian Government.

Sarti said that "once again, public opinion, independent of religious creed or ideology looked with admiration and gratitude on the generous way in which your holiness has entered into contact with the people you have visited". The Italian minister also underscored the importance of the pope's address to UNESCO while in Paris. The speech testified to the Catholic Church's appreciation for the high goals that organization pursues in the field of education, science and culture, Sarti said.

The pope left France yesterday from the airport at St. Gratien di Lisieux-Deauville. He was seen off by French Premier Raymond Barre and prior to boarding the plane expressed his gratitude for the warm hospitality shown him by French officials, starting with head-of-state Valery Giscard d'Estaing, and by the French people.

Soon after his arrival here last night, John Paul proceeded to his summer residence in Castel Gandolfo some twenty kilometers outside Rome. However, he will return to the Vatican Wednesday for his regular weekly general audience. From now until October his audience will be held in the afternoon because of the heat.

On Sunday, the pope will celebrate "Corpus Domini" with a procession to be held in St. Peter's Square.

LD021234 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1030 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Text] The state visit to Finland by the President of France and Madame Giscard d'Estaing has begun. President Urho Kekkonen welcomed his guests an hour ago at Helsinki-Vantaa Airport, where military honors including a review of the honor guard took place. From the state border the visitors' special plane was escorted by a Finnish Air Force fighter unit. Among those welcoming the eminent visitors at the airport were the first deputy speaker of the diet, Veikko Helle, and members of the Council of State led by Premier Mauno Koivisto.

Those accompanying the French president during the 2-day visit include Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet; Minister of Environment Michel d'Ornano; Minister of Agriculture Pierre Mehaignerie; and Minister of Foreign Trade Jean-Francois Deniau.

One hour has been reserved today for talks between the French and Finnish presidents. These talks have been anticipated with great interest, and they are to take place late this afternoon. Among other things, they will probably deal with disarmament proposals. The summit talks will be continued tomorrow. The French ministers taking part in the state visit will conduct separate talks with their Finnish counterparts.

At the moment a luncheon is about to begin in honor of the state visitors at the presidential palace. After the luncheon President Giscard d'Estaing will lay flowers at the war memorial and on the tomb of Marshal Mannerheim at Heitaniemi.

Madame Giscard d'Estaing has a special program of her own for this afternoon in Helsinki. The first day of the state visit is to end with a gala dinner given by President Kekkonen at the presidential palace.

Tomorrow the French president is to acquaint himself with forestry and the wood-processing industry in Varkaus and Joroinen. Madame Giscard d'Estaing is to visit Juva.

Giscard-Kekkonen Discussions

LD021808 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1700 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Text] French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing today began a 2-day state visit to Finland. After a luncheon at the presidential palace President Giscard d'Estaing laid flowers at the war memorial and Marshal Mannerheim's tomb at Heitaniemi Cemetery. In the afternoon the president of France had a 2-hour discussion on international issues and Franco-Finnish relations with President Urho Kekkonen at the presidential palace. At the same time the Finnish and French ministers of foreign affairs, foreign trade and agriculture discussed issues of interest in the Council of State banquet suite.

Madame Giscard d'Estaing spent the afternoon acquainting herself with the work of the First Home Association, the Finlandia Hall and the Temppeli Square Church.

In the evening President and Madame Giscard d'Estaing will receive members of the French colony in Finland at the residence of the French ambassador and attend a gala dinner to be given in their honor by President Kekkonen at the presidential palace.

President Giscard d'Estaing and President Kekkonen discussed central issues of international politics, including big power relations in general and Afghanistan in particular. The presidents also discussed the process of detente in Europe extensively, especially the prospects for the Madrid CSCE review conference and disarmament. The presidents also discussed Franco-Finnish relations, particularly economic relations.

Giscard Defends Warsaw Talks

LD021816 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Text] A report on the visit by Valery Giscard d'Estaing to Finland: From the outset the president of the republic and the Finnish president, Urho Kekkonen, indicated that strengthening peace was their main concern. For Mr Giscard d'Estaing it is an extension of his visit to Warsaw and his meeting with Leonid Brezhnev. The French president, speaking to French people living in Finland, reiterated his reasons for his visit to Warsaw, and said that France would not abandon such initiatives if it deemed them necessary:

[Begin Giscard recording] When France acts as a messenger of peace, it sometimes encounters a certain lack of understanding and a certain amount of criticism. I am convinced that it does not encounter a lack of understanding or criticism either from those who live on its soil, or from those who, like you, follow its fate from abroad. I believe that at the present time it is important for France to talk to the superpowers each time a situation has to be analysed in order to foresee and to measure the intentions and reactions of the other side, and to avoid a buildup of risks. That is what I did, as you know, a few days ago, and France will, of course, continue to do so. [end recording]

Giscard, Kekkonen Dinner Speeches

LD022114 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 2000 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Finland has noted with great pleasure the active contribution made by France for disarmament. This was stated by President Urho Kekkonen in his speech at a dinner in honor of President and Mme Valery Giscard d'Estaing at the presidential palace this evening. Finland has viewed with positive interest the initiative made by France at the UN special session on disarmament in May 1978 for a European disarmament conference, President Kekkonen continued. He said that Finland's initiative on disarmament, made last autumn, aims at utilizing existing proposals and readiness for safeguarding peace and the process of detente. For its part, Finland has also striven to achieve international peace and detente, President Kekkonen continued.

In the view of President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, it is necessary to restore an atmosphere favorable to detente and to reduce the threat created by the growing arms race. Speaking at the gala dinner, Giscard d'Estaing said that the blows which have hit detente give us cause to consider the prospects open at the forthcoming CSCE review conference in Madrid; for we must undertake measures to restore a favorable atmosphere. According to Giscard d'Estaing, both France and Finland have played an important role in the development of the policy of detente.

BARRE COMMENTS ON BILATERAL ECONOMIC COOPERATION DURING VISIT

[Alain Rollat report: "Mr Barre States That France Wants To Diversify Its Cooperation With Oslo"]

[Text] Oslo--By beginning his visit, under a clouded sky, by visiting rigs in the Frigg gas fields--whose reserves (220 billion cubic meters) are equivalent to those of Lacq but whose production, which is in the hands of ELF-Aquitains-Norge, is twice as much as that of the Aquitanian fields--Mr Barre immediately came to the heart of the matter. In fact, Norway's policy bearing on the future of the French ELF-Aquitaine and Total groups represents for France one of the most important problems in Franco-Norwegian cooperation.

At a time when, as a result of Oslo's "Norwegianization" policy, French participation in the development of Norwegian oil and gas resources is being increasingly restricted to the role of technical aid on the one hand and undermined by increasingly active rival groups on the other hand, the alternative is simple--if Paris does not want to see French presence in the North Sea eventually decline, it--and the French groups, especially ELF-Aquitaine--must accept the basis for the new form of cooperation which Oslo desires.

In his very first speech, which was delivered on the main Frigg rig, Mr Barre clearly stated that the French Government understood "perfectly well" the nationalist orientation of Norway's energy policy and accepted the principle of an industrial cooperation which would considerably exceed the oil sector as a quid pro quo for sales of Norwegian oil and gas, in accordance with Norway's desire. "While recognizing the Norwegian Government's legitimate desire to increase the role of national enterprises as a matter of priority, we hope to be able to contribute in a sustained and trustful manner toward future developments in the North Sea," he stated among other things. "My presence here is indeed an indication of France's desire to develop and diversify our economic and trade relations as a whole.... I have no doubt that our exchanges will receive a new impetus and that long-term cooperation will develop to the advantage of both sides."

Mr. Barre also emphasized the strategic importance of North Sea energy resources--"In the future, Norway will play a major role in supplying hydrocarbons to Europe, thus contributing toward security and stability in this part of the world," he stated.

He paid tribute to the "new toilers of the sea"--the men and women who work on the many rigs established between Norway and Great Britain.

"Complementarity of Our Economies"

Norway's position was summed up by Oil and Energy Minister Bjartmar Gjerde during an official dinner given by the Stavanger mayor Monday night: "It is a concern of ours to establish cooperation in the oil and industrial spheres with the governments of other countries. We do not want to make our economy exclusively dependent on oil and gas exports and we would like to develop cooperation likely to develop our industrial potential in other spheres. The government desires to make Norwegian industry benefit from any new technological contribution and open up new markets for it. The present conditions should indeed lend themselves to useful and balanced cooperation in the industrial and energy spheres between Norway and France."

In his reply, Mr Barre stated among other things: "Our economies' complementarity backed by a joint political desire should form a basis for both closer and more diversified relations between Norway and France. The talks which I will have with Mr Nordli will enable us to develop our political and economic relations in depth."

The Norwegian leaders, who appear to be rather guarded in their assessment of any advantages derived from their talks with Industry Minister Giraud in November 1979, will obviously judge the French Government and industrialists by their deeds. Having been paid assiduous court since oil made them rich--a Chinese delegation arrives in Oslo next week--they intend to stick to the supply and demand law even in their dealings with the French even though, as Mr Barre recalled, the French were "among the first people" to contribute toward Norway's development in the energy sphere by participating in the exploration of the North Sea's bed.

In order to dispel any doubts, Mr Barre intends to assure the Oslo government of France's political desire to increase global exchanges between the two countries in accordance with a cooperation process extended over "at least several decades."

MOTIVES OF PALME, GONZALEZ, KREISKY IRAN VISIT ASSESSED

LD301445 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 28 May 80 p 2

[Editorial: "The Three Wise Men"]

[Text] We will have to wait and see if any meaningful results come from the three Socialist leaders' visit to Iran. The menacing crisis surrounding the captive American diplomats is still very much alive. Even after the three have left the country, the hostages are still being held. Kreisky, Gonzalez and Palme have not brought an end to their captivity, even if anyone really thought that they would.

A number of Swedish newspapers, especially those on the right, speak of the visit in ironical terms and hint that it was, at least on Olof Palme's part, perhaps more of a personal public relations exercise than anything else. Social Democratic papers, after their hurried introductory panygyrics, find that Palme and his colleagues have made a praiseworthy effort, no matter what the outcome. But no one seems to have any real idea about what the aim of the whole thing was.

Judging by the Socialist leaders' own comments after their discussions in Tehran, they see their visit as a mission designed to relax tension. The background to their view is, of course, the anxiety that a prolongation of the crisis surrounding the hostages and Iran's choice of direction in future developments will lead to irrevocable escalation in an already tense situation. Iran's geographical position--a neighbor of Afghanistan, with a border with the Soviet Union and located right in the middle of the world's most important oil-exporting region--all these are motives enough for peacemaking efforts over and above traditional diplomatic activities.

The Socialist leaders want to prevent Iran from slipping into an ever deeper isolation from the Western world--and perhaps from being driven straight into a Soviet power game. They have visited the country at a time when not only the United States is subjecting it to economic sanctions. The European Economic Community as well as Japan, have, despite their great misgivings, implemented certain sanctions to exert pressure on Iran to release the hostages. [paragraph continues]

Obviously men like Kreisky, Gonzalez and Palme consider that they, in their capacity as Socialists, are specially qualified to win the confidence of the Iranians, who as a nation are attempting to stand free of the power blocs and create new social conditions.

It is, however, difficult to understand why the leaders in Iran should be so receptive to the viewpoints of some of democratic socialism's most well-known representatives.

The Iranian Revolution is not only turning the point of its sword against Western imperialism, as manifested for decades in the shape of America's influence as a superpower upon the country's affairs. The Iranian revolutionaries in their Islamic orthodoxy are attacking the evolution of the West in general and in doing so attacking a large number of what are for us well-known, well-established social and economic concepts, which to a large extent bear the stamp of the struggle of strong socialist and social democratic movements for better living conditions.

When the regime in Iran allows the students to keep their hostages, it actually lends its name to an act of pure war. Iran sets itself above political and legal principles that are considered important by everybody, by socialists as well as by other political groupings. The leaders in Iran declare that right is on their side, emphasizing that the U.S. Embassy functioned as a spy center. But to take diplomats hostage in such a situation is tantamount to taking the law into one's own hands and is an action which the world community, for its own safety, must sharply condemn.

It could be risky to emphasize, as the Socialist leaders have done, how well acquainted they have become with Iranian views during "positive" talks.

Not least after what the three said on Tuesday at their respective press conferences upon returning home, Tehran must see the visit as a welcome break in the pressure now being exerted to secure the release of the hostages. Perhaps Tehran sees it as more than this. Attempts could be made to twist the Socialist visit into a sort of legitmation of the Iranian Revolution in its present phase. In a remarkable way the Socialist leaders also place the responsibility for the developments in the internal crisis on the United States by putting great emphasis on how a solution requires that "acts of force are avoided" and how economic sanctions defeat their purpose.

It is clear that the socialist leaders hoped that their visit would strengthen the position of those men in Tehran who are considered to be reasonable, primarily President Bani-Sadr and Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh. It could be unfortunate if their talks were exploited by more hardline groups which want to continue to follow a policy of defiance.

The problem ought not to be unknown to Bruno Kreisky at least. In his marked efforts to give due consideration to the interests of the Palestinians he cannot easily ignore the difficulties that may arise from seeming to encourage the PLO. The danger is that there will be an increase in Israeli and Palestinian intractability.

More than is usually the case with spokesmen for the Socialist International, Kreisky, Gonzalez and Palme emphasize that their visit was a private one. There is of course no obvious unified socialist attitude toward the Iranian crisis; the visit would have appeared differently if it had been made by Helmut Schmidt or James Callaghan.

But this is no reason to question or belittle the three leaders' ambition to create, through their greater semblance of nonalignment, and atmosphere for talks with Iran's revolutionaries. The question mark hangs over the results of their efforts.

OFFICIALS DENY UK-U.S. RIFT OVER DIEGO GARCIA BASE

LD022128 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2050 GMT 2 Jun 80

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Excerpt] The American defence secretary, Mr Harold Brown, who met Mrs Thatcher at Downing Street tonight, denied afterwards that there was any friction between Britain and the U.S. over the use of the British island of Diego Garcia. The Americans have been allowed to develop a military base on the Indian Ocean island.

Mr Brown made his denial in a press conference after the talks. British officials, confirming his view, said that the Americans had consulted Britain on the use of the base.

Mr Brown is understood to have wanted to discuss details for the enlargement of the base where the Americans at present have some 1,000 engineers and servicemen supervising the extension of runways on the island.

There was speculation that Mr Brown wanted to discuss with Mrs Thatcher the possibility of storing nuclear warheads on the island, but officials would not make any comment on this possibility. The Soviet Union has regularly called the island a nuclear base.

In the Commons, Mrs Thatcher has refused to answer when asked if the Americans used Diego Garcia in the unsuccessful attempt to rescue her hostages from Tehran.

Also at tonight's one hour meeting were Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington and Defence Secretary Mr Francis Pym.

Little information was released afterwards by either side. Downing Street said simply that there was a useful survey of major East-West issues, including Southwest Asia, and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

JAPAN'S OKITA, JORDAN'S HUSAYN DISCUSS MIDEAST IN LONDON

OW030023 Tokyo KYODO in English 0000 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Text] London June 2 KYODO--Japanese Foreign Minister Saburo Okita discussed the situation in the Middle East with King Husayn of Jordan Monday afternoon after he arrived in London following an official visit to Amman. King Husayn currently is staying in London.

The meeting between Okita and the king was attended by Japanese Ambassador Naraichi Fujiyama. Fujiyama told newsmen later that the king expressed concern that the Middle East situation has become further unstable due to the stalemate in negotiations between Egypt and Israel.

He said Okita expressed the Japanese Government's wish to exert efforts for improving the Middle East situation by cooperating with the European Community.

Fujiyama said King Husayn revealed that he planned to go to the U.S. this month, at the earliest, to discuss with American officials matters concerned with Middle East peace.

While in Amman, Okita met with Jordanian leaders and issued a joint statement in which he supported the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) in Mideast peace talks.

MUGABE REQUEST FOR HELP IN FORMING DEFENSE FORCE STUDIED

LD301944 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1944 GMT 30 May 80

[By David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] The British Government is considering a request from the prime minister of Zimbabwe, Mr Robert Mugabe for further help in transforming his guerrilla forces and the old Rhodesian Army into a new combined defence force. The request comes after the Zimbabwe Government realised that the problems of combining the two forces was running into difficulties.

REUTER reported today from Salisbury that Mr Mugabe admitted the difficulties in Parliament this afternoon. But Mr Mugabe admitted the difficulties privately to Mrs Thatcher when he met here at Downing Street on May 9 when he was on his way to Belgrade for Yugoslav President Tito's funeral.

He made the request direct to her then for more British military instructors to be sent to Zimbabwe to help in welding together the two forces, formerly bitter enemies. At present there are about 60 British Army instructors in Zimbabwe helping in the task of bringing the two forces together.

INTERNAL DIVISION MARKS LABOR PARTY SPECIAL CONFERENCE

LD021021 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 2 Jun 80 pp 1, 36

[James Wightman report: "'Callaghan Must Quit' Tide Swells"]

[Excerpts] Pressure is growing for Mr Callaghan to retire as Labour leader in the autumn and give someone else the chance to stop Mr Anthony Wedgwood Benn taking the party further to the left. This follows Labour's special conference at Wembley on Saturday when Mr Benn received a standing ovation from delegates whereas Mr Callaghan was given only restrained applause.

There was despair among centre-right MPs that Mr Callaghan should have agreed to support a National Executive Committee [NEC] document from which Mr Benn and other left-wingers were able to make such political capital at the conference.

The document, entitled "Peace, Jobs, and Freedom," contains a potential alternative strategy to the government's policies. It involves more nationalisation, renationalisation without compensation of public assets sold off by the Tories, greater public expenditure and job-creation, changes in Common Market policy, a ban on American cruise missiles in Britain and the abolition of the House of Lords.

The document was adopted on a card vote by 5,165 to 6,000 shortly after, Mr Benn had made the wind-up speech which made him the hero of the conference.

Mr Callaghan gave Mr Benn a steely glare as the former energy secretary contradicted a key part of his own speech--a call for unions to agree on an incomes policy in advance of a future Labour government. Mr Benn declared: "No incomes policy or wage control can revitalise capitalism when it has declined to the level that it has in this country."

Mr Benn also sounded a much more left-wing salvo on defence than had Mr Callaghan who had spoken of the need for nuclear disarmament to be discussed on a multi-lateral level.

Said Mr Benn: "We are making clear in this statement that the Labour Party will not accept cruise missiles in this country and that we intend to see that they are not placed on our territory. Nor shall we go for a further development of the Polaris system." There was no mention of an incomes policy in the NEC statement, but there was a lengthy section on nuclear weapons. Mr Benn used both the omission and the inclusion to turn the conference against Mr Callaghan.

Dr David Owen, the former foreign secretary, was also given a rough reception when he spoke out against unilateral disarmament. It was clear from the reception given Dr Owen and from other speeches that the Labour Party faces a split akin to that which involved Gaitskell in the 1950s over nuclear disarmament. The placing of American cruise missiles on British soil is already facing opposition from the left and will do so increasingly with the right-wing Mr Ronald Reagan challenging for the United States presidency.

Although the Wembley event saw much less open internal feuding than the full post-election conference last autumn, it saw real unity only in condemning the policies of the Conservative government. Some 100 MPs stayed away, many of them because they did not want to be associated with another left-dominated spectacle.

Out of the 1,000-old delegates, mainly from constituency parties and trade unions, many did not return to the conference hall after lunch, leaving it to leaders to cast the card votes. There were many rows of empty seats as Mr Callaghan, Mr Benn and others in the National Executive Committee line-up on the platform sang "The Red Flag," the party's traditional concluding act at conference.

Judging by the delight on the left at the endorsement of the statement, Mr Callaghan may well have been right in his original assessment that it would have been safer to hold only a rally of protest. Mr Callaghan delivered a speech that was skillfully compiled and passionately delivered and yet he did not inspire the conference into anything more than a good reception.

He advocated an incomes policy knowing that it would not be enthusiastically received, and it wasn't--either by trade union leaders or by other delegates. He admitted that past wage freezes, statutory incomes policies, voluntary incomes policies, norms, percentage increases and free collective bargaining had not been satisfactory. Difficult decisions would have to be taken, he added. "Our objectives will be reached only if we have a settled policy on incomes."

He devoted much of his speech to denouncing government policies--which was the original purpose of the conference--and said that he would depart from his normal policy of not making personal attacks on Mrs Thatcher. The prime minister, he said, was prepared to tolerate social injustice, failure to meet the needs of the weakest, more unemployment and the destruction of whole communities.

Mr Benn won his standing ovation with a speech that risked no unpopularity over incomes policy. To the many constituency representatives, where Mr Benn's strongest support lies, it was a future leader's speech. But it was noticeable that many of the trade union representatives did not join the adulation for Mr Benn.

So Mr Callaghan may yet be right in his calculation that enough trade union support can be mustered to frustrate the left, particularly on internal party reforms, at the full conferences this autumn and in the immediate years thereafter.

Under the present system, whereby MPs choose the party leader, Mr Benn does not rate highly his chances of succeeding Mr Callaghan. A wider electoral college, involving constituency parties, as he advocates, would give him a better chance of the leadership.

SPOKESMAN REFUTES KHARAVYI COMMENTARY ON KIPRIANOU STATEMENT

NC021251 Nicosia Public Information Office in English 2 Jun 80

[Press release of Cyprus Government spokesman's clarifications to KHARAVYI 1 June comment on President Kiprianou's address to the nation]

[Text] KHARAVYI newspaper yesterday referred to the message of the president of the republic to the Cyprus people and gave Dr. Waldheim's formula of 23 August, 1979. The paper makes special mention of the formula's reference to "a bizonal solution of the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem; and stresses that "the term 'bizonal' referred to the territorial aspect, that is, it clearly meant bi-regional." KHARAVYI further said that the term "bizonal" was repeatedly used by President Makarios in 1977 and by the then minister of foreign affairs, Mr. I. Khristofidhis, in the U.N. General Assembly.

AKEL was briefed at the time without any delay on the secretary-general's suggestion of 23 August and on the position taken by the Greek Cypriot side. AKEL was also briefed on all phases of the exchange of views with the secretary general and his special representative in Cyprus. Never until the decision of its Central Committee was released did AKEL express any disagreement or reservation regarding the position taken by us. At the same time, editorials in KHARAVYI and public statements by the AKEL general secretary, Mr. E. Papaionnou, and other AKEL leaders, as well as statements by Mr. Papaioannou in the National Council, unreservedly supported the position of the president, the government and more specifically of the Greek Cypriot side.

More specifically:

1. Since 23 August 1979, there have been three joint meetings of the National Council and the Council of Ministers, one on 16 October 1979, another on 1 November 1979 and a third on 21 December 1979. Mr Papaioannou was present at all three meetings and he expressed neither reservation nor disagreement, nor did he ever put any blame on the president or his government for the non-resumption of the talks. On the contrary, in his statements he spoke of insurmountable difficulties and considered impossible the resumption of the talks because of the Turkish demand for confederation, for a bizonal solution to the Cyprus problem, "bizonal" as now interpreted by the Turkish side. And it is well-known how the Turkish side now interprets this term. Mr. Denktas himself in a statement published in OLAY magazine on 16 July 1979, said:

"The term bi-regional indicates district administration boundaries like Famagusta District boundaries. The meaning of the term 'bizonal' is that 'I am a state that has territory as one of the two federated states. I am sovereign on many things within this territory. My sovereignty is absolute and no one can take it away from me.'"

Professor Mumtaz Soysal, constitutional adviser to the Turkish side and adviser to the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor in the intercommunal talks in June 1979, in a speech on 18 October 1979, on "human rights and the Cyprus problem", said:

"Each society should have the right to benefit from natural resources and to develop itself by its own endeavours. And this entails the right to live freely on a specific piece of land, large enough to secure economic viability. For this reason the words 'bi-regional' and 'bizonal', which were used with the same meaning at the start now carry different meanings. Thus, the difference between the two words now has assumed an amazingly important weight."

Professor Soysal further clarified that "at the beginning the leaders of the two communities used the term 'bi-regional' but later the Turkish side began to use the word 'bizonal', and that 'originally both words had the same meaning', but 'now carry different meanings.'"

Professor Soysal added: "We shall not go to the negotiating table before the concept of bizonality is accepted." (AYDINLIK, 21/10/79).

In the above statements, both Professor Soysal and Mr. Denktas confirmed in the most categorical manner that if the Greek Cypriot side accepted the Turkish demand for bizonality, this would be tantamount to accepting the creation of two separate states resulting in the neutralisation of the Makarios-Denktas guidelines of 12 February 1977, which provide for the establishment of a federation. Also, on the basis of the position that the Turkish Cypriots must have "a specific piece of land large enough to secure economic viability" which, as stated by Professor Soysal, is one of the elements of bizonality, the Turkish side would justify its refusal to return any part of Cyprus territory occupied by the Turkish troops.

A series of articles in KHARAVYI and public statements made by Mr. Papaioannou make the following points, concerning the deadlock in the talks:

(A) KHARAVYI in a leader on 4 October 1979, supported that the Turkish side simply restates unacceptable conditions and indulges in misleading propaganda.

(B) Mr. Papaioannou, in a speech at Dherinia on 17 October 1979, put the blame on Denktas stressing that he was trying to introduce new terms about "bizonality" and "security of Turkish Cypriots" in the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement and said that the Greek Cypriot side was not to blame for the difficulties in the way of resumption of the dialogue.

(C) In its issue of 1 November 1979, KHARAVYI attacked the bizonal solution stressing that "the term bizonal could mean nothing else but confederation of two separate states."

(D) Mr. Papaioannou took part in the all-party delegation to the United Nations and was aware of all the views, moves, proposals, reactions and intentions of the Greek Cypriot and the Turkish Cypriot side and those of the U.N. officials.

On leaving for New York, on 5 November 1979, Mr. Papaioannou said:

"On the basis of the line charted by the National Council and the Council of Ministers we shall denounce the continuing intransigence of the Turkish Government and its refusal to implement the U.N. resolutions on Cyprus. We shall enlighten the member-states on the Turkish leadership's backtracking in the question of the intercommunal talks, which it was agreed to resume on the basis of the agreement reached between the president of the republic, Mr. Kiprianou, and the Turkish Cypriot leader, Mr. Rauf Denktas.

"We shall stress that, while the Greek Cypriot side is always ready for intercommunal talks, on the basis of the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement, and has proved this in practice, the Turkish leadership sets conditions which do not exist in the agreement and even demands their unreserved acceptance.

"In view of the continuing refusal of Turkey to implement the United Nations resolutions on Cyprus, we shall struggle and seek to secure concrete measures from the world organisation for the implementation of its decisions on Cyprus."

We recall that the Waldheim formula was submitted on August 23--AKEL was informed of this--and the above statement of Mr. Papaioannou was made on November 5. When Mr. Papaioannou returned from the United Nations, in a statement on 22 November he spoke of success of the Cypriot delegation in facing the Turkish intransigence and in the efforts for a proper solution to the Cyprus problem.

(E) In KHARAVYI during the first five months of 1980 a host of articles were published unreservedly supporting the position of the president and his government concerning the non-resumption of the talks.

AKEL Reply

[Text] The AKEL spokesman has stated that the party's general secretary, Mr Papaioannou, will answer both President Kiprianou's 31 May address and today's statement by the government spokesman in a speech to be delivered at Elevtheria Square on 10 June. In addition, the AKEL spokesman said that his party had not received the UN secretary general's suggestion of August 1979 until December 1979 upon its own persistence and that the 16 October National Council had been convened after the president had rejected Waldheim's suggestion. The AKEL spokesman also said that during the period February-April 1980--when consultations were being held to resume the dialogue--the National Council was not asked to convene. Therefore, the only briefing that was made was after--and not before--the Greek Cypriot side answered Mr Waldheim so that AKEL would not have any possibility to express a responsible opinion. Moreover, he added, if AKEL had been briefed and had agreed, how does this explain the 3 March 1980 memorandum?

Spokesman's Rebuttal

[Text] The government spokesman referring to AKEL's statement said that his clarification today of the yesterday's KHARAVYI report is based on facts and that he has nothing new to add to them. AKEL's statement today, the government spokesman added, among other things also refers to its 3 March memorandum. A simple reading of the memorandum confirms that it does not mention the 23 August proposal nor does it complain that the government failed to brief AKEL.

DISI CHAIRMAN KLIRIDHIS URGES KIPRIANOU TO RESIGN

NC021200 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Text] In an open letter to President Kiprianou, chairman of the Democratic Rally [DISI] Mr Kliridhis accuses him that his term in office has led Cyprus and the republic to a political and economic bankruptcy and asks him to resign. Mr Kliridhis accuses the president of the republic of utterly destroying the prospective handling of the national issue as well as of indecision and timidity in handling the scandal over the cooperative movement which is leading to economic bankruptcy. Mr Kliridhis says in his letter that the opposition refuses to accompany the president of the republic on his downhill walk to disastrous failure and adds that if the president resigns normal conditions will replace this instability.

EDEK CHAIRMAN LISSARIDHIS DENOUNCES ATTEMPT TO BLAME KIPRIANOU

NC030930 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 3 Jun 80 p 8

[Exclusive statement by EDEK Chairman Vasos Lissaridhis on President Kiprianou's address to the nation; date not given]

[Text] We have repeatedly expressed our views on the course that should be followed both in our political problem and in socioeconomic matters.

We believe that if immediate, drastic and corrective measures are not taken our economy will face the danger of collapse. The gap between the rich and the poor is widening, the unchecked rise of prices pulverizes the purchase strength of salaries and wages, the gap in the trade balance has acquired unprecedented dimensions and the irrational imports strike at the local production--both agricultural and industrial.

Our warnings went unheeded. We shall never endorse such an economic policy; but we shall lead the people's struggle toward change.

Our views as well as our disagreements with one side or the other on the political issue are well known. However, the unfair attempt by anybody to throw the blame for the present deadlock on President Kiprianou and, in a wider sense, on the Greek Cypriot side is unacceptable and nationally detrimental.

This undermines our people's struggle and arms the United States, NATO, Ankara and Denktas in attributing responsibility to us and in becoming more intransigent. In essence, it also undermines the possibilities for a substantive dialogue, although, in words, it appears to support this process.

Thus, I believe that the president of the Republic of Cyprus should not and must not let these concepts and impressions prevail--besides, they do not reflect reality.

Everybody knows that Turkey (and many NATO countries) not only votes against the UN resolutions but it also rejects any interpretation of them; the same also applies to Denktas. Everybody knows that our side has made huge concessions without any response.

Therefore, I believe that on this particular issue Mr Kiprianou was right in rejecting any responsibility and in considering the attempt to remove the sole responsibility from the United States and Ankara to be an unacceptable action.

KHARAVYI CITES NEED FOR COALITION, CHANGE

NC310757 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 31 May 80 p 1

[Editorial: "A Deep Change Is Needed"]

[Excerpts] The publication of the 3 March 1980 AKEL Central Committee memorandum to President Kiprianou sheds full light on the events that have led the party's central plenum to withdraw its support for and to disassociate its responsibilities from President Kiprianou and his government.

Many people have attempted to describe the decision of the central plenum as a "bolt out of the blue" and as a sudden change in party policy because they are probably unaware of our party's long and persistent support for President Kiprianou, for consistent implementation of the joint line approved by the National-Ministerial Council on the Cyprus problem and for a more popular domestic policy.

We need a deep change, a qualitative change, in order to get out of the political and economic stalemate into which we have been pushed by the hesitation, the swaying and the mistakes of the Kiprianou government. Half measures and patching up would only perpetuate and deteriorate the situation, and for this reason, the AKEL Central Committee--following long and strong criticism and warnings--decided to withdraw its support for and to disassociate its responsibilities from the government and President Kiprianou.

The sole power that can bring about cleansing and radical change is the coalition of the Cypriot people's democratic patriotic forces. No party can undertake the heavy task and very great responsibilities for the Cyprus struggle by itself. For this reason, the AKEL Central Committee views the rallying of all the democratic patriotic forces around the joint line of the National-Ministerial Council and for a popular policy as the direct and main duty today. The mistakes and weaknesses of the president and his government have contributed to the presence of cracks and to the disruption of the domestic front. Undoubtedly the implacable enemies of Cyprus, the imperialist conspirators, will try to take advantage of the difficulties and differences within the domestic front--a task in which they are being directly assisted by the maniacal anti-communists of the Democratic Rally and of EDEK, which have been trying to distort AKEL's crystal-clear policy. It is the duty of the democratic patriotic forces to be vigilant and to foil the plots and machinations of the wild demagogues who want to dissolve our domestic front.

KIPRIANOU URGES RESUMPTION OF TALKS WITHOUT 'PRIOR CONDITIONS'

NC302111 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 30 May 80

[Text] President Kiprianou has stressed that we are ready to begin talks at any time without conditions on the basis of the Makarios-Denktas agreement and the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement, which also includes the Makarios-Denktas agreement and various other basic elements including UN resolutions.

Receiving today the credentials of the new Danish ambassador to Cyprus, Mr Villadsen, President Kiprianou stressed that each side can raise for discussion at the negotiating table whatever issues it wishes. He said: This is the proper way or resuming the talks. We are also prepared to explore other possibilities in order to assist the UN secretary general. We should not be expected, however, to commit ourselves, prior to the opening of the talks, to the acceptance of concepts which the Turkish side has already interpreted and concepts which actually mean separate states.

He went on: We do not object to the Turkish side's raising anything it wishes at the negotiating table. However, any a priori conditions, particularly of this nature, must be avoided. We have all the good faith and good will to attempt and find a solution on this basis. President Kiprianou stressed: However, under no circumstances can we accept anything that would be a confederation, that would be tantamount or lead to partition, nor anything that would be tantamount to endorsing and legalizing the faits accomplis created by the invasion.

President Kiprianou added. A new round of talks opened last June, but it broke off immediately because of the Turkish side's stance. He further expressed hope that a way would be found to resume the intercommunal talks which, he said, constitutes the best available procedure concerning the internal structure of an independent, sovereign, nonaligned, territorially integral and united Republic of Cyprus. He said: We have many answers to the problem of security, provided that there is good will.

On the foreign aspect of the Cyprus issue, President Kiprianou stressed it is absolutely essential that any foreign intervention cease and he added that we are in favor of full demilitarization of Cyprus. He stressed: The fact that the talks have not yet been resumed is due to the unwillingness of the other side. He said: In an attempt to prevent the holding of meaningful talks, the other side has set conditions for the resumption of the dialogue--preconditions which, if we accepted them, would prejudge the outcome of the talks in a way detrimental to Cyprus and justice. President Kiprianou condluded: We have shown and we will continue to show all our good will. We will continue our efforts with the UN secretary general. He stressed: Any attempt, however, to put us on an equal footing and any allegation that the fault also lies with the Greek Cypriot side--the Cyprus Government--is, to say the least, unjustified.

Addressing the president of the republic, the new Danish ambassador said that only direct negotiations between the parties concerned can lead to a settlement that would guarantee the territorial integrity, independence and sovereignty of the Republic of Cyprus. He added: This is why we have been disappointed by the fact that the recent efforts to resume negotiations between the two communities have not yet brought about any results. He also said that Denmark has always supported with consistency the efforts that have been exerted within the UN framework for a Cyprus solution, and that Denmark has for many years been contributing to the UN peace force. In conclusion, Mr Villadsen stressed that he will exert every effort toward the continuation and further strengthening of the friendly links between Cyrpus and Denmark. The presentation ceremony was also attended by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Under Secretary to the President Stavrou and Director of Protocol Loizhou.

ROLANDHIS COMMENTS ON GOBBI'S NEW EFFORTS FOR TALKS

NC021755 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Foreign Minister Rolandhis has stated that the new efforts being exerted by Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, to resume the intercommunal talks are being done somewhat differently than in the past. He said that certain decisions must be taken by both sides in the next few days, adding: I could say that the situation is somewhat better, but we have a domestic problem we are facing that cannot help but influence developments in the national issue. Mr Rolandhis said: The domestic situation is not good at this moment. He stressed that if we really want to solve the Cyprus issue, we ourselves must first be of the same mind.

In a statement during his briefing with representatives of Greek mass media abroad, Mr Rolandhis also referred to the history of the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement, stressing that Mr Denktas showed his intentions not to promote the talks right from the start, and that in order to torpedo the entire process he brought up the bizonal issue.

ESTIA RECOMMENDS ADDED PRESSURE ON WEST FOR CYPRUS SUPPORT

AT301440 Athens ESTIA in Greek 30 May 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Athens Policy Toward the Cyprus Impasse Is Unrealistic, Contradictory and Benefits the Turks"]

[Text] It must be admitted that the chamber of deputies debate on Cyprus between 21 and 23 May, during the presentation of the new government's policy statement, was extensive as well as revealing. The official position on this national issue, as presented by the prime minister, is not only unrealistic but it also fosters serious implications for the future. For this reason we feel obliged to analyze and objectively judge both this position as well as what the opposition had to say on the issue. It is to the point, however, to first refer to the period since the latest UN General Assembly resolution of 19 November 1979 and to the Cyprus policy which followed it.

This resolution, as we know it, despite its correct conclusions and touching recommendations, fundamentally preserved only one positive method for finding a solution--through negotiations between Greek and Turkish Cypriots under the auspices of the UN secretary general. There was not even a single mention of sanctions against the responsible side if such negotiations were to fail. Only one element was added: If by 31 March 1980 the UN secretary general reported a lack of progress in negotiations, then the chairman of the UN General Assembly was authorised to appoint a special committee composed of not more than seven representatives from UN member states. Even the mission of this committee, however, was limited to simply maintaining contact with the UN secretary in order to facilitate a successful outcome of negotiations. In other words, even this new element leans toward the very same utopia--intercommunal negotiations. Perhaps this is why a committee was never appointed even though the date of 31 March 1980 has long passed.

If one investigates the historical position of the Turkish Cypriots toward Turkey one will reach only one stark conclusion, that is: Between the Zurich-London agreements and the establishment of a Turkish military force in Cyprus there was systematic pressure upon the Turkish Cypriots to force them to blindly obey Ankara's orders. From the time of the Turkish invasion of 1974 and due to the presence of a 30,000-man Turkish Army in Cyprus it can be said that in Cyprus there are now virtually no Turkish Cypriots with a will of their own but only Turks who blindly obey Ankara. In light of this fact the observed turn in Cyprus policy is nothing but conformity to reality. Both President Kiprianou as well as Archbishop Khrisostomos spoke about the futility and deceit of negotiations with Turkish Cypriots and argued that America and the Western powers must exert as much pressure as possible upon Turkey to force it to concessions so that a solution could be found. A short time later, however, there was another full change of policy. Kiprianou and his foreign minister started to implore for commencement of intercommunal dialogue. The president of Cyprus even personally visited the French president and the British prime minister to ask for their mediation with Turkey toward this end. Naturally the results were poor because of the latest international developments and, in particular, because of the situation in Iran and the Russian invasion of Afghanistan which are considered to be increasing Turkey's importance in this area. And yet on the Greek side these events could be internationally exploited because violations of international law and the violation of human rights in Cyprus met with appropriate reaction both in America, the Western as well as in the nonaligned countries and perhaps new violations could have been avoided.

After this informative reference to the past it will be explained why the government's position on the Cyprus issue which was presented in the chamber of deputies is, first of all, unrealistic and it fosters serious dangers. The basic framework of Greek-Cyprus relations with regard to handling and solving the situation created by the Turkish invasion is the oft repeated statement, "Cyprus decides and Greece supports." First of all this framework is demeaning and undignified for Greece which justly claims the title of the "national center."

As Rallis stated, however, this was requested by the Cypriots themselves. Yet, something of this sort could have possibly applied in Makarios' time when many Greek governments among themselves rejected his initiatives and unruliness but, because of his pan-Cypriot and panhellenic prestige, they did not dare to react. The situation, however, has radically changed today.

Specifically in reference to the political situation in Cyprus, nothing is being done that requires support since support for inaction is unthinkable. The only thing which has existed for several weeks now is a terrible internal squabble over the revelation of the squandering of tens of millions of Cyprus pounds in which names of prominent persons are mentioned.

In reference to the Cyprus issue itself, however, at the international level the entire situation has changed to such a degree that Rallis himself was forced to admit that time is working for the Turks. "If," he said, "the current situation is maintained for several years then we will have a de facto partition." Unfortunately, however, such a partition already exists and there is the danger that in a few years it will also become a "de jure" partition. This is the very reason why the Turks do not want an intercommunal dialogue. Even when they pretend to want it or even when they initiate it, those who know the Turks well or those who have experience with the Cyprus issue, have absolutely no doubt that this is another trick to gain time and to collect the so generously offered dollars.

Rallis added he expects Waldheim to state publicly that it is the other side which is unwilling to have a logical dialogue. This is a mistake because we must evaluate the intentions of the Turks on the basis of the true facts and we should not have to wait for credentials which are supplied by Waldheim.

Without agreeing with the leader of the majority opposition party that the UN secretary general is pro-Turkish one can establish that this is the case of a UN official who wants to do his job but without creating unpleasantness, particularly with the large powers. As to the rest it is correctly that Papandreou believes that only through withdrawal of foreign troops and the return of refugees to their homes there could be some significance in intercommunal negotiations. But how will all this be achieved?

Unfortunately space does not permit us to refer to all those who spoke on the Cyprus issue but a short reference must be made to the statement by Yeoryios Mavros who attacked the dogma of "Cyprus decides and Greece supports" by describing this as an effort to shirk responsibility and asked for a more forceful presence by Greece in the handling of the Cyprus issue. He also condemned the policy of intercommunal talks as a method which has been tested and failed and that it is only a trap which helps the Turks.

We will close with two recommendations which, although they may not lead to an immediate desired solution, could yet lead from the current impasse and set goals which may depend on the diplomatic and political activity of all of Hellenism. One: At the United Nationswe must achieve--with the help of the nonaligned--a General Assembly resolution providing for sanctions even though only of an economic and diplomatic form. Two: Through a new and continuous crusade directed at America and the European countries we must seek implementation of true pressure upon Turkey to force it to change its tactics on the Cyprus issue. At the same time it is supposed that as of 1 January 1981, when Greece will become a full member of the European Community, we will also have the benefit of the much advertised political development, at least toward justice and morals.

I AVYI LAUDS NEW PAPANDREOU STANCE ON EUROPEAN INDEPENDENCE

AT291455 Athens I AVYI in Greek 29 May 80 p 12

[From the "I AVYI" column: "A Positive Development"]

[Text] A reality that is becoming increasingly perceptible in our days is the aggravation of internal imperialist differences, the steady change in the postwar picture of the capitalist world in which the United States indisputably exercised a hegemonistic role. This change appears very clearly in Europe, in the increasing tendency toward choices by the Western European states on the great issues of international policy which are independent from Washington's decisions.

It concerns a phenomenon underlined not only by the recent initiative of French President Giscard d'Estaing for a meeting with Soviet Chairman Brezhnev in Warsaw, a meeting which caused a furious reaction in the U.S. leadership. On a number of issues recently, when the U.S. leaders asked for the "solidarity" of the Western Europeans with their aggressive cold war measures in the Middle East and against the USSR, the governments of the Western European countries responded in a way that very clearly showed their reluctance for alignment.

If we want to be literal, this reality in Europe is not caused only and is not exclusively fed by internal imperialist differences during a period of rapid reduction of the special U.S. weight in the world. In any case, it would be a mistake at this point not to take into consideration the influence of the developed European workers' and democratic movement as a factor that increasingly puts its stamp on the balances that are forming and the directions and role of Western Europe in the contemporary world.

It concerns a reality of immense significance for our country's prospects, for the opportunities for its progressive and democratic forces to proceed, in close cooperation with the corresponding forces of Western Europe, on the road of riddance of imperialist dependence, consolidation of national independence and democratic rebirth. Many years ago the KKE (Interior) noted this reality and took it seriously into consideration in charting its strategy. At present we feel special satisfaction that, as can be seen from the interview being published in TA NEA, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou now recognizes this reality and its influences on our country's internal developments.

Of course this is not merely a "detail," because the recognition without delusions of the uniqueness of and possibilities for a Europe role vis-a-vis the United States toward the formation of international developments constitutes an element of definitive significance for the orientations and strategic choices of all of our country's democratic political forces, especially on the eve of its definitive accession to the EEC.

The simplistic shouts "EEC and NATO--the same syndicate" appeared very radical but most profoundly disoriented our democratic movement. Efforts to make the United States appear as the allegedly indisputable and unshakeable sovereign of Western Europe--disregarding and misinterpreting the significant changes that have gradually accumulated, especially in recent years--were equally and exceptionally disorienting.

For the anti-imperialist and democratic movement of our country the overcoming of such simplistic and erroneous concepts is an element of maturity and force. In this sense we believe that the new position of Papandreou on the issue of differences between Europe and the United States constitutes a significant positive development, a development of course that time will show to what extent "vaccinates" the more general choices of the party of official opposition and its orientations favoring a coordinated action and cooperation both with the other democratic forces of the country and with the progressive forces of Western Europe.

[Text] The leader of Turkey's main opposition Republican People's Party, Mr Ecevit, has said that though Turkey and the Soviet Union are members of two separate defense pacts, and they had different social structures, there was no obstacle to the development of their relations and cooperation.

He said that the development of Turkish-Soviet relations would contribute positively to peace and stability in the Middle East and the Balkans as well as to East-West detente. Me Ecevit said that his party viewed with anxiety the recent unsettled atmosphere in international relations. DEMIREL CALLS FOR CALM, COMMENTS ON NAP

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has asked the citizens of the Turkish Republic, who have for centuries shared their destiny, happiness and sorrow, not to disrupt the feelings of peace, fraternity and solidarity which exist among them. Pointing out that the addition of new incidents to the already existing ones will not benefit anyone, Demirel noted: These days, everyone should try to speak with caution and care.

Demirel, who held his weekly meeting with Acting President Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil today, talked to journalists upon emerging from the Cankaya Mansion. Noting that the attempts to provoke the citizens and to create strikes among them are continuing in various parts of the country, Demirel said that these provocations are causing many regrettable incidents. The prime minister noted: Turkey has always succeeded in embracing its citizens, who have been living on this soil for nearly 1,000 years, with the feeling of togetherness. It is not possible to believe that the citizens' enmity toward each other is due to differences in sect and belief. However, if one heeds the disruption created by a large group, then naturally incidents that would be regrettable to all of us could become inevitable. This is why I am asking for all the children of this country, who have for centuries shared their destiny, happiness and sorrow, to maintain this togetherness and to assist all the echelons of the state in maintaining this togetherness, peace and tranquillity.

Requesting that everyone react to things in a calm and cool manner Demirel said: While there are so many issues to deal with, new sources of grief should not be created. Pointing out that he is making this appeal sincerely, he expressed the belief that the citizens will comply with his appeal. Noting that he does not believe that the country is faced with an insurmountable problem, Demirel added that the government is exerting efforts to solve these problems.

In reply to a journalist, who asked him to comment on the Nationalist Action Party [NAP] decision to wage a struggle with the help of the people, Demirel said that he is very grieved by the treacherous killing of Gun Sazak. However, he does not wish to comfort or advise the NAP on this decision.

Replying to another journalist who asked him about the position of the government if the NAP completely withdraws from the Assembly, Demirel said that he is concerned about the condition of the country and not the government and that the important thing is to save the country from its present situation.

Answering a question on presidential election, Demirel said the election is being held within its [proper] framework. He noted: We have a candidate. Let them come and vote for our candidate and elect a president. If they do not do that, then saying that they have blocked the election would not be erroneous. Pointing out that the constitutional amendment proposal stipulating the national election of a president will be submitted to the National Assembly chairmanship today, Demirel said: Let them come and we will turn to the nation. Why are they evading the nation?

JUSTICE PARTY COUNCIL CALLS FOR EARLY PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

TA021426 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Excerpts] The Justice Party Representative Council believes that asking the free will of the nation is the only solution both in the struggle against anarchy and terror as well as a means of insuring political and economic stability. A statement in connection with the 2-day meeting of the Justice Party Representative Council was read by deputy leader Yigit Koker at a news conference he held at the party headquarters today.

Koker said that the Justice Party Representative Council was convinced that given the present structure of the Turkish Grand National Assembly it was impossible to enact laws that would permit the curbing of the anarchic and terrorist incidents, solve financial, economic and social problems and combat the high cost of living. Koker continued: The same is true for the election of the president. Our council approves, as the best way, the proposal by our party groups for a constitutional change that would permit the nation to decide on the issue of the election of the president. This issue cannot be solved in the parliament despite all the efforts of good will undertaken by our party.

Referring to other points in the Justice Party Representative Council statement, Koker said: Early elections must be held as soon as possible so that necessary laws are passed for the running of the state and government, so that the parliament can quickly make decisions on important issues and so that the national will expressed in the results of the 14 October elections can be reflected in the Turkish Grand National Assembly. Pointing out that the council passed a unanimous decision to advise all the official organs of the party as well as its groups in the Turkish Grand National Assembly on the necessary steps to be taken for the holding of early elections, Koker said: Those who believe in the nation should not be afraid to go to the polls.

UDP PROPOSES SINGLE LEFTWING ELECTORAL ALLIANCE

LD021438 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Text] Having met over the weekend, the National Council of the Popular Democratic Union [UDP] decided to propose the formation of a single leftwing bloc to contest the coming general elections. To this end the UDP is going to approach the Socialist and Communist parties, the Portuguese Democratic Movement, the Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy and all the groups which constitute the Popular Unity Front.

This change in the UDP's attitude to electoral alliances is due, its National Council states, to the need to defeat the Democratic Alliance. The UDP hopes that the other parties will give the proposal due consideration and will enter into discussions.

YUGOSLAV-PORTUGUESE JOINT FIRM INAUGURATED

LD222009 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1904 GMT 22 May 80

[Text] Lisbon, May 22 (TANJUG)--The first Yugoslav-Portuguese firm, registered as "Yugoport", was inaugurated today.

Cooperation to date between the two countries' economic organisations has shown the need for a firm to help promote trade between the two countries. At the recently concluded consultations between the co-chairmen of the Yugoslav-Portuguese Committee for Economic, Scientific and Technical Cooperation, the decision was upheld on founding a joint firm.

The newly-founded "Yugoport" of Lisbon will facilitate contacts and arrangements between the two countries' trade organisations. The general conviction is that conditions have been created for expanding trade and other arrangements between Portugal and Yugoslavia.

LUNS CLAIMS USSR WILL NEGOTIATE ON MEDIUM-RANGE MISSILES

LD031213 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 30 May 80 p 4

[Sytze van der Zee dispatch: "Luns: Soviet Union Wants To Negotiate on Missiles"]

[Text] Brussels, 30 May--NATO Secretary General Luns says he has evidence that the Soviet Union is prepared to negotiate a limitation of medium-range nuclear weapons. This would have to take place within the framework of SALT III. In these negotiations the NATO countries should base themselves on the decision they took at the end of 1979 to modernize their nuclear arsenal. In a conversation with Dutch journalists in Brussels yesterday, Luns was, however, not prepared to reveal where he obtained his information. He gave to understand that the indications are in fact rather vague. Moreover, according to him the Soviet Union will at present deny that it is interested in negotiations. So far the Russians have not or have barely refused NATO's offer of negotiations. According to Luns it is not improbable that they will now adopt a somewhat more conciliatory position on this question. The reason behind this is apparently that by around 1985 the Soviet Union will have reached its peak in the military sphere. Ever larger sums of money have to be pumped into the Russian defense system in order to maintain this military potential. The Russian leaders are concerned about controling this vast expenditure. With regard to the NATO decision to modernize its nuclear weapons Luns said that the Western alliance's deterrent power has again become credible after West Europe had been maneuvered into a position vulnerable to blackmail by the Soviet Union in the past few years.

In his opinion even after a modernization of the NATO nuclear potential it will, however, still be an open question whether a war will ever be fought with nuclear weapons. He was also unable to say whether the United States would be prepared to protect West Europe with nuclear weapons against a Russian attack. However, according to him the Americans still regard Europe as absolutely essential for their defense. At the same time, however, they consider it necessary that doubt should remain in the Kremlin about what the Americans would do in the event of war.

Carter

Luns welcomed President Carter's threat to the Soviet Union that the Americans would not tolerate a Russian military advance toward the oil regions of the Persian Gulf. The NATO secretary general described this as a "stance which promotes peace," in view of the fact that this clearly shows the Soviet Union what the consequences of its action would be. In this connection Luns compared the present situation with 1938. Had the French and British then made it clear to Hitler that action against Czechoslovakia would mean war, World War II would have been prevented. In Luns' opinion the American warning has made a definite impression on the Russian leaders. Moreover these leaders are of a different caliber from Hitler, who was a pathological case. With regard to President Carter, with whom he recently had talks in Washington, Luns said he personally believes that President Carter is too strongly attacked and criticized.

"I do not say that this president is the most energetic of all American presidents or that he has made the most powerful impression on the Allies," Luns said. "However, I find Carter a particularly honest man, without affection, really a person of great stature." With regard to the coming presidential elections in the United States Luns said he thinks that Carter's Republican rival Ronald Reagan will have a good chance. It is true that he is not a man who has thought deeply about foreign policy, but it is extremely important who is in his team. Reagan can be a good president, Luns said, provided he makes somebody like George Bush his vice president and includes former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld in his administration.

With regard to the rather strained relations which have existed between the United States and West Europe for some time, Luns remarked that above all the decision by most West European countries to attend the Olympic games in Moscow has antagonized the Americans.

He said he failed to understand sports officials who disregard the events in Afghanistan and the human rights question. According to him there are reports which show that the decision of each country which does not intend to take part in the games had made a deep impression on the Russians. In this connection he expressed strong criticism of France which was one of the first West European countries to come out in favor of taking part. He also criticized the role played by French President Giscard d'Estaing who did not consider it necessary to consult the Western allies about his talks with Brezhnev before they took place. FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who is to visit Moscow at the end of June, has taken this trouble. Although Luns said he does not expect these Russian-West German talks to produce much, he said he understands the FRG's position. He went on to describe the situation in Yugoslavia as fairly positive. He said it is "reassuring" that cohesion has been maintained in the country. However, we must watch that the Soviet Union does not attack Romania now or at a later date in order to subjuguate Yugoslavia afterward.

Step Down

Luns was not prepared, however, to say anything about when he will step down as secretary general. Should he decide to leave, he will first inform the NATO ambassadors in Brussels. Even then he will not leave immediately. His predecessor, the Italian Brosio, remained in office for 14 months after his resignation. Luns said he thinks it would be a good thing if his successor were to be given a fixed term of office of say 4 or 5 years. He has already been secretary general for 8 years.

ITALIAN DEFENSE MINISTER ADDRESSES TREATY SEMINAR

LD031459 Rome AVANTI in Italian 30 May 80 p 7

[Unattributed report on Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio 29 May remarks at Atlantic Treaty Association seminar in Rome: "How To Respond to New Threats to NATO"]

[Text] The threats posed to NATO by the regional instability in Southwest Asia, an area close to its "borders," demand serious reflection on the Alliance's duties and the character which the solidarity and cohesion among its members must adopt. These threats are not only military but also politicoeconomic (suffice it to consider oil) and must be combated with adequate measures. This was the scenario outlined at the Atlantic Treaty Association seminar which ended in Rome yesterday evening following 2 days of debate and to which Defense Minister Lagorio made an important explanatory contribution. Proceeding precisely from the innovative nature of the threat now facing NATO, Lagorio indicated what the Italian Government believes are the tasks to be performed. If outside NATO's "boundaries" there emerges any threat which the Alliance as such is unable to meet, then political friendship must come into play: The problems must therefore be examined jointly by the free and sovereign countries. If there are any initiatives to be taken, Lagorio stressed, consultations are obligatory: Only thus will solidarity become operative and the Alliance's strength be shown. Lagorio also observed that NATO's duties are not limited to strengthening its defense, but that NATO considers it necessary to leave the way open to the detente policy; every opportunity must be explored to avoid the worst, he said, in the awareness that our strength allows us to do so and that it is our duty to make every effort to protect our peoples' peace.

The reports and debate at the seminar revealed on the one hand the worrying strengthening of the Soviet Navy (the largest, but not the most powerful, in the world, Colonel Mason [not further identified] pointed out) and on the other, the gravity of the threat to energy sources vital to the West (Ambassador Ortona) [Italian diplomatist]. This demands greater solidarity and increased vigilance, without ever abandoning the quest for a political solution to a not exclusively military crisis.

GDR'S SINDERMANN SPEAKS ON DETENTE, REUNIFICATION

AU031243 Vienna Domestic Service in German 3 Jun 80 1000 GMT

[Edgar Sterbens interview with Horst Sindermann, president of the GDR People's Chamber, currently on an official visit in Vienna; date, place not given--recorded]

[Text] At a time of increased international tension one can note that the relationship between the FRG and GDR seems to be relatively good and free of tension. President Sindermann, what reason do you see for the continued existence of a climate of detente between the two German states, and what does the term "detente" mean to the GDR in its relations to the other Germany? Is detente--analogous to the Soviet doctrine of coexistence--the continuation of the ideological argument with different methods, or does the term "detente" mean more to the GDR in its relationship with the FRG, that is to say, a better understanding, a moving closer together?

[Answer] The question is very simple. We say that the GDR's relationship with the FRG has a special status for us. We proceed from the fact that the two German states form the borderline between NATO and the Warsaw Pact, and a large number of the most powerful and probably most dangerous weapons are accumulated at this state border. That is to say nothing must be permitted to happen at this border, otherwise a tremendous aggravation of the situation, especially in Europe, would be triggered off. That is why we have intensified relations with the FRG especially in recent months; that is to say especially because the situation on an international scale is complicated, we must eliminate all the imponderables [unwegbarkeiten] in our relationship with the FRG, and must not permit a hardening and aggravation of the situation. Our position is that after two world wars, war must never start again from German soil.

Naturally there are divergent views and opinions. You see, NATO's December missile decision provides for the deployment of missiles in the FRG on a large scale, which undoubtedly aims at threatening our Warsaw Pact states. Anyone can build missiles. We could do it too. This does not pose any problem. One would only have to agree on what on wants: whether one wants to destroy each other, or whether one wants to live and cooperate with the other side. For us, there is only one alternative, that is, cooperation. The fact that there are ideological differences of opinion is not new, not earth-shattering either. But on the state level, in states' relationships with one another, there must be an atmosphere of trust between us.

[Question] There is an election campaign underway in the FRG for the Bundestag elections in the fall. Again and again political circles are using the term "the reunification of Germany." What is your view on this term--what can reunification mean to you?

[Answer] I do not think that, given the existence of two German states with different social systems, there can be any talk today of reunification. Moreover, I should like to ask who in Europe would be interested in it? For us in the GDR this would mean either that we would have to fundamentally transform our socialist social system, or that the FRG would have to transform its existing system, the capitalist system. One must proceed from goals which are real. These two are not real. Thus let us push the topic aside and work together with good and normal relations.

[Question] The GDR, along with the other Warsaw Pact states, is advocating a world summit conference on the improvement of detente and on disarmament. What concrete results can be expected from such a world summit conference?

[Answer] First of all we would expect that the treaties already signed between the Soviet Union and the United States, such as SALT II, would be transformed into reality; second, on the basis of such a confidence-building measure one could arrive at further measures, such as disarmament in Europe by the suspension of the NATO missiles decision and the holding of negotiations; third, it would mean a great economic relief if this arms race could be stopped. To put it in a nutshell, we say if one does not talk to each other, if things are permitted to run their own course, then the armaments spiral will rise to dangerous heights beyond control. Judging by the talks I have had during the last months, there is interest everywhere in arriving at a lessening of tensions by reasonable disarmament steps.

[Question] The United States and NATO counter this by saying that the East has a large edge in nuclear weapons--in medium-range missiles for example in Europe--and that the NATO decisions are only intended to close the gap.

[Answer] I am familiar with this argument, but see it this way: Not long ago, Mr Brezhnev and Mr Carter practically adopted the SALT II agreement here in Vienna. There was no talk then that one or the other side had an edge in strategic or medium-range weapons; this argument came up after the Vienna negotiations. Why, one asks oneself, was SALT II concluded if it means a disadvantage for the West? I do not believe in this reasoning; you don't know and I don't know the number of strategic weapons existing in the world. Anyone who pretends to know it doesn't know it either but needs it as an argument in order to step up rearmament. What is all this talk about rearmament, closing the armament gap? The proposals not to continue to rearm at all in the medium-range field must be accepted.

ECONOMY COMMISSION WITH ARGENTINA HOLDS FIRST MEETING

[Summary] On 27 and 28 May the Austrian-Argentinian joint commission for economic and industrial cooperation held its first meetings in Vienna. The Austrian delegation was headed by Trade Minister Josef Staribacher, the Argentinian delegation by Economic Minister Jose Alfredo Martinez de Hoz. During his stay in Austria, Minister Martinez de Hoz was received by President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger and Vice Chancellor Hannes Androsch.

In their opening statements both ministers confirmed their government's interest in further developing cooperation between the two countries on the basis of reciprocity and mutual benefit. Both sides noted that, although the goods exchange between the two countries has generally expanded since 1975, it is still relatively moderate. Both countries agree that joint endeavors would be necessary to bring about a further expansion of their trade. In this context the Austrian delegation submitted a list of Argentinian projects in which Austrian firms are particularly interested. During the Argentinian delegation's stay in Austria, a seminar was held in Vienna on capital investments in Argentina and on technology transfer to Argentina. Representatives of Austrian companies used the opportunity to discuss with the Argentinian delegation specific questions of interest to them. On 28 May Staribacher and Minister Martinez de Hoz signed a protocol on the first session of the joint commission.

2-DAY SCHMIDT VISIT TO MOSCOW BEGINNING 30 JUN CONFIRMED

LD040816 Hamburg DPA in German 0712 GMT 04 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher are to go to Moscow on 30 June for a 2-day visit. This definite date was confirmed this morning by the Federal Press Office in Bonn. TASS had already given these dates on Tuesday. Schmidt and Genscher have been invited by the Soviet leadership. No further details were given.

POLISH AMBASSADOR BRIEFS GENSCHER ON WARSAW PACT MEETING

LD031418 Hamburg DPA in German 1349 GMT 03 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher was briefed today by Polish Ambassador Jan Chylinski on the recent Warsaw Pact meeting in Warsaw. Genscher promised the ambassador that he would thoroughly examine the conference documents handed to him. According to the Foreign Ministry, in his hour-long talk with Chylinski Genscher stressed the particular importance which Bonn attaches to the Madrid followup conference on European security to be held this autumn. Genscher expressed the hope that it will lead to a concrete and substantial mandate for a European disarmament conference.

ISRAELI AMBASSADOR SCORES EUROPEAN 'INITIATIVE' ON MIDEAST

LD031544 Hamburg DPA in German 1503 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--Israeli Ambassador to the Federal Republic Yohanan Meroz today spoke out against a new European initiative on the Middle East. In an interview with Deutschlandfunk he said Europeans had not taken part in the Camp David agreement--"the only existing peace reality." That was why people in Israel were displeased that Europe wished to intervene, without prior consultation, in a process which it had failed to foster in the past. The ambassador was referring to European plans to define the European position on the Middle East at the European summit meeting in Venice. On Monday Israeli Premier Menahem Begin sharply attacked the European intention to issue such a statement.

GOVERNMENT CONDEMNS BOMB ATTACKS ON WEST BANK

LD040933 Hamburg DPA in German 0911 GMT 04 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government has strongly condemned the bomb attacks in [the] West [Bank of] Jordan in which two Arab mayors sustained serious injuries. A Foreign Ministry spokesman stressed in Bonn today that the government expressed its deep sympathy to the victims and their families. The perpetrators of these inhuman attacks are perpetuating the cycle of violence in the territories occupied by Israel and are diminishing the prospects of a peaceful settlement of the Middle East conflict.

Arab Envoys' Appeal

LD031635 Hamburg DPA in German 1529 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--Following the attacks on Palestinian mayors in [the] occupied West [Bank of] Jordan the Arab ambassadors accredited in Bonn today appealed to the Federal Government "to condemn the Israeli attacks and compel Israel to end its occupation and evacuate all occupied territorids." The statement was issued jointly with the PLO representative.

It says that the attacks provided fresh evidence of the fact "that terror against the indigenous Palestinian population is an integral part of Zionist policy." At a time when its autonomy talks with Egypt have failed, Israel wants to purge the occupied West Bank of politicians who have always fought for the Palestinians' right to self-determination. "The attacks on the mayors can also be seen as the Israeli response to all attempts at a political solution, including the proposed initiative of the European Community," the statement says.

FINANCE MINISTER VOICES MISGIVINGS ABOUT EC COMPROMISE

DW030908 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0548 GMT 2 Jun 80

[Heribert Schwan interview with Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer in Bonn; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Herbert Wehner has declared that we are not a cow to be milked. DM2.5 billion in additional costs to be borne by Bonn for the European Community are involved. Why is it that Herbert Wehner had to announce your rejection? Why did you wait until yesterday to make your position known?

[Answer] Well, the way you put it is not quite right. I declared over television as early as Friday night that I could agree with this arrangement only under the condition that proposals are submitted at the same time to cover the additional funds and that, besides, I would like to know what this means for Europe now. I am grateful to the SPD floorleader who--jointly with the federal chancellor, by the way--has often given me support whenever financial solidarity was at stake.

[Question] Did the chancellor support you in this particular case as well? Have you had contact with the chancellor?

[Answer] Why, of course! To date the federal chancellor and the federal finance minister have always been in agreement. This will also hold true for the future.

[Question] The German negotiators in Brussels were Federal Foreign Minister Genscher and his minister of state, Klaus von Dohnanyi, SPD. How could they approve the compromise without having had the agreement of the federal chancellor, the Cabinet?

[Answer] This is exactly the point. It was not approval that was voiced. What was said was this: I agree under the proviso that my government will agree as well. This is a procedure which is customary in Brussels. You agree ad referendum. The Federal Government will decide Wednesday whether it will agree and under what conditions with a view to Europe and to other interrelations at home.

[Question] Didn't Bonn quarters consider the question of how to finance the DM2.5 billion in extra costs before Genscher and Dohnanyi approved the result of the negotiations?

[Answer] The federal chancellor made an offer which went far beyond what I had envisaged in the budget for these purposes. I put aside about DM600 or DM700 million for these purposes as a latent reserve. It is necessary to discuss the question of where the DM500 or DM600 million will come from which I have said I don't know how to finance. After all, this is not a new position on my part. I have financed DM2 billion for the supplementary budget through cuts, and I still have to raise DM2.8 billion by way of expenditure cuts. I really do not know where to get this money. Those who want to hand it over to Europe must say what sacrifices need to be made, because I will not approve any increase in net borrowing or any postponement of the tax alleviations for employees and workers in 1981.

[Question] What you demand then are proposals by the advocates of the EC compromise to cover these funds. Being the treasurer of the Federal Republic, you have already pondered the question of how to raise this DM2.5 billion. You just said that tax hikes in the 1980 election year are out of the question. Tax alleviations are planned. State borrowing is likewise impossible. Well, in the face of all this I as an outsider cannot but think that the Cabinet will have to vote against this compromise.

[Answer] Unless reasonable proposals are submitted which will be supported by all. But it is impossible to tie the Federal Republic down from without and force the poor federal finance minister to run around for many weeks to round up the funds. All this can be done only with the support of all Cabinet members who, simultaneously with their decision to do something additional for Europe, also have to say where the cuts need to be made, advance any additional demands and also explain what the agricultural policy of the European Community will then be like. After all, we must know who is to make sacrifices and in which fields, and for what these sacrifices are to be made.

[Question] You say that you demand the solidarity of your Cabinet colleagues. How about the defense budget and the social budget? Is it possible that cuts will be made in pensions?

[Answer] No, I believe these are legal commitments and that we cannot try to make cuts. That is my problem. The federal budget this year amounts to DM216 billion. About DM24 billion is financed by credits. That makes sense because it serves to support the economic situation and because a certain minimum of credit must always be used to finance long-term investments. But I do not see why we ought to use credits to safeguard the employment situation. This is why I am against it.

[Question] The key word is: tax package. Do you see a chance to make a change here?

[Answer] Well, you see, the federal finance minister gets just DM42.50 out of DM100 in income or wage tax revenues. DM57.50 is paid to laender and communities. I am alone in supporting Brussels. Deductions are made from value added tax revenues. But the laender do not bear their share so I am supposed to pay DM100 to Brussels although I only get DM42.50 from every DM100 in additional burdens levied on people. That suggestion is not in line with reality. There has to be a different solution.

[Question] Do I understand you correctly that you are demanding more money from the laender? Do I understand you correctly that you are demanding sacrifices from the laender with regard to the distribution of the value added tax between the federal government and the laender?

[Answer] Well, all right. That is an old discussion. The decision to be made on Wednesday is not about a shift in the tax package. The Cabinet can no longer decide on that, it went to the mediation committee long ago. There will be no new distribution between the Federal Government and the laender. That is impossible. There will be no change in the law, such as curtailment of services of one kind or another. The money will have to come from a very limited sphere of the budget, a budget which has been in operation for 5 months now. A reduction of DM2.8 billion has to be made, and now an additional DM500 to DM600 million will have to be cut and made available for Europe. That will be a very difficult operation. The whole Cabinet must make it.

[Question] The German press is talking about a severe crisis in Bonn, a coalition crisis, even a government crisis. How do you assess this characterization?

[Answer] Ah, you know, the German mass media are very much oriented toward conflicts. Every conflict is inflated into a crisis. Every discussion is made into a conflict. I do not listen to that any more. This is actually a very normal discussion. We have a budget which we have already greatly curtailed. Everything in the budget is reasonable. We cut off an additional DM2 billion, and did so with a heavy heart. Now we have to do something additional for Europe. Those who want to do this have to simultaneously say which sacrifices must be made. This cannot be left to the federal finance minister to handle alone.

[Question] The CDU demands that you either accept the Brussels compromise or resign.

[Answer] You know, the CDU--it ought to tell the German people who its finance minister would be. Mr Strauss refuses to present a government team. We will find a reasonable line among ourselves. If we--as the CDU demanded--were to lower taxes in 1980 I do not know how the CDU would manage in such a situation.

[Question] So there is not a trace of resignation, of quitting?

[Answer] No, not at all! Others will resign before I do.

[Question] Whom do you mean, the FDP politicians?

[Answer] No, I much rather have the candidate for chancellor in mind.

GOVERNMENT DISAPPOINTED WITH UK OVER IRAN BOYCOTT

DW031313 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 3 Jun 80 p 13

[Bonn correspondent report signed K.B.: "The Iranian Boycott Is Being Dodged"]

[Text] Bonn, 2 June--The decision of the European Community to boycott Iran economically is obviously being dodged to a greater and greater extent. It was learned from well-informed circles that a group of experts from the nine member countries have been baffled in Brussels by the fact that the embargo is growing softer and softer. It was further said that Great Britain is ignoring the boycott more than expected from the initial information about the London sanction decisions made last week. The Federal Government, however, is not afraid that other governments will follow the British regulations on making exceptions. Individual governments indicated, however, that they will probably not fully comply with the restrictions involving exports, transit trade, transport and capital movement. It seems that Italy does not have in mind introducing a transport embargo to Iran. Belgium also is leaning toward excepting a part of the services from the sanctions.

On 19 May the British Government deviated for the first time from the decision of the foreign ministers to make all business after the taking of hostages in Tehran on 4 November subject to approval. London decided last week that all contracts up to 30 May can be fulfilled. The approval procedures that have gone into effect on this date, however, have at the same time been softened up considerably by clauses granting exceptions. Capital movement and other services are not subject to the embargo. Contracts concluded prior to 30 May can be complemented and prolonged. New contracts with Iran will be permitted if they are based on past business relations. There are also indications that London does not want to hinder evasive deals to be concluded by the other partner countries with Iran via Great Britain.

The Federal Government is not keeping its disappointment a secret with regard to the new British exceptions from the joint European embargo. Most of the criticism is directed toward the fact that the British Government, which at first acted most strongly for an embargo against Iran, is now dodging the sanctions.

The Federal Government leaves no doubt that it will adhere to the sanction decisions of the foreign ministers. In the meantime, the foreign trade regulation dealing with Iranian sanctions has been published in the Federal Bulletin.

On 29 May the Federal Bank announced the measures for capital movement. It is still open, however, as to how Iran contracts in the "grey zone" will be handled. The group of experts in the European Community is looking for common regulations particularly in this respect. Deals concluded between 4 November and 23 May are involved. That is the day the Federal Government introduced the two regulations for sanctions against Iran.

At the Federal Office for Trade, which must license all exports to Iran, numerous applications have arrived for the approval of business contracts for the November through May period. At the moment the firms can hardly expect such applications to be approved. Bonn has hinted in connection with a query that applications made now will "fall through."

EXPORTS FLOURISH DESPITE SLACKENING WORLD ECONOMY

DW271250 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 26 May 80 pp 44-46

[Text] German exports flourish despite a decline in the world economic situation. Successful foreign traders do not export products any more; they export "solutions to problems."

The Hamburg foreign trade firm Theodor Wille was able to offer advice when Brazilian trade partners wanted to export powdered coffee in addition to raw coffee. Wille not only supplied the Brazilians with the whole powdered coffee factory, it also took over the sale of the soluble coffee in Europe.

The Hamburg firm Illies and Co, Limited, helped when the Saudi Arabians, rich in petrodollars, did not feel content any more with the traditional bazaar trade. The export enterprise set up a supermarket chain in the Middle Eastern Bedouin state, simultaneously seeing to trained foreign personnel.

The Hamburg foreign trade firm Jos. Hansen and Sons tapped rivers, had wells drilled and built water purification plants in order to supply towns and villages in Nigeria, Kenya, Ghana and Ethiopia with fresh water. The export firm trained local technicians in maintaining the installation while simultaneously supplying mobile workshops for repair and maintenance work.

"The large foreign trade enterprises," said Hans-Juergen Mueller, manager of the Association of Hamburg Exporters, in explaining such sales successes, "do not export products, but the solution to problems."

There is no shortage of still unsolved problems. In the past months the German export economy received so many orders that even optimists were surprised.

Despite a slow deterioration of the world economic situation, industrial trusts and trade firms were able to increase their export business in the initial months of this year by 13 percent in real terms, that means after subtracting price increases, compared with the same period last year.

Two very important export branches, the electrical and the chemical industries, had considerable gains. From December to February Siemens, AEG [General Electric Company] and Bosch and Co. scored 17 percent more foreign orders than in the year before. In the telecommunications technology field foreign orders even jumped by 73 percent. "The situation in the electrical field", explained Dieter Rath of the Central Association of the Electrochemical Industry with regard to the good economic situation, "usually lags half a year behind the general economic situation."

Things look even better in the chemical industry. With an export growth rate of 30.5 percent the chemical trusts in the first 2 months of this year considerably surpassed the export plus of last year (19.8 percent). The five leading German economic research institutes assume in their joint spring evaluation that the oil price increase and the tense world political situation have contributed to this fact. The ordering parties expect price increases and place their orders at an earlier date. If the economic research experts are right with this theory, the strong export boom will soon begin to slacken. But the stack of orders is still thick: The Cologne Institute of German Economy expects an export increase rate of 6 to 8 percent in the current year.

Even these rates of increase will not be able to prevent the German balance of trade from continuing to decline even deeper into the red this year, particularly because of the expensive oil imports and high amounts spent by tourists. A deficit of more than DM20 billion is expected for 1980. But after all, German exporters will regain some of the lost territory on international markets: World trade as a whole this year will probably expand only half as rapidly as foreign trade sales of German enterprises.

"The competitive position of the German economy in the world is still relatively good and resistant," assured Franz Schoser, chief manager of the Federation of Chambers of German Industry and Commerce (DIHT). Schoser's association asked the 40 German foreign trade chambers some weeks ago about the export chances of German firms. The result: "Only German goods which are technically sophisticated have chances of staying in the market and expanding it."

In the machine-building branch, for example, this has led to a situation where only electronically controlled machine tools or fully integrated packing lines are German export hits and not simple lathes. Germany's shipbuilders hardly stand a chance of selling simple bulk freighters and tankers. Instead international demand is for cable-laying ships, floating fish factories or drill platform parts from German shipyards.

In international competition German tire manufacturers have fallen far behind. Instead, electronic fuel injection installations or high-performance batteries "Made in Germany" are sales hits on the world market.

Neither does cheap German mass steel have any future. The domestic steel producers instead have a strong share in the international fine steel and large-pipe business.

But above all complete production systems or infrastructure installations of all types are German export successes. Thus the AEG-Telefunken Company early this month signed a preliminary contract on the construction of a color television factory in China. The Chinese intend to take over the PAL [phase alternation line] color TV system of AEG for their national television network.

The Germans can switch to expansion again in the export of installations to the OPEC states as well. As a consequence of the EC embargo decision of the weekend before last the formerly most important customer among the OPEC states, Iran, has been nearly completely lost as a buyer of German export goods. Yet the increase in the oil prices since last year has been channeling so much surplus foreign exchange into the coffers of the rest of the OPEC countries that these states, after an import stagnation in 1978-79, will increasingly place orders abroad again.

Following the often planless orders for factories and high-rise buildings during the import boom from 1974 to 1977, OPEC countries such as Saudi Arabia are now making more purposeful investments. They buy garbage incinerators and water purufication plants, irrigation, customs handling, and short-distance transportation systems, slaughterhouses, refrigerating installations, and hospitals.

German training workshops above all prove to be export successes in countries that are not very industrialized as yet. The German suppliers hope to remain in business on a long-term basis as a result of this vocational training export. People who learn on German machines, the exporters think, will later also prefer to buy German makes. Apart from the German industrial trusts big tradint companies such as the Hamburg Coutinho, Caro and Co., and Muenchmeyer, Petersen and Co. have long included complete production systems and facilities on their sales lists. Thus successful traders no longer simply deliver only machines, cement and steel. They advise their customers and do their planning for them, map out profitability studies and trade down the most suitable supplier companies. They supervise the construction work, train the labor required for the operation, and in some cases they even take charge of the management in the initial phase of operation.

The Germans could be selling even more if many Third World countries did not simply lack the funds. Countries like Pakistan, India, Jamaica and nearly all African states can pay for the expensive oil only with massive credit aid from foreign countries. Additional or other imports are hardly conceivable. "Previously it was only at 3-year intervals that a country became due for debt funding," export association manager Mueller recalls. "Today we have up to eight per year."

STRAUSS ANGRY AT CDU LEADER, THREATENS TO RESIGN

[Unattributed report]

[Text] Bonn/Munich--The telephones were running hot yesterday between the party headquarters of the CSU and the CDU. CSU chief Strauss complained bitterly to CDU chief Kohl that:

1. CDU Secretary General Heiner Geissler has again dissociated himself from a Strauss statement; and that

2. The announcement of Strauss' team of ministers, planned for Friday, became known prematurely through an indiscretion by the CDU Presidium (Stoltenberg, Kiep, Dregger, Woerner, Zimmermann, Geissler, Maier and Mrs Wex).

Strauss demanded that Geissler retract his statements, threatening to resign as the Union's candidate for Chancellor.

The quarrels over Geissler (see DIE WELT of 3 June) had the following history: The CDU secretary general asked the SPD in a press conference to dissociate itself in the interest of a fair election campaign from a STERN article by Henri Nannen defaming Strauss. When Geissler pointed out that he would dissociate himself if a comparable agitational article were written against Schmidt, he was confronted with a quotation from the Berlin party speech of Strauss: "The part of Helmut Schmidt's Hamburg speech in which he said that one should use the next 3 years for disarmament negotiations was written in Moscow."

Thereupon Geissler answered the journalists who had cited the Strauss quotation that he did not consider this half sentence to be correct, that Strauss meant it symbolically and that it was not comparable with the STERN article.

Strauss obviously considered and considers Geissler's remark to be disloyal and a new attempt by Adenauer House [CDU headquarters] to counter his election campaign style. Geissler's remark that he wanted to point out the "symbolic character" of the Strauss remark for the sake of mutual fairness did not help much in Munich.

CDU chief Kohl calmed the waves with a press statement saying that Geissler did not dissociate himself from the Strauss speech. Full agreement exists between the CDU and the CSU in the judgment that the SPD and Schmidt "are weakening the Alliance and inflicting grave damage to the interests of the Federal Republic" with their policy. With his speeches in Hamburg and Essen on deploying medium-range missiles, Schmidt has maneuvered the Federal Republic into a "dubious foreign policy situation." This is more evidence that the chancellor is forced to yield to the "Moscow faction" of his party.

Strauss replied to Kohl's statement with a press statement as well: "I welcome the statement by Helmut Kohl. In doing this he confirmed that the CDU without ifs or buts, just like the CDU delegates at the Berlin party congress, has fully agreed to and supports my Berlin party congress speech and the analysis of Schmidt's policy it contained."

"Helmut Kohl and I are agreed that Moscow's invitation to Helmut Schmidt was engineered by Herbert Wehner and that Schmidt's proposals, by which he called the deployment of medium-range missiles into question in his Hamburg speech, are part of the game behind the scenes."

"It is regrettable that a sneaky question by an SPD reporter at the CDU secretary general's press conference and the answer given by Mr Geissler have led to a wrong impression. The CDU and the CSU have every reason to avoid being deceived by auxilitary troops of the SPD and misused to confuse the public. The political statements by Helmut Kohl and myself are congruent."

It is unknown whether Strauss also blames Geissler for the leaks about his list of ministers. DIE WELT has learned in this connection that Geissler allegedly warned as late as Friday against adopting the names in the CDU Presidium and releasing them to the press. "Something like this just cannot be kept secret in Bonn for that long." Geissler was to be proved right in this view. Yet all who know him doubt that he, of all people, is supposed to have deprived the party of the surprise effect on Friday. The same people also consider it improbable that Geissler will retract his remark about the symbolic Strauss, a remark which is now criticized but which was well meant.

New trouble between Munich and Bonn is looming ahead as a result of a remark made in Kiel. A member of the Kiel State Chancellery said yesterday: "Through an indiscretion Stoltenberg has been veritably nailed to the cross of the south."

This representation is contradicted by Bonn and Munich alike. Stoltenberg has agreed to go election campaigning with Strauss. He is envisaged to be vice chancellor and to take charge of the Ministry of Economics.

People at CDU headquarters hope that the whole excitement will soon die down. At least since the Berlin party congress the CDU has been backing Strauss "cohesively without and solidly within." The core of his team also includes Kohl who, reports say, will remain CDU/CSU floorleader after 5 October. Beyond the "nine of Strauss" the minister presidents Ernst Albrecht, Bernhard Vogel, Lothar Spaeth and Werner Zeyer are supposed to underline the capability of the CDU/CSU to govern.

FRANCOIS-PONCET URGES 'POLITICAL SOLUTION' TO AFGHAN SITUATION

LD031227 Paris LE MONDE in French 31 May 80 p 18

[Unattributed report: "Francois-Poncet: Participating in a Dialogue Does Not Mean Giving Way"]

[Excerpt] "Participating in a dialogue does not means giving way," Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet stated on 29 May during a National Assembly Foreign Affairs Committee session, with reference to the Giscard d'Estaing-Brezhnev talks.

According to a communique issued by the committee, the minister restated that the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan is "unacceptable" but added that "a political solution is called for."

And the communique continues: "Francois-Poncet emphasized the national and popular nature of the Afghan resistance. In his talk with Brezhnev the president insisted on the need to embark on a path leading to a genuine political settlement, on the basis of a withdrawal of the Soviet troops in Afghanistan, which would enable the Afghan people freely to determine their own future."

ISLAMIC CONFERENCE LEADER 'OPTIMISTIC' ABOUT AFGHANISTAN COMMITTEE

[Unattributed report: "Islamic Conference Secretary General Received at Elysee"]

[Text] During a short visit to Paris on 29 May, the Islamic Conference organization secretary general, Habib Chatti, had a talk with President Giscard d'Estaing. "We want to associate Europe with a settlement of international problems, especially those of Palestine and Afghanistan," he stated on leaving the Elysee.

He said that he had explained the results of the Islamic conference to the head of state. "France's attitude is of very great importance to Islamic countries," he stated. "First, because it has always been constructive and appreciated by Muslim countries and, second, because France plays an important role in the EC."

Furthermore, Mr Chatti seemed "optimistic" about the chances of the ad hoc committee set up at the end of the Islamic conference with a view to seeking a solution to the Afghan problem, together with Kabul and Moscow. "The committee's task is very difficult but not impossible," he added. "The USSR would like to extricate itself from this problem and must take the opinion of 41 Muslim countries into account."

LE MONDE VIEWS COMPROMISE ON UK'S EEC BUDGET

[Editorial: "Toward a Two-Speed Europe?"]

[Text] London is still brooding over its success within the European Community, taking longer than Paris to give its opinion of the compromise reached on 30 May in Brussels and casting doubts on the totality of the victory via press commentaries. Mrs Thatcher can even afford herself the luxury of settling it herself at the forthcoming European Council session in Venice.

However, Britain has obtained a substantial reduction in its financial contribution to the Community budget for 3 years without endangering its scope for supplying itself from outside the Community. By reducing its bill the eight, including France, have effectively freed Britain from the dues envisaged by the Treaty of Rome normally to be paid by those who do not buy sufficient European products.

The budgetary and agricultural compromise has been greeted with relief, especially in France. In the event of failure or of Mrs Thatcher's refusal, substitute national measures were ready; but Mr Mehaignerie is pleased at not having to impose a direct aid system on the producer because of the dangers this would have represented for the future of the Common Agricultural Policy. In terms of value France sells two-thirds of its production within the Community; the exorbitant increase in revenue support resulting from an abandonment of Community policy (which would have involved the sale of our produce at world prices) would otherwise have cost the taxpayers more than the eight's present to the British.

To save the Comman Agricultural Policy in the short term the Community's finance rules have thus been waived. But nothing has been settled for all that. The 3-year exception obtained by London would only really be a British victory if the long-term change introduced to the rule on the EEC's resources results in their being increased. On the contrary, there is a great risk that the questioning of the Community rules will end in the limiting of Europe's financial solidarity and, consequently, in a setback to the European edifice. On the agricultural level there is nothing to prevent London, at the end of this preferential period, from making fresh thrusts at the Common Agricultural Policy, by vetoing new price increases, for example.

The annoyance at the British blackmail, which leads the Nine to sterile bargaining, is growing. Does the solution lie in linking future Community budget discussions to those on agricultural prices so as to avoid contradictory and often demagogic stances? Several European commissioners want to propose this, against the advice of Mr Jenkins, it seems.

Apart from that, should we not admit the evidence, namely that Britain is an island which is not moored to the Continent, and draw from this the conclusions which are emerging for the formation of a two-speed Europe? In the words attributed to Mr Barre, with "a hard nucleus and a nebula around it"?

IRAQI EMBASSY ATTACKED BY UNKNOWN ASSAILANTS

LD041032 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1000 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Summary] A group of terrorists have burst into the Iraqi Embassy building in Rome. An Iraqi security official was killed.

At about 1100 a group of people burst into the Iraqi Embassy. The nationality of the assailants is unknown. They split into two groups. One, firing their guns, penetrated the building. An embassy employee was hit by four shots and was immediately taken to the hospital. Another was killed. The second group went in through a side entrance and placed a bomb on the (?third) floor. This bomb was removed just a few minutes ago. The assailants have escaped, one in the direction of the Matteotti Bridge over the river, and are being actively hunted. At the moment the embassy building is surrounded by the carabinieri and the police. Members of the Iraqi security service are in the building. That is all for the moment. Back to the studio.

Here is a news flash: A man has been arrested. He is believed to be one of the terrorists.

Further Details

LD041134 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1100 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Summary] There is alarm and tension in Rome over the commando terrorist attack on the Iraqi Embassy. A device left by the commando group inside the embassy building has been defused. One person was killed and two were wounded in an exchange of fire. The area is surrounded by the carabinieri and the police. A dark-skinned man, who could be one of the terrorists, has been arrested. Aldo Bello reconstructs the dramatic events:

Just before 1100 two terrorists burst into the Iraqi Embassy. One went in through the main entrance, firing his gun and killing the ambassador's chauffeur and wounding a telephone operator. A security service member opened fire with a submachinegun and seriously wounded the terrorist, who is now receiving hospital treatment. A second terrorist entered through another entrance. (?After an exchange) of fire he escaped, leaving his gun and a suitcase at the embassy entrance. In the suitcase there were four TNT devices with a timing mechanism set for 1200. The device was defused on the second attempt by Italian explosive experts 2 minutes before the time set for the explosion. This second terrorist could be the dark-skinned man arrested half an hour ago and detained at the (Tratevere) police station. At this moment the embassy is surrounded by the carabinieri and the police. The inside of the embassy is controlled by the Iraqi security service members. The nationality of the assailants is still unknown.

PSI'S CRAXI REJECTS PCI CRITICISM OF POLICIES

LD031431 Rome AVANTI in Italian 30 May 80 pp 1-2

[Unattributed report on Italian Socialist Party (PSI) Secretary Bettino Craxi undated interview with LA NAZIONE and IL RESTO DEL CARLINO: "Reply to PCI, Point by Point"]

[Excerpts] Socialist Secretary Bettino Craxi has granted an interview to the dailies LA NAZIONE and IL RESTO DEL CARLINO in which he discusses all the topics of the election campaign now approaching the final straight before the 8 June election.

The first question concerns [PCI Secretary General] Berlinguer's charges that the PSI permitted the formation of a "weak and dangerous" government.

"The government," Craxi says, "can depend on a parliamentary majority, unlike its predecessor. It has yet to earn itself esteem but it has done nothing to discredit itself. Dangerous? This is an absurdity. Dangerous for whom? The government is not dominated by the Christian Democratic Party [DC] in any way. It is a balanced coalition with strong Socialist representation, I am responsible for facilitating its formation. My concern was to prevent a void and a paralysis, which would indeed have been dangerous. Nobody put forward any specific alternatives, other than merely hypothetical ones."

[Question] Berlinguer is urging from the PSI "and the DC left a unity of action which will lead to the national unity government so necessary for changing our country." But can we be sure that the PSI and PCI can reach agreement on how to change Italy? In any case, are you willing to acknowledge that the political crisis must return to the dilemma of either a government with the PCI or no government at all (and early elections)?

[Answer] At least in domestic policy the PCI and PSI diverge more on political action methods than on programs, on which there are often considerable convergences and possibilities of convergence. As for the rest, I believe exactly the opposite. Indeed, this is how we have behaved in view of the PCI's insistence on the options of government or opposition. No government, early elections? They are hypotheses that must not even be considered. The system has already suffered serious damage. It is not in a position to undergo further traumatic trials.

[Question] Do you feel partly responsible for the government's actions which mark "the most blatant return to unacceptable practices of distributing offices, in cases ranging from the National Hydrocarbons Agency [ENI] to Italian Radio and Television [RAI] and the bank appointments?

[Answer] The government's decisions observed the requisite criteria of professional qualifications and competence. Nobody has challenged this. I have not heard one single serious challenge to the new managers from within the ENI, the RAI or the banks. In any case I have never shared the extraordinary opinion that a body is democratic if a certain person is in it and no longer democratic when he is not.

[Question] Do you believe that it was acceptable for the PCI to accuse the government including Socialists of "indifference in the economic field at the very moment when the lira crisis is worsening?"

[Answer] The charge of indifference seems to me to be another of the exaggerations in this harsh election polemic. If the charge had been of uncertainty in deciding the best methods, I might even understand it. The problems are complex and demand the contribution of many responsible parties.

[Question] Is it true that the PSI actively concurs with the implementation of a foreign policy--ranging from the Olympic boycott to the sanctions against Iran and the measures to strengthen NATO--so concerned with "servilely backing all Carter's initiatives" as to compromise "the country's autonomy and independence"?

[Answer] "Servile" is an offensive term. I repeat that this is the language of the fifties. It is consistent with the charges of "cowardice" made by (Social Democratic Secretary] Pietro Longo. If you want to take issue over the sanctions against Iran, then you must do so with the European "Nine." In anything, Italy's role within the European Community was a moderating one. [paragraph continues]

As for the Olympics, the Italian Government has adopted a stance close to that adopted by the only Socialist-led West European government, a pondered and reasonable stance, accompanied by reasonable advice which the Italian National Olympic Committee rejected, putting forward not entirely convincing arguments. There have already been sufficient polemics on the measures to strengthen NATO. They are needed to reestablish in the European theater a balance which the Soviet initiatives on producing and deploying new missile systems upset to their own advantage. The problem now is how to sound out the possibilities of further negotiations in this field and also in the field of conventional weapons. Italy's foreign policy must be a policy of peace within security and independence. But it must not be forgotten that we have freely confirmed our membership in an alliance. We are not a neutral and nonaligned country.

L'UNITA VIEWS POSSIBLE POLICING ROLE FOR NAVY

LD040843 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 28 May 80 p 17

[France Petrone article: "Role for Italy as Policeman of the Mediterranean?"]

[Text] "The Italian flag is where it should be," namely, in the Mediterranean: This is how Defense Minister Lagorio replied to certain indiscretions concerning the possible use of our army and more particularly the Italian Navy in the "areas adjacent" to the geographical area which most directly concerns Italy. The minister's assertion is apparently flawless and seems to eliminate an uncertainty (concerning Italy's direct military involvement in the Gulf area and the Indian Ocean), though it does not explain much, insofar as the U.S. requests have been many in number and all very grave. They also concern the Mediterranean area without any lessening of the pressure to conclude a bilateral agreement bypassing the Atlantic pact and involving Italy in the initiatives which the Pentagon plans to adopt with respect to the Middle East, the Gulf and the Indian Ocean.

But let us turn to the requests which the U.S. defense secretary put to Lagorio and, above all, to Cossiga both before and during the 13-14 May Atlantic Alliance meeting in Brussels.

The first, as we explain in another article, refers to Italy's military reinforcement and to our country's use as a transit and support base for U.S. military actions against the Gulf and Indian Ocean areas. But the shifting of U.S. attention to these two areas could create vacuums, especially in the Mediterranean. Hence the proposal that they be filled by the Italian Navy.

This is what we might call a strategy of "communicating vessels" stretching from the Mediterranean across the Suez Canal to the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean. This strategy's "dynamic" or moving element is the U.S. quick strike force and the NATO bases are its natural points of transit, departure and supply for U.S. aircraft, troops and materiel.

Thus once again there is persistent talk about the Mediterranean's strategic importance and the security problems of the countries of the Atlantic Alliance's southern flank--Italy, Greece and Turkey. A report on the situation in this part of the Mediterranean was presented jointly to the NATO defense ministers at the 13 May Brussels meeting by minister Lagorio and his counterparts from Athens and Ankara.

It is a 3,500-word document in an extraordinary form of English (more like pidgin than the language taught at Oxford) supplemented by four maps drawn in perfect cold-war style (with the threat which comes naturally from the East still represented graphically in red). According to the report the military threat to NATO's southern flank stems essentially from the massive presence of Warsaw Pact forces in Hungary (both Hungarian and Soviet divisions) intended to intervene in that sector in the event of conflict and from the USSR's increased naval strength in the Mediterranean.

According to the report Italy faces a grave danger because, the invasion of Austria and Yugoslavia being considered easy and almost inevitable within this paradoxical scenario, the battle line would occur along our borders and across the Adriatic. But these are old-fashioned strategic formulations designed above all--one specialist told us--to reassure the Italian General Staff, which, as is well known, must somehow justify in the eighties its pointless and extremely expensive concentration of troops, vehicles and equipment in the Veneto and Friuli regions.

Let us turn to the most topical part of the document, which concerns us most closely on account of its greater strategic and political implications. The problem now, it states, lies in the fact that the USSR is trying to gain control of the sea and communications routes in the Mediterranean, the Indian and Atlantic oceans, to control access to energy sources vital to the entire West. Against this, the Atlantic Alliance's fundamental task is to make these lines of access to supplies of resources secure for the West. According to the report the next area of East-West conflict will therefore be the Mediterranean because of its "increased geopolitical dimension" due to the concentration of resources in the Middle East.

In this context NATO is particularly concerned with maintaining and improving its own level of naval security in the Mediterranean and with calming Greek-Turkish tensions. In this latter connection one should note a special U.S. commitment to drawing Greece into the integrated NATO structure. Hence stems the new role which it plans to entrust to Italy--reinforcement of traditional commitments and filling the "vacuums" created by possible sudden commitments for the U.S. Navy and troops. The document states quite clearly that Italy "can help control sea traffic between the two Mediterranean basins." Furthermore, the depleted U.S. naval presence in the zone (even in what is still a normal situation such as the present at least one aircraft carrier and several small ships of the 6th Fleet have set sail for the Indian Ocean as a result of the Iranian crisis) already implies the Italian Navy's increased presence. Defense Chief of Staff Admiral Torrisi himself recently confirmed this in an interview with IL MONDO.

For the time being, then, the Americans have requested and obtained from the Allies, especially Italy, better garrisoning of the regional chessboards of Europe and the Mediterranean. This would leave them free for possible more "urgent" commitments. They have also requested and obtained the strengthening of the existing structures (which will, let us be clear, become their points of support): In the same interview Admiral Torrisi talks about allocating more funds to the Italian Armed Forces for maintenance, spare parts, supplies, and so forth. But that is not all. The United States is already planning to circumvent article 5 of the Atlantic pact (which delimits its geographical area) thus suggesting the possibility of bilateral agreements, especially with Rome and Bonn for special military commitments stemming from U.S. actions in the Persian Gulf. And, irrespective of what Minister Lagorio says, everything remains open on this point.

DENMARK, NORWAY SEEK TO NEGOTIATE CONFLICT OVER ECONOMIC ZONES

LD040839 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 2 Jun 80 p 8

[Unattributed report: "Zone of 200 Miles Off East Greenland"]

[Text] Yesterday Denmark announced the establishment of a 200-mile economic zone off the coast of eastern Greenland. The new zone "collides" with the Norwegian zone around Jan Mayen, so there will be talks between Norway and Denmark on the demarcation line.

As a first step, these negotiations between officials will begin in September.

Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen was in Oslo on Saturday on a short unofficial visit to discuss zone demarcation line problems with Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund. According to information received by AFTENPOSTEN, the two Social Democratic foreign ministers are intent on avoiding a conflict between the two countries on the demarcation line.

For the time being Denmark will not enforce its jurisdiction beyond the median line with the Jan Mayen zone. Norwegian sources have always said that Norway will insist on a median-line solution and that the concessions made to Iceland will have no influence on the new negotiations with Denmark.

FINLAND

KEKKONEN, GISCARD DISCUSS ECONOMIC COOPERATION, WORLD AFFAIRS

LD032030 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Text] The presidents of France and Finland continued their talks today. The talks today between President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and President Urho Kekkonen dealt with problems concerning the international situation and economic relations between the two countries. Juhani Lehtola examines the visit to Finland of the president of France:

[Begin Lehtola recording] The visit to Finland by the French president, due to end in 2 hours' time, has been a truly French visit: short, but a state visit with a very full program. The heads of state of almost all the important Western countries have already made official visits to our country, and the president of France was now the last of them. This rare event has been much emphasized in various connections.

President Valery Giscard d'Estaing clearly expressed the fact that there have not been sufficient contacts or cooperation between our countries. Now these contacts have been created from the start at a very fast rate, for the president's entourage included four ministers--the ministers of foreign affairs and foreign trade as well as of agriculture and the environment who had talks with their Finnish counterparts.

It may be said that a very considerable part of the visit was devoted to the talks. The heads of state concentrated mainly on major issues in international politics, while the ministers for their part mapped out relations between our countries in more detail and expressed their views on the development of these relations.

In the discussion of bilateral relations, economic issues gained prominence. It was noted that trade between Finland and France is not balanced--at present, the deficit is approximately 500 million markkas--and that efforts should be made to correct the imbalance. Prospects for cooperation were found in the spheres of nuclear technology and the timber industry. By intensifying their cooperation France and Finland could also aim at markets of third countries.

The talks between the presidents were dominated by big power relations, European detente and disarmament, as the president also noted in an interview with Helsinki Radio, which we shall hear later.

The meeting between Kekkonen and Giscard d'Estaing and this visit took place at a time when France's foreign policy has clearly become more active and France's foreign political position in the Western camp has strengthened. Again, a special relationship between France and the Soviet Union is being talked about following the meeting between the French and Soviet leaders in Warsaw. According to French sources, President Giscard d'Estaing has said that he regards the Helsinki talks as a direct continuation of the Warsaw talks.

The views of the presidents on major issues of world politics were clearly expressed also in the luncheon and dinner speeches. In their speeches they expressed their concern about the world situation and efforts for easing international tension. President Kekkonen said that France and Finland have similar goals in international affairs. Among these goals, support for the process of detente and an active policy of disarmament were clearly expressed; on these points, both countries have previously made their own specific proposals. [end recording]

During his visit to Finland, French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing raised as the most central issue the safeguarding of the continuation of detente and, in particular, questions concerning disarmament. Seppo Toivonen interviewed the French president a moment ago:

[Begin Toivonen recording] In the first place, the visit is intended to show how important we consider relations with Finland and Finland's position in Europe, President Giscard d'Estaing noted in an interview with Helsinki Radio in which, among the international issues discussed in the talks, he gave prominence to European security and disarmament. We discussed with President Kekkonen how tension might be reduced in the world and what might be done in the present worrying conditions for continuing detente and making progress in disarmament, Giscard d'Estaing said. He did not specify more closely how the initiatives made by the French and Finns fit together: There have already been official-level talks on these initiatives.

Speaking on relations between Finland and France and the development of economic cooperation, Giscard d'Estaing particularly mentioned three spheres of cooperation of interest to France: first, the development of the timber industry and the utilization of forests in France. France has the largest although under-utilized forests among the EEC countries. Second, the sphere of energy in which the French offer Finland their experience: We have the biggest nuclear power program in Western Europe, Giscard d'Estaing said. As a third sphere of cooperation he mentioned highly advanced technology, including the electronics industry, in which the French are interested in increasing their markets in Finland. [end recording]

IRAQI TRADE PROTOCOL--Trade between Finland and Iraq is to be increased and diversified. A protocol, signed at the end of the Helsinki meeting of the Finnish-Iraqi economic mixed commission, proposes a broadening of the selection of goods imported from Iraq to Finland. Finland is particularly interested in buying sulphur from Iraq. For its part, Iraq hopes to buy in Finland pulp and paper on the basis of long-term agreements. The mixed commission also discussed the development of marketing in both countries. It was noted that there have already been positive developments in industrial cooperation, for example, in the electrification of construction and the chemical industry. The two sides also noted the new cooperation possibilities in the development of the oil industry and in the construction industry. LD031111 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 28 May 80 p 3

[Unattributed report: "Norway Not U.S. Errand Boy"]

[Text] "It is especially important that we show solidarity with our major allies in difficult times. But Washington does not expect--and is not served by--Norway being an obedient errand boy," Storting Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Arvid Johanson (Labor Party) said in a lecture at the Defense College yesterday.

"We have to be able to make our views known in the right way. There are questions on which the United States and its allies in Western Europe, chiefly the EEC nations, are not in total agreement. We just have to live with this. But here Norway could perhaps have a role as mediator and connecting link," Arvid Johanson said. In the remainder of his speech Johanson stressed the importance of making every effort to reach political agreement within Norway on questions which concern Norway's relations with the rest of the world.

BARRE VISIT SEEN IN CONTEXT OF COLLABORATION WITH EC

LD031009 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 28 May 80 p 9

[Elisabeth Holte report: "Industrial Cooperation Central Theme of Nordli-Barre Talks"]

[Text] "Foreign policy cooperation between the EEC and Norway works admirably. It is not actually necessary to be a member to have influence. But you Norwegians have a European complex--you will have to rid yourselves of it!", French Prime Minister Raymond Barre told AFTENPOSTEN yesterday in reply to a question on what he thought the EEC and Norway could do to improve their foreign policy cooperation. Nevertheless, in talks between Prime Ministers Nordli and Barre, Norway raised the question of how to ensure the best possible consultations between Norway and the Nine in light of the EEC nations' increasingly stable foreign policy cooperation.

Otherwise, the presence of Industry Minister Andre Giraud in Barre's party was indicative of the most important topics for discussion during the French visit.

Even today French interests, namely the ELF-Aquitaine and Total companies, are responsible for 20 percent of all Norwegian oil and gas production, and half of their output goes to France.

In the present difficult international energy situation the French Government is naturally interested in ensuring increased oil and gas supplies from the Norwegian sector for France. Other Franco-Norwegian cooperation projects, which were agreed during Industry Minister Giraud's visit to Norway last year, cover the supply of aircraft engine parts over the next 10 years--worth 30 million kroner per year.

Among new cooperation fields discussed during the meetings in Oslo yesterday were telecommunications, electronics and the supply by Norway of aluminium/magnesium and possibly also of plastic automobile parts. Norway could be interested in advanced French systems for the surveillance of large sea areas, after the expansion of economic zones to 200 miles. All these are fields where contacts have been established but where no concrete agreements were reached yesterday. However, Prime Minister Barre stressed that it should be possible to extend the successful cooperation in the energy field to other fields and mentioned the possible advantage to be gained from the combination of Norwegian resources and French technology. Advanced French deep-water technology will be of special interest to Norway when it starts drilling in deeper water.

On the tense international situation and the crisis between East and West, Norway and France were in agreement on the importance of keeping communication channels open between the two sides. The Norwegian foreign policy leaders' reaction to the surprising and controversial Franco-Soviet summit in Warsaw a week ago is therefore that "it is desirable and useful that such contacts are maintained in such difficult situations," to quote Under Secretary Johan Jorgen Holst.

In reply to the question whether Norway can thus be said to be sliding from an American-oriented to a more French-oriented line, Holst replied that neither side took up the question of the proper extent of prior consultation before such contacts are made. He added that, even though it was agreed that the channels ought to be kept open, opinions were not necessarily similar about what questions should be raised at such meetings.

On the EEC, the Norwegian hosts were given a French account of internal trends within the Community, not least the problematic relations between Britain and the other eight nations on, among other things, the budget question. Even more interesting for Norway was probably the briefing on the developments in foreign policy cooperation within the Nine--the so-called "European political cooperation" which has crystallized into an important foreign policy decision-making center. The Norwegian and French views of the center's importance were basically the same. Norway is preoccupied, however, with the question of how, as a non-EEC member, it can be assured of a continuous briefing on the consultations among the Nine.

The talks did not go into details about how this could be done and the French gave no indication of wanting to link Norway with the "European political cooperation." So for the time being Norwegian foreign affairs chiefs will make every effort to spur on their embassies to more intense activity in the nine capitals, especially in the capital holding the EC chairmanship at any particular time. Because of its strategic position Norway is of special interest to the rest of Western Europe and oil and gas add an extra dimension, it was emphasized. French interest in Norway is further underlined by the fact that French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet will come for a working weekend with his Norwegian counterpart, Knut Frydenlund, at the beginning of July.

KIPRIANOU BLAMES TURKISH SIDE FOR FAILURE TO START TALKS

NC031138 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Text] President Kiprianou has stressed that we will continue to maintain a constructive stand during the soundings and consultations currently underway to find a suitable formula for the resumption of talks.

Addressing the representatives of Greek mass media abroad who called on him today, President Kiprianou stressed that the Turkish side is solely responsible for the nonresumption of the talks. The Turkish side sets conditions and demands that we commit ourselves in advance to a federation which is bizonal in nature and to a situation which has security that is somehow separate. Namely, President Kiprianou stressed, they want us to commit ourselves in advance to negotiating for two separate states. The president of the republic rejected the attempts being made to give the impression that the bizonal and security terms had been accepted in the past and stressed that these terms had never been accepted, and this is why they are not included in the four Makarios-Denktas guidelines. He said: It might have been that the bizonal term was mentioned at times, but this was said before the Turkish side had explained--in the most official manner--what it meant by the concept and the philosophy of bizonal and separate security.

President Kiprianou reiterated that if the Turks want to bring forward their views they must do so at the negotiating table without insisting that we commit ourselves in advance. However, he stressed that under no circumstances are we going to accept two separate states, nor partition; nor consolidation of the faits accomplis. Asked about the domestic front, the president of the republic stated that he will exert every effort to restore the Cypriot people's unity and cooperation for the common cause. In conclusion, he called on the representatives of the Greek media abroad to keep the Cyprus issue alive. He stressed that Hellenism abroad constitutes an immense force that can contribute more than ever to our general efforts for the administration of justice.

In his reply address Mr Khatzinikilaou, chairman of the Union of Greek Press Correspondents Abroad, gave the assurance that the union members will continue and intensify their efforts to promote the just struggle for Cyprus. The representatives of the Greek media abroad also had a meeting with Archbishop Khrisostomos today.

DISI ATTACKS CBC FOR REFUSAL OF RESPONSE TO KIPRIANOU

NC040649 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 4 Jun 80 p 1

[Excerpts] The opposition [Democratic] Rally party of Mr Kliridhis yesterday threatened to call on its supporters not to pay any CBC [Cyprus Boradcasting Corporation] fees in reprisal for the refusal of CBC to grant radio and television time to its leader Mr Glavkos Kliridhis to address himself to the people.

Both the opposition rally leader Mr Glavkos Kliridhis and the communist AKEL party leader Mr Ezekias Papaioannou had applied to the CBC to grant them time on radio and TV in the same way as the CBC had done in the case of President Kiprianou and give them the chance to give their own version and their answers.

But the CBC had accepted neither request and in letters from the Director General Mr A. Khristofidhis tells them that any statements they may have will be treated on merits in the news bulletins of radio and television, that in election periods all the parties are given fair share of time, and that the CBC is considering whether circumstances at present warrant a series of interviews with party leaders to give the chance to the people to listen to their views.

In the case of Mr Kliridhis who had asked to be allowed to appear on radio and television tomorrow Thursday to address a "message to the people", the CBC director general says that only the president of the republic can address such a message, not the party leaders.

The Rally says it is determined to use all legal means at its disposal to ensure equal treatment and freedom of political expression and goes on to warn about calling for non-payment of CBC fees.

"Let the CBC not forget that the tens of thousands of supporters of the Rally want to hear the voice of the chairman of their party and are waiting from us (the party) to tell them whether they should disconnect their television and wireless sets and stop paying fees for the CBC".

The Rally statement accused the CBC of a "servile attitude towards a feeble government which is worried when another voice is heard, or when it is criticised for mistakes".

It speaks of a "minority government" and says that Kiprianou's message was one of personal defense and party politics.

In reply to remarks by the CBC director general that all party statements are treated on merits, the Rally retorts that the party statements are given mutilated and are preceded by government comments.

"We shall not tolerate the priviliged, biassed and monopolistic use of the mass media by the president and the minority government", the Rally party statement declares.

There was no reaction by last night from AKEL to the refusal to grant it time.

DHROSOS DISCOUNTS POSSIBILITY OF MILITARY RULE IN TURKEY

ATO31405 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 3 Jun 80 p 6

[The "Political Issues" column by G.N. Dhrosos: "The Turkish Army"]

[Text] Many people believe that it is possible that a military dictatorship will be imposed on Turkey any day now and perhaps they are right because in the ultimate analysis it seems that the situation is leading to that. Logically, this should already have taken place. However, there are two factors which have been and continue to inhibit this. One factor is that apparently the Turkish military leadership does not want anything of this sort and the second is that apparently there is no U.S. encouragement in that direction.

Let us begin with the second factor: The establishment of a dictatorship in Turkey, which is so closely under the guardianship of the United States and so generously helped by it, would constitute a great political burden for the United States. After all, there is the Greek precedent and the fact that a dictatorship in Turkey would mean much bloodshed. After all, the only reason for possibly establishing such a regime would be to confront terrorism, something that already is being done in a bloody, though inadequate, manner. It is not possible for the army to assume power and tolerate continuation of the current situation. It would reply to terrorism with counterterrorism and the repercussions for democratic countries would be greater than those in connection with what occurred in Greece.

After all, the United States has recently manifested in practice such great political and military interest in Turkey that it would be impossible for it to shake off the accusation that the dictatorship was imposed with the encouragement or at least the toleration of the U.S. administration. Therefore, the United States is trying to avoid finding itself in such a difficult situation. However, it is possible that someday interested and competent persons may decide that there is no alternative. At least the escalation of violent acts in Turkey points to that. The second reason is that the leadership of the Turkish Armed Forces is not in the mood for such experiments. If it were, it would have assumed power long ago. After all, Turkey's military leadership is clever enough to know that for dictatorships entrance is easy but exit is difficult, at least without national calamities. Furthermore, there is also the following fact: Every intelligent Turk knows that what Turkey sells to the Atlantic Alliance, from which it receives great and multilateral help, is its army. It is an army that is well organized, disciplined and unencumbered by other duties. It is an army that is needed, as it is, both by Turkey and more generally by the Atlantic Alliance.

The situation along Turkey's eastern borders is dangerous and disturbed and even a local clash in the oil area should not be precluded. The United States relies on the Turkish Army and it does not want it to become involved in political adventures. For precisely the same reason the Turkish leadership believes that it must not lose this valuable and bargaining chip for any reason. The fact that in some areas of the country martial law has been proclaimed is in itself already a loss. The work of so many authorities, even the tasks of the police and the gendarmerie, is enough. To add all these tasks is an unbearable burden added to the role which Turkey already assigns to its army.

One more thing: The economic situation and life in general in our neighboring country is terribly unpleasant. Regardless of how much economic aid is given to it, it cannot remedy things, especially on a permanent basis. Unemployment, the constant increase in prices, restrictions on the consumption of certain commodities, all these things cause an escalating displeasure among public opinion. Inevitably someone will pay for this displeasure and certainly it is better that political parties pay for it rather than the army which literally is the most valuable thing Turkey possesses at this moment.

Consequently, for these reasons, both inherent and extraneous, military dictatorship has not yet been imposed on Turkey and its imposition will be delayed as long as possible. Developments indicate that the current situation cannot continue much longer because, according to indications, political violence is well organized, determined and has abundant resources both in men and material. The source of these resources is another question and in this instance it is very difficult to make conjectures.

SURPRISE NAVAL READINESS EXERCISE BEGINS IN AEGEAN

AT031319 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 3 Jun 80 p 1

[Text] Last night a surprise exercise began to test the readiness of navy ships. The signal was given at 2230 [1930 GMT] followed by an instant recall of men on leave who hastened to the naval yard. Up to that time the exercise had been kept secret because its purpose is to measure everybody's reaction time in case a situation should arise quite suddenly. As the Navy General Staff announced last night, the exercise aims at checking the reaction of the navy's units to the sudden implementation of plans and the undertaking of various predetermined missions. Early this morning, the ships began departing from the naval yard to carry out special missions. A similar exercise was held by the navy 2 years ago with exceptional success.

As was made clear in this connection, the exercise which started last night is unconnected with the great air and naval exercises which begin today in the Aegean under the code name "Parmenion" and which will last about a week. These exercises are for the purpose of training in combined operation. Also, this exercise is not connected with the Turkish exercises that are being held in the Aegean, but it is within the framework of the annual training program of the navy. After all, it is well known that every time Turkish exercises are held they are vigilantly watched by both our air force and the navy (surface vessels and submarines) so that they may intervene immediately in case Greek airspace or our territorial waters are violated.

Yesterday authoritative government circles described the air and naval exercises of Greece and Turkey, which have been planned for various areas of the Aegean, as "usual and seasonal." These exercises are the regular exercises which the Greek side holds every 2 years and the Turkish side holds every year and for this reason there is no reason for tension, the same circles added. The relevant announcements have been made to the Greek side regarding the Turkish exercises, and their timing as well as the areas they will cover. The Greek exercises which will be held in the central Aegean with the participation of the army, the navy and the air force will begin today and will last until 9 June. With short intervals the exercise will continue until autumn. The Turkish exercises will last 5 days--from 12 to 16 June--and will include three exercises, as was announced to the Greek authorities: 1. Small Pire [Mikra Pira] in international waters in the area of Lesvos. 2. An air and naval exercise between 12 and 16 June in the sea and air areas of Khios and Mitilini. 3. A landing exercise in Turkey's territorial waters in the same area.

ECEVIT COMMENTS ON ELECTION ISSUE, SPREADING VIOLENCE

TA040746 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit said that the Justice Party administration, primarily its leader Suleyman Demirel, is exerting efforts to hinder the election of a president.

In a news conference at the parliament today, Ecevit noted that the Justice Party is exerting efforts to prove that a president cannot be elected in accordance with the rules stipulated in the Constitution. Pointing out that the Justice Party intends to use this situation as a pretext to show the invalidity of the entire Constitution, Ecevit said: Regardless of what Demirel says the direct election of a president will create a de facto transition into the presidential system. He said that an increase in the conflicts between the constitutional structure and rules and the de facto situation would exacerbate the crisis in the country and that the more serious crisis situation would be used as a pretext to effect a more deep-rooted change in the political system. Ecevit noted that when his party expressed opposition to this plan and tried to obstruct its implementation, Demirel said: So, let us hold elections. Ecevit continued: Under what conditions is the honorable Demirel challenging us to hold elections? Civil war--I am obliged to use this term, even if regrettably--has started in certain Turkish cities in the past few days. The honorable prime minister is making election challenges in an atmosphere like this. Pointing out that violent incidents have long ceased to be of the hit-and-run kind, Ecevit said that terrorists, who developed under the protection of the government and who have enslaved the government as well, have now reached the stage where they are using the threat of violence to oppress and subdue large sectors of the population under a de facto fascist administration. Noting that, in certain provinces, the transformation of mass terrorism into massacres is being prevented only through curfews and that prosecutors, mayors and legislators are actually being attacked, Ecevit said that a prime minister should realize that elections held under these conditions cannot be regarded as elections.

Claiming that the existing government is not qualified to hold elections in Turkey, Ecevit continued: The TRT has turned into a propaganda tool for the government and for the forces supporting it. The TRT, which carries the harshest words and messages when leftist terrorists kill a soldier or a policeman, has censured even the words of the colonel who made an official statement during the official funeral service for a soldier killed by fascist terrorists in Adana. The party that is the chief supporter of the government and which is one of the primary [forces] responsible for mass terrorism is talking about abandoning the Assembly and overtly waging the struggle outside the legal process. With all these conditions the prime minister is making so-called election challenges. Ecevit explained that the elections will be held when the time comes; however, it is necessary to get rid of this government before the elections. He said: This is the main condition for sound and secure elections.

Ecevit noted that his party must restore democracy and save the people from oppression and that the election of a president is the primary method for accomplishing this. Poining out that after contacts and talks on this subject his party thinks that Muhsin Batur has the best chance to be elected, Ecevit added that, therefore, Batur's candidacy will be resubmitted.

In reply to a journalist who recalled the allegation in the Justice Party Representatives Council statement that the National Salvation Party [NSP] is plotting with the RPP to ensure the return of a government that favors the East bloc, Ecevit said: On the one hand, honorable Demirel is applying unconstitutional and undemocratic pressure on the members of his own parliamentary group; on the other hand, he is blackmailing the NSP and thus displaying irresponsibility by uttering words that could cast a shadow on Turkey's international relations and (?damage)--if it is sufficiently powerful--Turkey's biggest party. These allegations are also extremely regrettable for the state and for Turkey's international prestige. I believe that a government cannot achieve anything through such methods of oppression and blackmail.

Replying to another question on what the government situation will be if the presidential elections are not concluded for some time, Ecevit said: Naturally, there is no written rule that the president should be elected first and a government should be changed after that. However, unless the conditions are very pressing, this is the logical sequence. If it is necessary, the sequence can be changed. It can be changed if it is necessary and if it is possible.

OECD NATIONS AGREE ON TIGHT ECONOMIC CONTROLS

Results of First Session

OW040153 Tokyo KYODO in English 0142 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Text] Paris June 3 KYODO--Japan and 23 other industrial nations agreed Tuesday to adopt a new international trade declaration condemning protectionism. The agreement was reached on the first-day of a two-day meeting of the ministerial council of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD).

The adoption of the new declaration, which replaces a 1974 trade pledge, will be formally announced in a joint communique to be issued Wednesday.

During Tuesday's session, foreign, economic and finance ministers of the 24 member nations also agreed to set up a system to regularly examine the member nations' trade policies. The first such examination will be conducted by the OECD Trade Policy Committee in the first half of 1981.

Discussions at the first-day session centered on economic relations between advanced and developing countries and OECD trade policy.

Japanese Foreign Minister Saburo Okita stressed the importance of countering protectionist pressure, which has been mounting amid an uncertain global economic outlook. Japan fully supports the adoption of a new OECD trade declaration to insure freer international trade, he told the meeting.

Referring to the North-South issue, Okita said Japan would continue its efforts to improve its Official Development Assistance (ODA) to developing nations both in terms of quality and quantity.

Erkmen Speech

TA041228 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen said that the economic crises in the world could be eliminated through close cooperation to be established between developed and developing countries.

Addressing the OECD ministerial council meeting, which began in Paris yesterday. Erkmen explained that developing countries suffer most from economic crises. Pointing out that world trade is developing against the interests of developing countries, Erkmen said that the most important issue to be dealt with at this stage is the recycling of the petrodollars, which have accumulated in the banks located in areas of production. Erkmen proposed that these funds be used for investments to increase energy production via international financial organizations.

Noting that important responsibilities fall on developed as well as developing countries in overcoming the global economic crisis, Erkmen said that the measures to be taken by developing countries alone will not be sufficient for surmounting the problems and that it is essential that developed countries support the developing countries. He added that measures affecting the economic structure should also be taken in the long run to eliminate the economic crises in the world.

In his speech, the foreign minister said that the stability program, which was implemented by the Turkish Government in January, has attained its targets throughout the country and that there are already positive signs.

The OECD ministerial council meetings, which began in Paris yesterday, will end today with a meeting of the finance ministers of the 24 OECD member countries. The joint communique at the end of the meeting is expected to be issued today.

Joint Communique

OW050235 Tokyo Kyodo in English 0216 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] Paris June 4 KYODO--Western industrialized nations agreed Wednesday to maintain tight monetary and fiscal policies to bring inflation under control.

A joint communique issued at the end of a two-day annual meeting of the ministerial council of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) said subjugation of inflation is the prerequisite to stable economic growth.

The communique said that ministers from the 24 OECD member nations, including Japan, agreed to continue to take demand-management policy as a short-term measure to overcome inflation. They also agreed efforts should be made to enhance industrial productivity and expand investments to reduce energy consumption as medium-term anti-inflation measures.

The joint communique said at the same time, however, that the nations which have been able to bring inflation under control to the satisfactory level should lose no time in easing credit controls. This was taken as indicating such nations as West Germany and Japan should enforce economic policies with greater flexibility to prevent occurrence of a global recession.

It also said the ministers agreed that advanced nations should exert efforts to increase imports from developing nations. In this connection, the joint communique appealed to international organizations such as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank and also to oil-producing nations to expand aid to developing countries.

Meanwhile, the OECD meeting adopted a new international trade declaration calling on the member nations to refrain from resorting to protectionsist measures.

The declaration, which replaces the trade pledge first introducted in 1974 and has since been extended annually, features regular examination of trade polices of the member nations. The examination will be conducted semiannually, starting in the first half of 1981, by the OECD Trade Committee.

After the conference, Japanese Foreign Minister Saburo Okita said he stressed the importance during the meeting that all advanced nations increase savings for expansion of economic aid to developing nations. He said this is also important to revitalize economies of Western advanced countries.

SCHMIDT RECEIVES U.S. DEFENSE SECRETARY BROWN

LD041914 Hamburg DPA in German 1706 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt received U.S. Defense Secretary Harold Brown in Bonn tonight for a confidential talk. Brown stopped in Bonn on his return flight from the 2d day of talks of NATO's Nuclear Planning Group in Norway. Observers believe that the topics discussed were the Western modernization program for nuclear medium-range missiles, the current situation of the Atlantic Alliance and issues relating to the U.S. commitment in the Middle East.

On his way to Norway, Brown called on British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. He is not due to call at the West German Defense Ministry. He met Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel during the NATO talks in Norway for a bilateral exchange of views in which they primarily discussed technical questions concerning the deployment of future nuclear weapons.

Spokesman on Content of Talks

LD042056 Hamburg DPA in German 1951 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--In his talk with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn tonight, American Defense Secretary Harold Brown stressed the importance of the German contributions in the Atlantic Alliance to the military balance in Europe and to the strengthening of NATO's southeastern flank.

A government spokesman said that, during their 2-hour talk, the chancellor and Brown emphasized the need for a comprehensive strategy for a common Western policy in the wake of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

According to the Federal Press Office, Defense Minister Hans Apel took part in the talks. The most important topics were the recent meeting of NATO's Nuclear Planning Group in Norway and the political and military situation in the Near and Middle East, as well as questions of the Atlantic Alliance and East-West relations in Europe.

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON MOSCOW VISIT, EAST-WEST TALKS

DW041129 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1900 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Reporter Winfried Scharlau interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on the feature "Panorama" program in Bonn; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, you will be going to Moscow on 30 June and it is being argued that talks are valuable in themselves. Does that mean you will be going to Moscow with small, minimum expectations?

[Answer] I would not like to weigh this, but I would strongly underscore what you have just said. The fact that there will be talks is valuable in itself. Since early this year, since international tensions increased, the Federal Government has acted with the aim of preventing talks from being disrupted. We have said that to our Western friends, and we have said it particularly to the Soviet Union.

I saw with great satisfaction that during the month of May, in Belgrade and later in Vienna, talks between West and East got going again, although hesitantly. Take, for example, the talk between Foreign Ministers Muskie and Gromyko in Vienna, or the talk between French President Giscard d'Estaing and the Soviet general secretary in Warsaw.

The German visit must be seen in this context. We are helping to make talks a normal occurrence again. Particularly in times of tension one must talk to each other and not past each other.

Certainly not merely friendly remarks will be exchanged, not only polite statements. We will speak clearly and plainly; we will not speak softly, but we will not put on airs either. We will report what our Western friends and allies think of the state of affairs, what we think of it and, in addition, we will continue bilateral talks between the Soviet Union and the FRG.

[Question] Will the course of your Moscow visit decide whether and when you will go to the GDR or do you see no connection between these two visits?

[Answer] I assume that we will be able to set the date for the visit during the summer. I finally expect it, and this is certainly Mr Honecker's idea also in this regard. Both of us, like many other governments in Eastern Europe, and also like many other governments in Western Europe, are interested in preventing increased international tensions from affecting our cooperation here in the center of Europe.

[Question] May one conclude from this that you will go in any case?

[Answer] I am completely available for such a meeting, and I assume Mr Honecker is also.

[Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, the French president made his visit without coordinating with the Americans. What agreements have been made with the Allies in connection with your visit, particularly with the Americans? Or are they still to be made?

[Answer] Mr Scharlau, I do not want to share in the criticism of the French president which is implied in your question. As regards our visit, all our friends have known for quite some time about our intentions. Consultations with our Allies and friends are underway; they will culminate on the occasion of the meeting with President Carter, President Giscard d'Estaing, the British prime minister, and with the Italian, Canadian and Japanese prime ministers in Venice shortly before the end of this month.

[Question] The Federal Republic is one of the new European states boycotting the Olympic games. Isn't it possible that Mrs Thatcher acted much better by strongly agreeing with the American President, but only with words, while letting her sportsmen do what they wanted? They are going to go anyway. Could you not have also acted like Mrs Thatcher?

[Answer] I do not wish to criticize other governments here. Besides, the legal situation in England seems to me to be similar to the one we have in the FRG. Mrs Thatcher cannot prevent the British athletes from traveling if they wish to do so, and neither can the Federal Government keep the German athletes from going, nor had it wanted to do so. What we did was give advice, and we provided this advice very early in the year and quite clearly. At the same time it was also intended for the Soviet leadership when we said in the Bundestag that it is up to the Soviet Union to create conditions in Afghanistan which would make it possible for all nations to participate in the Olympic games in Moscow through their athletes. This was a few months ago, and so far nothing has changed in Afghanistan. Therefore, I found the decision of the German Olympic Committee appropriate and necessary.

[Question] The U.S. President is threatening Europe with a veto in the Security Council. A complicated issue is involved which would go beyond the framework of this interview. My question is, however, whether the threat from the United States doesn't testify to the disastrous state of European-American relations?

[Answer] For the third time I want to say, Mr Scharlau, that you will not induce me to criticize states allied with us and their governments in an interview over German television. Nor do I believe that the term "threat" is appropriate for a phrase which President Carter used in an interview a few days ago.

I have come to realize that he is still staking considerable hopes on the so-called Camp David process, meaning the negotiations between Egypt and Israel which, as it seems, have become deadlocked now over some questions pertaining particularly to the West Bank of the Jordan River, to Palestine, negotiations in which the United States participated as an author and continues to participate. On the other hand, many people in the world surely understand that we Europeans are watching some developments in this region with concern, for example, the settlement policy in Palestine. Surely we will not end up in a quarrel between Europeans and Americans over this issue.

[Question] In conclusion, a question of fundamental significance for domestic policy. Since the end of the week Bonn has been vehemently debating the question of where we will get the additional money we will have to pay into the EC coffers. Following the aid to Turkey and in addition to the costs caused by closing the arms gap this constitutes another burden. Can the Federal Government in the long run really continue to live with the current breakdown o shared revenues between the Federal Government and the Laender? Is this possible?

[Answer] In the long run it will be unable to do so. What you failed to mention was development aid: It would have to be added. The FRG, which in the course of the past decades has had to assume a great world economic and world political weight plus additional commitments, is organized internally in such a way that, as far as these commitments cost money, the bill must be exclusively footed by the federal budget. This will not be possible in the long run. Even now--we will be having a Cabinet meeting tomorrow--we are determined not to let the compromise negotiated in Brussels go up in smoke because we consider that a conflict within the European Community in the present world situation would be very harmful. But our problem is this: Before we give our approval we need to know how we propose to finance this compromise, and financing this compromise will saddle many people in our country with a certain sacrifice which, though not very heavy, will be quite tangible nevertheless.

VAN WELL TO VISIT MOSCOW 11 JUN TO PREPARE SCHMIDT VISIT

[Text] Bonn--Foreign Ministry Secretary of State Guencher van Well will make the preparations in Moscow 12 June for the planned visit by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher to the Soviet Union from 30 June through 1 July. This date was confirmed today by a Foreign Ministry spokesman in Bonn. Van Well will be travelling to the Soviet capital on 11 June. The Foreign Ministry spokesman did not state who the FRG secretary of state will meet in Moscow. It can be assumed, however, that the meeting will take place at an "appropriately high level."

CABINET ADOPTS FORMULA TO FINANCE ADDITIONAL EC BURDENS

LD041930 Hamburg DPA in German 1341 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--The Federal Government proposes to finance the additional burdens resulting from the Brussels compromise on contributions to the EC by raising taxes from 1981 unless the federal states help share the cost.

This was the formula adopted by the Federal Cabinet today after a 10-hour, obviously hard tussle, to facilitate Bonn's approval of the EC compromise reached in Brussels. A final decision on how to finance the extra expenditure totaling DM2.5 billion has thus been deferred. This postponement was possible since the Federal Republic in 1980 need only provide between DM600 million and DM700 million for the compromise, an amount already earmarked.

According to reliable information the Federal Government believes that consumption taxes will have to be raised in 1981 unless the federal states allow the federation a larger share in the turnover tax yield. Taxes may be raised on tobacco and spirits; the petroleum tax may be raised. This would hit motorists by way of higher petrol prices. In view of this situation the Federal Government is said to be prepared for extremely difficult negotiations with the federal states. It is believed that it has been decided not to make expenditure cuts, which had originally been considered.

Spokesman Comments

LD041119 Hamburg DPA in German 1348 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Bonn--The Federal Republic's strained financial situation has been delaying today the Federal Government's intended official approval of the compromise worked out in Brussels on easing Britain's financial burden. In an intermediary report on the full day's Cabinet consultations, Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling said that the Federal Government's basic attitude to the contribution compromise is "positive."

According to Boelling, the Cabinet affirmed that the additional burden of about DM2.6 billion on the federal budget needed to finance the compromise should not be met by increasing net borrowing, and the tax package should also remain unaffected. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer had described this the "cornerstone" for the necessary financial decisions. Federal citizens, however, will possibly have to accept increases in some consumer taxes if it is not possible to fully cover the additional burdens with savings. Apparently the finance minister also raised this possibly in his financing proposals.

According to Boelling the Federal Cabinet's debate on European policy was ruled by the thought that a "united Europe, capable of action, is an indispensable condition for balance in the world." In order to be able to act, however, solidarity in financial management is also necessary. The sacrifices demanded of the Federal Republic for Europe should not be underestimated by any of the partners.

The importance of the Cabinet consultations today was underlined by the fact that the federal chancellor cancelled engagements originally scheduled for the afternoon and the federal finance minister had his state secretary for budget affairs represent him at the joint session of the Finance Planning Council of the federation, laender and districts.

Public 'Sacrifices' Expected

DW041049 Bonn DIE WELT in German 4 Jun 80 pp 1,3

[Peter Gilles article: "German Sacrifices for Europe: Will Taxes Be Hiked?"]

[Text] Bonn--The EC financing compromise "will in any case demand sacrifices from the Federal Republic of Germany and its citizens." This statement by the SPD Presidium is being interpreted in Bonn to mean that not only certain expenditures by the state will be cut, but that tax increases will also be envisaged for a later time.

In an unusually long conference lasting 3 hours, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer worked out the outline for today's Cabinet meeting. In addition to this round of ministers the chancellor has invited the chairman and finance experts of the two coalition factions to attend. What is at stake is to raise DM2.6 billion for the EC for the years 1980 and 1981. Since Matthoefer can fall back on a "latent reserve" of roughly DM600 or DM700 million, what remains to be covered is a gap of between DM500 and DM600 million. In the chancellor's opinion, this raises "serious problems."

After the delibertaions of the SPD Presidium and the dialogue between the chancellor and the finance minister, the following outline emerges today's Cabinet meeting:

In the 1980 budget the government in no case wants to increase new debts. They are supposed to be kept at a level of about DM24 billion.

The 1981 tax alleviations are also taboo for the SPD. At any rate the Christmas bonus this year will be increased from DM400 to DM600 and wage taxes will be somewhat decresed next year. It is concluded in Bonn from the fact that the SPD Presidium declared only the tax part as indispensable that the other parts of the tax package can be discussed due to the difficulties in financing expenditures. It was originally planned to grant more subsidies to families with children in 1981.

The Federal Government wants to use the financial difficulties to take back some parts of the tax cake from the laender. In 1981 a new distribution system of turnover tax revenues is due between the Federal Government and the laender. The government obviously sees a chance to implement, at least in part, its old wish concerning redistribution.

The rumors recently denied by Matthoefer that in 1981 or later an increase in consumer taxes will be due (turnover, tobacco or alcohol taxes) are thus being revived again. Since the German value added tax is low by European standards, a clear "European connection" can be established between European solidarity and sacrifices by the people.

The chancellor and the finance minister agreed that the Cabinet discussions ought to also include the 1981 budget. With regard to the planned new debts of DM27 billion next year, a finance gap of about DM10 billion can be seen even today.

Quarrels between the SPD and the FDP also took place yeserday. FDP Secretary General Verheugen warned against "creating an anti-European mood in the Federal Republic." The consequence would be an anti-German mood in Europe.

European policy will be a main issue at the forthcoming SPD congress, said panty Chairman Willy Brandt yeserday. His party will point out that it backs Europe not merely for economic reasons, but because of the political situation. Brandt called parts of the agricultural policy an "absurdity" ["aberwitz"].

Matthoefer Press Conference

LD050956 Hamburg DPA in German 0900 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Excerpts] Bonn--At a press conference in Bonn today, Federal Finance Minister Matthoefer confirmed the decision taken by the Federal Government yeserday to raise taxes on fuel oils and liquor unless the federal states assist the Federal Government in financing the additional burden resulting from the compromise on the reduction of Britain's contribution to the EEC budget. Matthoefer explained that the Cabinet, having considered the matter, agreed to the Brussels compromise and thus at the same time cleared the way for raising agricultural prices.

To finance the costs facing the government in 1981 of about DM1.8 billion tax on gasoline would have to be raised by 3 pfennig a liter and for diesel fuel by 2 pfennig a liter. The tax of liquor is due to go up by DM200 per hectoliter. This would add pfennig to a bottle of grain liquor or whiskey.

Hoefele, the financial affairs spokesman for the CDU/CSU Bundestag Group, said that this decision merely "concealed the disintegration of public finance." The shifting of debts to and from the central government and the federal states did not solve anything.

Concerning Europe, Matthoefer said "in this difficult phase of world history Europe should not hamper its leading role with a quarrel about finance". He reemphasized that there would be no additional net borrowing either in 1980 or 1981 and that the tax package would be kept intact.

GENSCHER SUPPORTS REVIVAL OF EEC DIALOGUE WITH ARABS

DW041033 Bonn DIE WELT in German 4 Jun 80 p 2

[Correspondent report signed Co.: "European Community Is Supposed To Revive Dialogue With Arabs"]

[Text] Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher definitely supports the idea that the European-Arab dialogue ought to be revived. It will probably be decided at the European summit meeting in Venice on 12 and 13 June that talks are to be initiated as soon as possible between the presidency of the European Community and the presidency of the Arab League. The idea is to generally promote cooperation with the Arabs. The partners of the European Community are in a hurry in this respect because PLO chief Yasir 'Arafat will take over the presidency of the Arab League in September. In order not to upgrade him, the talk between the presidents is supposed to take place at an earlier date.

European Community experts are at work at present in Rome on a Middle Eastern position paper, on the orders of the government chiefs, which will support the Palestinians' right to self-determination. According to Bonn information, it is not yet absolutely certain whether this will become a formal Middle Eastern statement by the government chiefs.

STOBBE COMMENTS ON MEETINGS WITH MUSKIE, WALDHEIM

LD041900 Hamburg DPA in German 1804 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Text] Berlin--Governing Mayor Dietrich Stobbe, following his political talks in the United States, expressed hope that the prospects for the urgently needed intensification of the Washington-Moscow dialogue could be improved before long.

Stobbe today returned to Berlin from a 10-day visit to the United States where he met UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, as well as representatives of the State Department and House of Representatives. Stobbe said that in these talks he stressed the need for the United States and its partners in Western Europe to arrive at a joint political strategy to solve the Middle East crises. He said that no doubt should exist that all partners in the Alliance are prepared to jointly shoulder possible burdens. Nor should there be any doubt "that we wish to preserve and consolidate the results of detente from which our city has profited so much."

ZIMBABWEAN TRANSPORT MINISTER HOLDS TALKS IN BONN

LD041632 Hamburg DPA in German 1944 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government has reiterated its interests in economic and political cooperation with Zimbabwe.

In a conversation with Ernest Kadungure, minister of transport and power of Zimbabwe, in Bonn today, the state secretary in the Bonn Foreign Ministry, Hans Werner Lautenschlager, expressed the expectation that the peaceful solution of problems in Zimbabwe would positively influence developments in other areas of southern Africa.

Kadungure is the first Cabinet member of Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's new government to visit Bonn.

FINANCE MINISTER PREDICTS DECLINE IN PRICE RISES RATE

LD301756 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1700 GMT 30 May 80

[Summary] In the opinion of Finance Minister Matthoefer, price rises in the FRG of 6.1 percent in May have now reached their peak. He told journalists in Berlin today that the rate would fall to 5.5 per cent at the end of this year. The high rate of 6.1 per cent is essentially due to the increase in crude oil prices.

GISCARD, NEW ZEALAND'S MULDOON MEET ON NEW HEBRIDES, EEC

NC041630 Paris AFP in English 1628 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Paris, June 4 (AFP)--New Zealand Prime Minister Robert Muldoon today met French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing on the question of New Zealand's sheepmeat trade with the European Economic Community (EEC) and on the insurrection in the New Hebrides.

He said, during his 45-minute talks with the French leader, that he thought Jimmy Stevens, the leader of the New Hebrides insurrection, had appeared to want independence but would probably be satisfied with concessions from the government. "We don't want to get involved in the New Hebrides," Mr Muldoon said. "I would be hopeful that it would all settle down." He described the New Hebrides situation as an issue of direct interest to both France and New Zealand.

On the question of New Zealand's sheepmeat trade, he said the French president was "extremely sympathetic" to the problems of the New Zealand lamb trade. "I would have to say I was encouraged by the views of the French president," said Mr Muldoon.

He said, however, that he would characterize EEC-New Zealand trade relations as "restrictive" unless there were certain safeguards accompanying EEC farm policy.

Asked what action New Zealand could take if its trade were jeopardised with the EEC, he said New Zealand would not retaliate but would seek a review within the OECD (Organisation of Economic Cooperation and Development). Mr Muldoon said the OECD yesterday decided to institute a new "mechanism of review" that could be used by New Zealand.

Any agreement between the EEC and New Zealand would have to make adjustments for Greece's entry into the Common Market, he added. Greece currently takes about 15,000 tons a year of sheepmeat from New Zealand, Britain 240,000 tons, and the other EEC countries several thousand tons each. He described the amount to other EEC countries as "not great".

New Zealand officials were to leave for Brussels today for negotiations over the sheepmeat question with the EEC Commission, tomorrow and Friday.

Mr Muldoon, who arrived here Monday, left today for an official visit to Switzerland.

ARGENTINE ECONOMY MINISTER ON AIMS OF PARIS VISIT

LD040857 Paris LE FIGARO in French 2 Jun 80 p 8

[Irene Jarry interview in Paris with Argentine Economy Minister Jose Martinez de Hoz: "Investments in Our Country Should Interest the French"--date not given]

[Excerpts] Argentine Economy Minister Jose Martinez de Hoz, who is now making an important European tour, has just stopped in Paris for 2 days and was received by President Giscard d'Estaing. He also had talks with Raymond Barre, several ministers and representatives of the National Council of French Employers.

During an interview for LE FIGARO, Mr Martinez de Hoz, who has been in charge of the Argentine economy since the March 1976 military coup, explained the reasons for his visit. "I came," he stated, "to assess our economic relations with a view to developing them. I have also come to explain the Argentine economic program, now entering its 5th year."

Concurrently with its economic offensive in Europe, Argentina has launched an economic and political offensive in several other spheres, first and foremost with respect to Brazil, whose recent rapprochement with Argentina was called by the minister a "historic event." "We are two neighboring countries," he explained, "whose economies are complementary, and our agreements should lead to a great increase in our economic power. I believe that any foreign country which has economic relations with Argentina and Brazil will benefit from it all, because it will be able to deal with a new economic area which did not exist in the past."

This new economic area--which represents almost all Latin American industry--is causing the United States concern. An increase in exchanges with the Soviet Union is another cause of Washington's concern.

Finally, last Saturday, with a view to "restoring the political balance," General Videla left for China, where he will stay from 5 through 9 June. Such a visit is "only natural," Jose Martinez de Hoz stated.

As a result of a rehabilitation policy energetically pursued by its economy minister, Argentina, which was in a state of financial collapse in 1976, has again become an interesting market toward which many capitals, including Paris, are turning their eyes.

CABINET APPROVES MILITARY COOPERATION PACT WITH MAURITIUS

AB041416 Paris AFP in English 1338 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Text] Paris, June 4 (AFP)--The French Cabinet today approved an agreement for military cooperation between France and the island nation of Mauritius. The agreement sets the terms for French military personnel to train Mauritians for a unit similar to the French gendarmerie. The Cabinet also approved an educational agreement between France and Nigeria.

LE MATIN DISPLEASED WITH EC PAYMENTS SETTLEMENT

LD040931 Paris LE MATIN in French 31 May-1 Jun 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Europe: The Price of an Agreement"]

[Text] Here is an agreement which is costing Britain's European partners dearly, especially France. Dear in money, but also in principles. There could of course be no question of the European Community budget falling into deficity in any long-term way; so the other eight national treasuries will have to provide the 15 billion which is not going to be demanded from Britain. According to preliminary assessments, the gift made to Margaret Thatcher in Brussels the other night will cost French taxpayers Fr4 billion at the very least between now and the end of 1982.

But that is not the most important point. The most important point is that this dispute with London has struck a blow at the very foundation of Green Europe and the financial settlement on which the founder countries of the Common Market decided on 14 January 1962, when there were still only six of them. The other night the French and Germans agreed, to avoid any further shopkeeper-type squabbling, to review the system established 18 years ago. Green Europe of the 1962 type is based on the principle of preferential treatment for the Community. That is to say, the six founder countries committed themselves as a priority to feeding their peoples with what they themselves and their partners produce. To force themselves to respect this discipline, they bound themselves by a mechanism of financial solidarity. A member state is free to buy food elsewhere, but in that case it must give the Community any saving it makes by procuring foodstuffs at a lower price on the world market.

Britain continues to buy food from Commonwealth countries. It is therefore not surprising that it makes a very high contribution to the joint budget. It is the price paid for the system which it accepted by joining the Common Market. If the Community countries decided, in the light of what has just happened, to change the automatic procedures envisaged in their 1962 financial settlement and thus to break or reduce this financial solidarity, they would change the very nature of their original handiwork. They would bring it more into line with the wishes London has always expressed, especially during the debates which preceded the signing of the Rome Treaty. Historically it would be a turning point.

Margaret Thatcher's "diplomacy of persistence" has therefore paid off. And time has been on her side. In Dublin last November, Valery Giscard d'Estaing proposed "cancellation" of Fr3 billion of her debt to the Community budget. In Luxembourg a month ago we were ready to go as far as 10 billion over 2 years. Margaret Thatcher said no. The result is that it will be 15 billion over 3 years. And in exchange the Iron Lady will have to accept a rise in European agricultural prices on Monday.

Because France was in the forefront of this quarrel while the other member states remained prudent spectators, the other night's agreement takes on the appearance of a diplomatic rout. It is not easy to negotiate with a country which does not want to leave a club or respect its rules. It is not easy, either, to maneuver when the knife of the presidential election is at our throat and when by hesitating too much there is a danger of losing the rural voters.

MAJORITY PARTIES' DEFENSE DOCTRINES DIFFER ON 'ESSENTIAL POINTS'

LD041251 Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Jun 80 pp 1, 9

[Jaques Isnard article: "The Battle"]

[Text] Points of agreement will outweigh differences of opinion. That was what Union for French Democracy [UDF] general representative Michel Pinton felt able to predict last week when asked to compare in advance his party's defense doctrine with what the Rally for the Republic's [RPR]--the other majority party--ideas were thought to be. Now that Jacques Chirac's party's thinking is known, it has to be admitted that the two political parties are not totally in agreement on many essential points, such as nuclear deterrence and the draft.

The RPR's 1980 ideas apparently adhere to the line of the directives which General de Gaulle's Armed Forces Minister Pierre Messmer gave to the chiefs of staff under the seal "confidential--defense" between December 1967 and November 1968 and also closely follow the orthodox line of the National Defense White Paper which Michel Debre, minister of state for national defense under Georges Pompidou, drew up in 1972 and 1973.

The UDF committee's suggestions approved by the Executive Bureau, however, show not just an evolution but a real change of course toward giving defense thinking a more Atlantic and European tone. The UDF is in favor of some proliferation of tactical nuclear armaments and thinks that the more flexible ideas of "graduated deterrence" give full weight to combat preparations since they accept the prospect that "an armed aggression would not necessarily spark off an immediate strategic response." The RPR replies strongly to this that the tactical nuclear weapons are not battlefield weapons but weapons linked to the massive reprisal strategic forces, being used before the latter.

The divorce between the two parties cannot be clearer and in practice, to quote just one example, this difference of opinion is reflected in the fact that the UDF advocate French possession of the neutron bomb while the RPR expresses serious reservations and does not regard this "battlefield" weapon as a priority.

Therefore 4 years, almost to the day, since the head of state's speech in June 1976 to the students of the Institute of Higher National Defense Studies, it is still the consequences of the president's introduction of the idea of "forward battle" into French defense concepts which are causing the clash between advocates and opponents of updating the official doctrine.

On that occasion Giscard d'Estaing had pointed out that the organization of any defense system should be designed to give battle and that there could only be one battle arena right from the start of hostilities since there would not be two different areas--one between Czechoslovakia and the Rhine in which the conflict would take place from which the French forces would be miraculously excluded and the other, the national territory, which would remain peaceful amid the general turmoil. By advocating strengthening ties with the Allies and removing all doubts on France's relations with NATO, the UDF has followed this line to its logical conclusion.

The RPR, however, continues to stick to its positions: Being faithful to its Alliance partners, France's "interest is to speed up escalation on the nuclear ladder so as not to prolong conventional operations on its territory or that of our allies--operations which would, moreover, stand a good chance of sounding our defeat given the disproportion of the forces present." At General de Gaulle's bidding, this was what the armed forces minister wrote in 1967-1968 when he asked the French units, in view of an unfavorable balance of forces in Europe, "not to fight a decisive or prolonged battle" but to force an aggressor to commit himself still further and expose himself, if necessary, to so-called "absolute deterrence" nuclear reprisals.

This difference of opinion on deterrence, its methods and field of application also explains why the two majority parties do not have the same views of the organization and missions of conscription. Indeed, since the battle concept restores preeminence to the ground forces in the defense system, the UDF only wants to make minor alterations in the conscript army and the 1-year term of military service. The RPR, on the other hand, which regards the ground forces as a "support" for the deterrent and even as merely complementary forces, is proposing a "vital adaptation of army units, in numbers and armaments, with the recruitment of volunteers for mobile technical weapons and with the mobilization of the contingent--during a 4-month service period followed by periods of recall--or the training of reservists on the spot for the territory's regional forces.

This is probably the RPR's most original contribution to current thinking on the defense system and is reminiscent of Col Charles de Gaulle's proposals in his book "Vers l'Armer de Metier" [Toward a Professional Army].

Despite the gap between it and the UDF, Mr Chirac's party is anxious to stress that "France has pursued its defense policy with a continuity which changes of president and Parliament have not deflected from its goal." This is one way of accusing of heresy the party which claims to be the head of state's "backing force."

MICHEL JOBERT CRITICIZES CURRENT DEFENSE PLANS, OFFERS OPTIONS

LD041523 Paris LE MATIN in French 31 May-1 Jun 80 p 12

[Article by former French Foreign Minister Michel Jobert: "For a Chinese-Style Defense"--first paragraph is editorial introduction]

[Text] Let us organize our defense like the Chinese, let us prepare for transferring our cities to rural areas to withstand nuclear blackmail and let us reduce the duration of the draft--these are the guidelines for the new defense which Michel Jobert would like to see organized. This is a far cry from the Atlanticist rapprochement and from the "forward battle" advocated by the Giscardians in their recent report.

Facts, like thoughts, run fast. All the same, it would be necessary to be aware of the acceleration of the former. Any brandishing of records is of interest only because of its inspiration and inspirers. Why not look at things more closely? This also applies to the report prepared by the Union for French Democracy [UDF]--a party supporting the president unwaveringly--which would ultimately lead to the French Armed Forces again being put under American control.

Three new elements mark changes in the strategic situation with which France is now confronted:

An increase in Soviet nuclear power speeded up by a very big effort in the passive defense sphere, including a systematic evacuation of cities which are the main targets for nuclear arms;

An improvement in the accuracy of Soviet missiles, which is now thought sufficient to undermine the credibility of the huge "Minuteman" arsenal. If the United States is no longer certain of its missiles' survival, what future can we see for our 18 wretched Albion Plateau missiles?

And an increasingly apparent deterioration in the training conditions and potential of the three branches of France's Armed Forces, which are giving way under the weight of a manpower which has become useless as a result. Naturally, in order to improve the situation, the easiest solution is being sought--the number of draftees is being reduced. Last year, one-third of all draftees did not do their national service (and not one-fourth as it was complacently announced following some juggling with the available figures).

What are France's military priorities as can be reasonably determined on the basis of the threats hanging over our country? Let us look at them in decreasing order of importance.

The strategic nuclear risk remains the main risk. A sudden and massive nuclear attack in Europe is the hypothesis most often mentioned by the U.S. and Soviet general staffs. Looking at the matter from this viewpoint, it should be obvious to all--which, unfortunately is not the case--that Albion Plateau missiles and missile-launching nuclear submarines (SNLE), whether in dry dock or resting off Ile Longue--which would never have enough time to leave Brest Harbor, which would become a dangerous trap for our own submarines--would become prime targets. As for any remaining arms--48 missiles if we are lucky and 16 if some misfortune befalls one of our SNLE's just at the moment when only two of them are on the high seas--how effective will they be against Soviet cities evacuated beforehand?

Nuclear blackmail is the second risk. Since France has adequate arms to deter any direct action, the best thing will be to make it forego the use of its arms on its own volition. The adversary's nuclear blackmail will be the more effective because he will be in a favorable situation: His cities will have been evacuated while our urban centers will remain perfect targets, inhabited by a panic-stricken mob prepared to surrender on any terms.

Steps should be taken with such a possibility in mind. Is there any solution available other than the solution adopted by the Soviet Union and China and intensely studied by the United States, namely, the adoption of a plan for evacuating cities and sustaining a population more widely scattered throughout the country, thus insuring that an effective in-depth defense organization would be able to fulfill its true role?

The risk of a conventional conflict ranks only third, and yet according to present budget commitments it appears to rank first. [paragrapg continues]

And even then, unless effectiveness is ensured, who can believe that the wretched draftees, as they are organized now, could stop any commandos thrown against our country's vital installations? Money is being squandered in the present state of unpreparedness and the public is being hoodwinked. The situation in which the nation has found itself can only encourage any adversary to launch sudden strike operations which would be bound to succeed.

On the basis of these few data you can easily outline a coherent defense organization. There is no coherence in any sphere of armaments: The aim is to considerably increase our nuclear potential by broadly developing the systems which seem most effective. This implies that the variety of nuclear weapons should be reduced as a priority. There is a plethora of types of nuclear weapon! To humor the general staffs at least four types of weapons carried by aircraft have been allowed to be developed: the bombs which the Mirage IV's carry, the tactical missiles carried by the Jaguars, and soon the ASMP [presumably medium-range air-to-surface missiles] missiles and the naval air service weapons. There are also the S-3 missiles, the Pluton missiles and the replacements already being planned for them, the Hades missiles and the mobile strategic missiles whose forthcoming appearance has been announced! This is far too many. A deterrent policy is only credible if it is given strong lines which make it clear. Too much flexibility saps its strength.

These systems, which have to be mobile to be less vulnerable are: The ballistic nuclear missiles carried by nuclear submarines. Their number should be increased--doubled--to counter the growth of the enemy defense system and the loss of their effectiveness.

Mobile strategic missiles, but on a different scale from government statements. This is not a complementary system but a system comprising several hundred missiles which can be used either as a strategic system or even as a tactical weapon. Giving several missions to one system means that enough units can be produced and that it can be made into an effective weapon.

With regard to manpower: We must put an end to an army comprising big batallions--this is yesterday's army which is being artificially maintained and for which the nation makes a considerable, wasted effort. It should be replaced by an organization having two levels:

A professional army designed primarily to serve and protect the deterrent force. Its component parts will have been balanced, the navy will have been nuclearized and rendered mobile and the air force, with considerably reduced missions, restored to suitable tasks. The ground forces should also be reduced and their design completely revised.

The contingent which is used in the operational defense of the territory, planning the population's reception, resistance to blackmail and the defense of a neighborhood familiar to it. It would carry out a reorganized and short military service (it cannot be longer than 4 months if the whole contingent, aside from excepted cases, is to be drafted). This short period would be spent in small units far from the cities; training would be intensive: life tough, a great deal of marching, very little motorized transport, becoming acquainted with the territory. Its "defense" would be rehearsed. The scenarios, leaders, weapons and organizational bases would be known and these form the links in the chain of national protection. The contingent would remain operational on the spot for a long time. They would learn things and get to know each other.

Today everything is theoretical and distant and certainly corresponds to what will not happen or what would be useless if war were to return to our territory. For 6 years we have gone from approximations to about-faces, from vacillation to subtlety and, in this sphere as in many others, the country hardly knows what is expected of it or on what and on whom it can rely. The recent UDF report is curiously reminiscent of old dreams of a war game played under the wing of the great American eagle.

NEW TERRORIST GROUP CLAIMS CREDIT FOR MILAN BOMBING

AU031715 Rome ANSA in English 1525 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Text] Milan, June 3 (ANSA)--A group calling itself "Comrades Organized in Partisan Nuclei" claimed responsibility for today's dawn bomb attack against Milan police headquarters.

No one was injured but damage was substantial after a pick-up truck loaded with explosives blew up near the police building. All the cars parked nearby were destroyed or seriously damaged.

An anonymous telephone tipster told the Milan ANSA office that the explosion was the work of the "Organized Comrades", the first time this organization has identified itself.

PARTY LEADERS COMMENT ON DONAT-CATTIN ISSUE, ELECTIONS

AU040859 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Text] Rome June 4, (ANSA)--The increasingly bitter campaign in Italy leading up to the June 8 and 9 vote for new regional, provincial and municipal councils up and down the peninsula remains centered on the issue of Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga's credibility in the wake of the Donat-Cattin affair.

Communist Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer, whose party is gathering signatures in Parliament to ensure public debate on allegations that Cossiga aided and abetted the escape of a suspected terrorist, told a national television audience last night that the full truth of the matter must be sought through all means of enquiry possible. He added that this search for the truth must be conducted also to combat the widespread lack of confidence in democrat institutions.

At the center of the explosive issue are the statements gathered by police from an imprisoned terrorist who alleged that the prime minister tipped off Carlo Donat-Cattin, the deputy secretary of his own Christian Democrat Party [DC], so that Donat-Cattin's 28 year-old son, Marco, could escape capture. Marco Donat-Cattin is sought by police as a member of the Front Line urban guerrilla organization, the second most powerful in Italy after the Red Brigades, and in connection with a number of political slayings as well. He dropped out of sight over two years ago and a warrant for his arrest was signed last month. On Saturday, a parliamentary commission shelved the case by a simple majority (eleven votes to nine) of its twenty members on the grounds that the allegations against the prime minister were "manifestly unfounded".

The Communist Party is now spearheading a drive virtually certain to garner the 313 signatures of members of Parliament required to reopen the case for full parliamentary debate.

In his question and answer session with newsmen before the cameras last night, Berlinguer strongly reaffirmed that "continuing with this government is risky" and went on to call for replacing Cossiga's Christian Democrat-Socialist-Republican party coalition with a cabinet which includes Communist representation. "If this is not possible, we can imagine governments without our participation, even with the Communist Party still in the opposition, so long as they are less damaging for the country", the Communist Party secretary said.

Berlinguer then levelled a series of charges that the current Cabinet is "living day to day" and "doing nothing to combat inflation" and "doing nothing to halt the decline in production, for the unemployed and for the regions of the nation's south". According to the Communist Party leader, Italian foreign policy consists of "an alignment with the United States" and the "endorsement" of new American initiatives connected to the American hostages held in Iran, "as demonstrated by the cases concerning the Olympics and the sanctions".

The secretary of the Socialist Party, Bettino Craxi, addressing a rally in Florence yesterday, declared that "attempts are being made with all means available to throw out the government which was just formed", in connection to the Donat-Cattin affair. The Socialist secretary then warned that the course of action adopted by the Communist Party involves the risk of creating even bigger problems.

Turning to his own party, Craxi told the Tuscan voters that the Socialists are directly committed in the current government to guaranteeing a framework of stability and governability and are consistently maintaining the responsibilities they have undertaken. According to the head of Italy's third party, trailing the Christian Democrats and Communists by several percentage points, the outcome of the ballots which will be cast over 43 million voters next week is extremely difficult to predict at present.

Giuseppe Bartolomei, the Christian Democrat floor leader in the Senate, argued yesterday that "the ruthlessness and violence of the Communist attitude" is bringing out the real political nature of the major opposition party which is, in the words of the DC spokesman, "on the ropes". Speaking to a rally in the north-central province of Arezzo, the Senate whip declared that the Communists are now adopting all possible means to "distract public opinion in a bid not so much to recover consensus as to make the DC lose".

The Christian Democrat speaker of the Senate, Amintore Fanfani, told a gathering in Rome yesterday that next week's vote should lead to returns "urging the government to go ahead and implement the platform approved by Parliament". This platform, Fanfani said, "requires the government to defend the nation's democratic security against any assault and commits it to economic recovery despite inflation, to facilitate the development process of the European Community and to take part in and become involved in a new dialogue between the powers and with the superpowers to dispel the dark clouds gathering and bring hopes of peace back to the world. These are the reasons", the Senate speaker affirmed, "which caused the secretaries of the three majority parties to confirm their esteem and confidence in the prime minister yesterday, for continuing the mandate he has received with the correctness and commitment testified to by the services he has rendered the country".

MINISTER VIEWS TRADE RELATIONS WITH ARABS, OTHERS

LD041427 Rome AVANTI in Italian 23 May 80 pp 1, 16

[Danilo Ghillani interview with Foreign Trade Minister Enrico Manca; date, place not given: "Italian Trade Looks to Opposite Shore of Mediterranean"]

[Excerpts] [Question] There are both external and domestic difficulties. Let us begin with the former: What do you plan to do to help surmount them?

[Answer] As far as international tensions are concerned, I would state first that such problems on the whole are beyond my sphere of competence and are the responsibility of the government as a whole. My particular viewpoint--on which I intend to base all my activity--is as follows: International economic relations must not automatically follow the emergence of tensions on the political plane.

Let us be clear: This does not imply following the principle that "business is business," but means that I consider it necessary to make every effort to maintain (even in the case of a thin thread, as with Iran) and if possible develop trade relations which, it should be remembered, are also reflected in better relations among countries, the enrichment of human, technical and cultural experiences. The weakening of economic relations brings with it material damage to both parties involved and makes it more difficult to resolve the political causes of the tensions.

Energy requirements and the means for meeting them: This too is a commercial problem with a major political aspect. Our major suppliers are and will long remain the Arab countries. Well, I believe that Italy's--and more generally Europe's--problem is no longer to regard relations with the Arab world purely from a trade viewpoint, but to manage to establish full political relations, recognizing the Arab countries as protagonists of modern history, respecting their national objectives and cooperating in resolving their economic and also political problems, the foremost of which is the creation of an autonomous Palestinian state. Under such conditions the assertion that Italy can become a bridge between Europe and the Arab world is no longer ritualistic or rhetorical but can become a reality, thus assigning to our country a highly important political role on the international scene.

Very briefly, I would say that while Britain is setting its sights on its "special relationship" with the United States, France is playing the role of "heretic" of the Atlantic Alliance and Germany maintains its leadership of the Ostpolitik, Italy could in fact take on this essential role in relations with the Arab world. Furthermore, in this field, Italy would not be improvising a policy for the sake of temporary interests, because for some time it has had no cause for concern in this connection. This is the attitude with which I approached the contacts that I have had with many representatives of the Arab world, especially with my counterparts in Saudi Arabia and Iraq, and I believe that I found full agreement with them.

Last, with regard to the effects stemming from our membership of the European Monetary System [EMS], I believe that our experience in this initial period has been fairly positive. As our party rightly maintains, it is now a matter of pursuing a policy of change based on small adjustments, which do not involve changes in the central EMS exchange rate.

[Question] What do you think of the decision to impose sanctions on Iran?

[Answer] I have stated publicly that I would have favored postponing the sanctions slightly, which would have facilitated the action of the moderate forces in that country and also made it easier for the new Iranian parliament to decide to release the U.S. hostages. This argument is no longer topical, though Britain's decisions have again reopened the polemic on the issue.

I would therefore like to make a slight diversion and express a deep worry. It seems to me that in its international relations, both political and commercial, Italy is in danger of pursuing a weak and at the same time contradictory line of conduct, with the result that it is being accused in certain circles of being "lukewarm" with regard to Atlanticism and Europeanism, while in its specific options it is in danger of behaving like a "teacher's pet" and being more royalist than the king. I believe the clearest example is in relations with the USSR. Following the Soviet aggression in Iran, Italy decidedly "cooled" economic relations with the Soviets by blocking lines of credit, thus harming our own businesses, while France and Germany, apart from declarations of steadfastness, have reactivated their trade relations with the USSR, albeit in different forms.

PCI QUESTIONS 'BLOCKING' OF USSR TRADE

[Unattributed report: "PCI Asks Government: Why Has Italian-USSR Trade Been Blocked?"]

[Text] Rome--Comrades Gerardo Chiaromonte and Paolo Bufalini have presented a question for verbal answer to the prime minister, the foreign minister and the foreign trade minister asking "what obstacles have obstructed and are obstructing the renewal of lines of credit to Italian industrial concerns which have signed or plan to sign contracts of various kinds with the Soviet Union; for information on the factors and circumstances behind the attitudes and decision which led to the block on these credits, which is seriously damaging the national economy and threatening to exclude Italy from the development of economic relations between Western Europe and the Soviet Union for which all the other European countries, especially the governments of the French Republic and the FRG, have been working actively, even in recent weeks; and last, whether the danger of a halt in economic relations between Italy and the Soviet Union is within the scope of the government's general foreign policy lines, and if so, why."

BERLINGUER BLAMES BOTH SIDES FOR WORLD TENSION

LD031201 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 25 May 80 pp 1, 9

[Ugo Baduel report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 23 May speech in Bologna: "Inspiring Bologna Rally"]

[Excerpts] Bologna--The new generations are asking themselves serious questions concerning the major problems of our time. They are the questions of peace and war, freedom, democracy, a new kind of social organization, a new quality of life. These were the topics discussed by Comrade Enrico Berlinguer Friday evening in Bologna's Piazza Maggiore, a square crammed full of boys and girls, young workers and students in the best Bolognese tradition--despite the rain.

Today, as a secular and non-Fideist [18th century philosophical movement] party, we are not heralding to young people the "magnificent and progressive future" of Italy, Europe and the world. Ours is not a concept of a continuous evolution toward progress, well-being and peace. It was, Berlinguer said, the view of the 18th century illuminists, the 19th century positivists and reformists throughout the ages. We have a more dramatic and dialectical view of historical development--a development composed of conflicts, advances and retreats. Therefore, looking at the situation reached in human history and the threatening trends emerging in international life, we now by no means exclude the possibility of mankind's regression or indeed extinction. This would indeed be the fate of human civilization in the event of a conflict fought with the atomic and nuclear weapons whose destructive power is incomparably greater than the weapons of the past. It is well known that the atomic and nuclear weapons already built and tested are sufficient to destroy our planet seven times over.

But who could want that? Berlinguer asked. Here too there is a new element with respect to the past. It is difficult now--and I would not like to do so--to identify any state or government that has such an intention. But if this is the case, and if it is nevertheless true that a general conflict fought with nuclear or atomic weapons is a possibility, then this means that the causes which could lead to such an outcome must be sought in the very course which interstate relations are taking, in the effects of the policy pursued by some of these states and, last, in the connections between these two elements.

Comrade Berlinguer pointed to three specific factors in a risk that could become "incalculable":

1--The increasingly unbalanced and, rightly, less and less accepted relationship between the world's South, that is, the vast areas of underdevelopment and backwardness, famine and drought which do not want to remain as they are, and the world's North, that is, the industrially developed, high-income areas which still do not realize that this imbalance will cause increasing heat unless its underlying causes are corrected.

2--The almost unbridled pace reached and being maintained by the arms race in which, moreover, the weapons, although highly sophisticated--and sometimes for that very reason --did not rule out the possibility of errors and accidents.

3--The growing rivalry and opposition in recent times between the United States and the USSR. This has led to the general exacerbation of international tension and therefore also to increasing difficulties in tackling the problems of the North-South imbalance and the problems connected with the need to restrain the arms race.

None of the problems, Berlinguer added, can be resolved without reestablishing a climate of detente and in particular positive relations between the two major powers. The issue of the differing opinions regarding the very different U.S. and Soviet social systems does not and must not enter into this context. That is another issue which can be debated but which is irrelevant to the examination of the actual circumstances which have recently led to such a tragic aggravation of international tension. This examination, Berlinguer said, must be carried out with reference to the facts, and if one looks at the facts it is certain that there have been actions both by the United States (the quest for a unilateral solution in the Middle East, the refusal to recognize the Palestinian people's rights, the entire policy of reprisals against the Soviet Union and Iran up to and including the Iran raid, which fortunately failed, the threatened initiatives in the Persian Gulf and the boycott of the Moscow Olympics) but also by the Soviets (the intervention in Afghanistan and certain politicomilitary initiatives on the African Continent) which have acted against the need for detente and have accelerated the crisis.

Immediate Objective: Resumption of Detente

We do not consider war inevitable, Berlinguer said, but we must keep clearly in mind both the objectives to the pursued to avert the danger of a world war and the forces which can and must act to secure these objectives.

The immediate objective is the resumption of detente, of the method of dialogue and negotiation and the rejection of the logic of reprisals and trials of strength between the major powers. This is the first condition for resolving the many current or latent conflicts in various parts of the world, for tackling the problems of North-South relations, for involving all states in building a new world economic and political order based on the observance of every state's independence, justice, equality and mutual advantage, including therefore the advantage of the peoples of both the Third World and the developed world.

The major powers and every other state, he added, must feel and know that they can no longer carry out acts of force, embark on military ventures and exert pressure to the detriment of other states and countries, including Italy.

Berlinguer pointed out that there are major forces in the world and in the individual countries which can move in this direction. As far as the states are concerned, he indicated in particular the nonaligned countries most active at this moment in international life (Yugoslavia, India and Mexico) and then discussed the issue of the West European countries.

The situation in Western Europe is complex. U.S. pressure is being exerted in an attempt to secure the Europeans' full alignment with U.S. decisions and therefore to deprive the EEC and its member countries, in fact Western Europe as a whole, of all autonomy. But there are also European governments which are more or less determinedly resisting these pressures and refusing to accept all the U.S. demands (Berlinguer cited the latest instances concerning in various ways France, West Germany, Britain, Norway, and so forth) and which are striving to keep open the channels of dialogue with the Eastern bloc. Then on the other hand there are other countries--including Italy, unfortunately--which passively submit to the directives of the White House and its most extremist spokesmen, even at the cost of causing serious economic harm to the country (the sanctions against Iran) or of conflicting with the feelings of the majority of the population (the decision not to participate in the Olympics).

Hence the need, Berlinguer said, for the active involvement of the decisive forces--the forces of the people, of the ordinary men and women and young people who most desire peace--to exert pressure on the government to ensure that the detente process resumes its course. Berlinguer recalled past years, the fifties and sixties, when there were moments of very grave danger to world peace. Then the mobilization and initiatives of broad masses made their strength felt and helped to avert those dangers. So this is what must be done again now throughout the world, in Europe and primarily in our own country, in Italy.

But, Berlinguer continued, in this decisive phase our principal action and our attention center in the need to establish a special role and initiative for the European workers movement. We must fill a gap which has existed in the life of our continent and throughout the world and which has also burdened the development of socialism.

Some 50-60 years ago, the PCI secretary general recalled, a deep split appeared in the European workers movement, which was reflected above all in the separation of socialists, social democrats and communists. It stemmed partly from the desire--which inspired the forces which created the communist parties--to free the workers movement, or at least part of it, from the shackles and shortcomings of social democracy, which in many countries had capitulated to war and various forms of fascism and which in any case had not proved capable of leading the working class and the workers beyond capitalism.

It is impossible now to recall all the complicated events which followed. However, I would like to point out, Berlinguer said, that the split occurred and endured partly as a result of objective causes. Early this century social democracy was able to form and to remain substantial partly as a result of imperialist stances on the part of certain Western states and the colonialist exploitation which those states inflicted on other countries. Metropolitan capitalism therefore secured enormous and excessive profits which permitted even broad scope for a reformist policy, for the birth of what Lenin called the "workers' aristocracies," which were able to enjoy economic and social advantages but only by sacrificing political and ideological autonomy from the bourgeoisie and capitalism and therefore any substantial change in the capitalist system.

At the same time, Berlinguer continued, the historical conditions of the thirties and forties drove the communist parties to unite around the USSR and to adopt the USSR as the model socialist society. We Italian Communists too went through this phase and perhaps even for a length of time and to a degree unjustified in such a phase. But, the PCI secretary general added, we Italian Communists always sought--first with Gramsci and later with Togliatti--to develop our own individual theoretical formulation and our own original political stance, in accordance with the overall view of the situation in which the Italian Communists had to work, which was made explicit and summarized later in the expression "the Italian road to socialism" and which in recent years has been called "Eurocommunism."

Fundamental Crisis of Capitalism

To a large extent, Berlinguer said, the conditions which objectively and subjectively created the split in the workers and peoples movement have now changed. How? On the one hand, the collapse of the colonial system and the emergence of countries of a new kind on the world scene; and on the other, the growth of the organized trade union and political strength of the Western working class and workers, who have made great strides in gaining new rights and better living and working conditions and who exert, as in Italy, a decisive influence on national political life. [paragraph continues]

These two joint causes have led to the present crisis of capitalism--a fundamental crisis affecting even its development machinery, its traditional tools for correcting the effects of economic crises, its values and ideas. It is a crisis which now constitutes an imminent threat to the workers' gains in the individual countries but which is also tending to unload its effects onto the entire population of the capitalist countries and on all the world's peoples. Thus the conditions for the survival of the workers' aristocracy have largely disappeared and been increasingly depleted.

Hence the more or less accentuated turmoil reflected in all political groups whose theories and action are based on the hypothesis that one can restrict oneself to merely correcting or adjusting capitalism in terms of one or other of its "drawbacks" or "flaws": This is the crisis and the guest apparent in the social democratic parties and in the Christian-inspired movements and parties.

The communist parties, or at least some of them, including ours, Berlinguer added, have also begun to draw all the conclusions from past lessons and errors and from the new factors which characterize the problems of the present phase, particularly in two basic directions:

1--The affirmation of full autonomy and the rejection of any outlook implying the acknowledgement of a "leading" party or state;

2--The indication of a strategy for the struggle for socialism and to build a socialist society in the West which criticizes and transcends the forms in which socialism has been realized hitherto and which at the same time criticizes and transcends the limitations of the social democratic experiments. The special characteristic of this theory and strategy lies in the effort to achieve socialism on the basis of democracy and its development, in the effort to build a socialist society which will guarantee and expand all freedoms.

This means, Berlinguer explained, not only guaranteeing a legal order that observers civil liberties but creating a social and political system that will facilitate the leanings and vocations of the individual, the full affirmation of individual personality, and individual dignity, by freeing men and women from every kind of exploitation, oppression, discrimination and alienation. And you young people, Berlinguer said, you whose body and soul, aspirations, feelings and ideas are all wounded and damaged by capitalism, certainly all feel this more than others.

People may, indeed do wonder whether a prospect such as the one for which we are working --still unexplored--and the form of socialism which we want are possible. We would reply first that, unless we embark on this road, there will be no deliverance and no future. Therefore, however arduous, it is the only road which presents itself to us as historically necessary and inalienable.

The October Revolution, Berlinguer pointed out, was victorious because in that historical phase and those national conditions it proved possible to build a social alliance which at that moment represented the vast majority of the population, namely, the alliance between workers and peasants. Revolution in this historical phase and in the specific conditions of the developed capitalist countries can only take place if the working class manages to build a system of alliances which, because of the breadth of the forces which it embraces, is in a position to democratically defeat the resistance of the conservatives and reactionary capitalist groups.

These forces must include the major working masses, broad strata of the middle class, women and their emancipation and liberation movements and you yourselves, Berlinguer exclaimed, addressing the large Piazza Maggiore crowd: You young men and women of the eighties.

Our Strategy's Revolutionary Value

In the political field, today this means not only seeking an understanding among the parties of the workers movement with a view to their reunification on new foundations, but also seeking understanding and cooperation with other unquestionably popular forces, such as--both in Italy and in other countries--the Christian-inspired forces. Herein lies the innovative and revolutionary value of our strategy with respect to the strategies pursued hitherto by the West European socialist, social democratic and leftwing parties which have, at best, only managed to enter government from time to time, in an attempt to remedy the damage done by the conservative governments which preceded them and introducing a few limited reforms later immediately countered by the action of subsequent conservative governments. Our strategy, however--while we stand firm on the rule that every minority has the right to aspire to and must have the opportunity democratically to become a majority--is one which aims (always following the democratic method, that is, through the gathering of consensus) to wrest from the conservatives and reactionaries the strata of workers and people and middle class forces embraced--contrary to their underlying interests--within the center and rightwing blocs. This strategy lends regenerative strength to a broader and stronger basis of consensus, thus enabling it to introduce, in a gradual but lasting fashion, into the economic and social order general changes and transformations in the direction of justice and efficiency.

This is the regenerative and revolutionary, not opportunist or compromising significance of the Italian Communists' unitary strategy with respect to the socialist comrades and the democratic Catholics. Herein lies the fundamental consistency of the relationship which we establish between democracy and socialism. And this must serve as a reply to those who are now saying that we do not need democracy, that socialism has no future and is a meaningless word.

Berlinguer added that it is unrealistic to believe it possible to approach socialism while isolated within the context of Western Europe, without intervening in and influencing the world situation as a whole. The world significance of establishing the strategy of Eurocommunism, he said, lies also in the fact that the West's transformation toward a form of socialism based on democracy will influence, by the force of example (and not by means of moralistic sermons), the development in a democratic direction of the already existing socialist societies--a development which will take place in the manner and forms suited to each country.

ALGERIAN FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR OFFICIAL VISIT

LD041456 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Excerpts] In an atmosphere of anticipation and expectation, and after a delay of more than 1 1/2 hours, Algerian Foreign Minister Mohamed Seddik Ben Yahia has arrived in Madrid. It is thought that the Algerian minister could now be reporting to the Spanish Government on the capture of the 15 crew members and the probable sinking by the POLISARIO Front of the Spanish fishing boat, Garmomar, and on Algerian support for the POLISARIO Front, the exponents of this action.

Mr Ben Yahia said that his is a working visit to make contact with top officials in the Spanish Government, and that he is fully confident of its usefulness. He also said that his meetings will comprise a review of Spanish-Algerian relations and international problems. On this last point, he said that he trusts [word indistinct] they will talk about such urgent problems as the Sahara. Then he denied the possibility that he will meet other Spanish parliamentary political leaders.

Asked what he thought about the fact that the most spectacular feature of his visit would be the incident of the Spanish fishing boat, he said that he will give his opinion when he knows the information and the opinion of the Spanish Government.

DEFENSE MINISTER VIEWS MILITARY REFORM, ENTRY TO NATO

LD050829 Madrid ABC in Spanish 1 Jun 80 pp 12-15 (Supplement)

[Pilar Urbano interview in Madrid with Spanish Defense Minister Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun: "Rodriguez Sahagun: 14 Months as Civilian Defense Minister"--date not given]

[Excerpts] An Ambitious Military Reform

[Question] Let us discuss, Mr Minister, the "military reform." What are you seeking to achieve? Toward what kind of armed forces are we heading?

[Answer] I have thoroughly studied the previous military reforms. They were technically all good, but I believe that ours is the most important and ambitious out of love for Spain, and based--this is important--on confidence, respect and deep esteem toward the entire military system. Prime Minister Suarez stated our aspiration in his investiture speech: to possess permanently ready armed forces, which would be in themselves a factor of deterrence--it is more important to avert a war than to win one--with a capacity for immediate and effective reaction to a hypothetical aggression, and which could support our foreign policy; in the highly complex world of international relations, vigorous and effective armed forces are a key factor for having independence in decisionmaking. Now then, possessing a defense organization which will enable us to make that immediate reaction which will preserve peace, without needing to be permanently mobilized, requires complex structures, considerable financial resources and a determination to integrate and coordinate. This is the aim of the "military reform," which must be supplemented by enabling all professional servicemen to achieve real, complete fulfillment in their careers, in their vocation.

Just over 2 years ago, we had three independent military ministries. Coordination was inadequate, although the general staff attempted to rectify this; but there was no authority to effect this coordination. That is why the Defense Ministry was set up, integrating those three ministries. This is a real challenge for the combined organization. It will be a laborious and lengthy process, which will demand dedication and imagination, because many differences in viewpoints, organization, regulations and terminology still persist....And I wish to make it clear that I am speaking of the need to integrate our services, but there is no question at any time of a "unification," since each service has specific and distinctive elements stemming from the environment in which each of them must operate or from traditional aspects to be preserved, which can and should be maintained, as has been acknowledged in the organic law on basic criteria of national defense and military organization.

Spain and the Atlantic Alliance: "It Will Not Entail Additional Costs"

[Question] The government has already declared itself in favor of joining NATO. Why not neutrality?

[Answer] Passive neutrality would be almost tantamount to subservience to other people's interests. Active neutrality would mean an enormous financial effort which we could not sustain. Moreover, our strategic position makes it hardly feasible for us to be able to remain outside a widespread European conflict. That is why I believe that we must pursue the alliances best suited for the defense of our security. And since Spain is on the ideological, political, geographic--and also, in the future, economic--map of the West, the logical thing is for us to align ourselves clearly with the West. Although the government and the government party have repeatedly declared themselves in favor of our joining NATO, it must also be said that this process should be started when it suits us best and after a broad and serious national debate, without "prejudices." Moreover, as I have said on other occasions, it is a matter, above all, of finding out and assessing. "Yes," but on what terms, with what negotiations and with what entry procedure? It is not a matter of "yes" at any price; it depends on the results of negotiations. And if we are to say "no," the question which we must all ask ourselves and answer is: With what consequences?

[Question] There are politicians and experts on the matter who assert that the costs of our joining NATO would be enormous. What do you say?

[Answer] I say that some of these theories stem from preconceived approaches. Confirming the viewpoints of two major experts who are colleagues of mine--Maj Angel Lobo and Luis Marco--I will tell you that membership will not mean additional costs of sufficient magnitude for the financial argument to influence the political decision. Joining the Atlantic Alliance lies within our financial means. Moreover, it could be very favourable for Spain, as far as the arms industry is concerned.

PASSAGE OF SOVIET NUCLEAR 'GHOST SHIP' REPORTED

LD041501 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 30 May 80 pt 1 p 8

[Mognes Auning report: "Russian 'Ghost Ship' Went Through the Great Belt"]

[Text] A ghost ship, a submarine which the Soviet Navy claims does not even exist, has just passed through Danish waters.

The submarine is one of the six armed with nuclear missiles of the Golf-2 class which have been stationed in the Baltic since the latter half of 1976 as part of the Soviet Union's strategic nuclear force.

Both Denmark and Sweden have lodged a protest about the six submarines.

They are armed with missiles of the N-5 Serb type armed with nuclear warheads. The missiles have a range of 1,210 km. The ships are described as a sort of floating battery and are said to have been assigned targets in Western Europe.

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE caused much international controversy when it reported that the submarines were stationed in the Baltic with their base at the naval port of Liyepaya, in southern Lithuania.

When Denmark and Sweden protested the missile submarines' presence in the Baltic--the "Sea of Peace" as the Russians call it--TASS dismissed the protests as a noisy propaganda campaign. That was in March. In September Soviet Baltic Fleet Deputy Commander Vice Adm I.M. Kapitanets visited Copenhagen. He was asked about the ships.

There are no such submarines armed with nuclear weapons, he told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE.

Nevertheless, the nonexistent submarines sail out of the Baltic now and then to test their missile firing equipment in the Barents Sea.

The last time this happened was in mid-April, when one of the six Golf boats went through Danish waters bound for the north. On Tuesday it returned through the Great Belt on its way to its base in the eastern Baltic.

SHIPS ALLEGEDLY CARRYING ARMS TO SOUTH AFRICA

LD041425 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 2 Jun 80 p 6

[TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Denmark: Arms to South Africa"]

[Text] Copenhagen--Danish vessels supply arms to South Africa despite the arms embargo that the United Nations introduced in 1978. The Danish newspaper POLITIKEN reported this in its Sunday edition.

According to POLITIKEN the arms sales, which have been going on for 4 years, have been coordinated by a person in the South African Embassy in Paris. The deliveries have been made by vessels belonging to the Danish shipping company Trigon.

The arms have come from Rotterdam, Lisbon, Romania and Bulgaria, the paper reports.

The article makes it clear that all crew members on board the vessels involved were fully aware of what was going on and that they were well paid for their work.

NO IRAQI OIL TO BE BOUGHT ON ANTI-ISRAEL TERMS

LD041009 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 31 May 80 p 15

["H.R." report: "Energy Minister Poul Nielson: No Oil Trade If There Is an Israel Clause"]

[Excerpt] Energy Minister Poul Nielson considers that his visit to Iraq for introductory talks on possible state oil purchases was constructive.

"No contract on oil purchases has yet been written. We have not reached that point, but negotiations have been started and they seem to bode well," the energy minister said yesterday in his report to the Foreign Affairs Council on his Iraq visit.

There is a great deal of controversy over how far the agreement with Saudi Arabia contains political "discredit clauses." The energy minister maintains that these are commercial clauses.

It has now been claimed that Iraq has inserted weighty "Israel clauses," including one which in effect requires oil purchases to boycott Israel: This requirement is said to be normal in the country's standard contracts.

[Question] "Did Iraq set conditions about 'Israel clauses?'"

"In the first place we did not discuss contract details at all; in the second, no mention of such clauses was made during the negotiations in Iraq; and, finally," energy minister Poul Nielson told AKTUELT, "if it turns out that there is a clause which obliges us to implement sanctions against Israel, for example, then there will be no oil deal."

NORWAY

PRC'S KANG SHIEN, DELEGATION CONTINUE OFFICIAL VISIT

View Oil Installations

OW041948 Paris AFP in English 1836 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Text] Oslo, June 4 (AFP)--Chinese Vice-Premier Kang Shien left here today for Bergen to visit an oil rig in the Stafjord North Sea field on the second leg of his official trip to Norway.

On Thursday, Mr. Kang will also visit Stavanger, Norway's oil capital where he will see a landbase for offshore oil activity, the headquarters of the national Norwegian Statoil Company, and other installations.

Mr. Kang, who arrived here Saturday, has held a series of talks with top Norwegian politicians, including Prime Minister Odvar Nordli. Telling reporters that he was "very satisfied with the results of his visit so far," Mr. Kang said that China had "a lot to learn from Norway" about petroleum developments in the sea.

He stressed that there could be "a significant development of co-operation between the two countries in this sector," but declined to give details about the external development of this co-operation. He said, however, that the development of oil activity on China's continental plateau would create the need for drilling rigs and other oil equipment.

Well-informed sources here indicated that China could forsee setting up joint oil exploration companies with Norway, while observers noted that the Chinese delegation here had shown great interest in Norway's relations with foreign oil companies, their contractual relations and tax systems.

Oil Collaboration To Expand

LD041459 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 3 Jun 80 p 9

[Unattributed report: "China the Oil State Wants To Learn From Norway"]

[Text] It has already been established that oil resources of the Chinese coast are greater than had been estimated, and the Chinese authorities are contemplating the possibility of considerable offshore activities. Because of this China is interested in close cooperation with Norway.

This became clear at the talks a large Chinese delegation under the leadership of Vice Premier Kang Shien had in Oslo on Monday. China wants both assistance from Norwegian experts and cooperation with Norwegian industry to start offshore oil production.

Norwegian industrial concerns could be involved in the building of shore bases, drilling platforms and supply ships. Cooperation will cover both supplies from Norway and Norwegian help in starting domestic Chinese production of equipment for the oil sector.

Norway has given a clear indication of its interest in meeting the Chinese wishes. There is already some cooperation between the two countries in several areas. The Norwegian state has an advisory agreement with China. The Aker Group is negotiating the building of ships and drilling platforms and, in addition, Norcem has established connections with the Chinese. But there is every reason to expect that the extent of collaboration will be expanded considerably.

On Monday morning the delegation went first to the Oil and Energy Ministry and then met Prime Minister Odvar Nordli. Vice Premier Minister Kang Shien also had an audience with King Olav. Industry Minister Lars Skytoen and Trade Ministry Under Secretary Per Martin Olberg were also present at the meeting with the prime minister.

Later in the day Vice Premier Kang paid a call on Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund, when international questions were discussed, especially the situation that has arisen since the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

'Wide-Ranging' Economic Ties Possible

LD031501 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 29 May 80 p 11

[Unattributed report: "Norway and China Broaden Cooperation"]

[Text] China is interested in establishing joint companies with Norwegian industrial concerns as part of its modernization program, and in the not too distant future there is the possibility of wide-ranging economic and industrial cooperation between China and Norway.

This was made clear at a press conference in Oslo on Wednesday, when the joint Norwegian-Chinese trade commission reached agreement on a cooperation agreement intended to increase trade between Norway and China. The agreement will probably be signed during Prime Minister Odvar Nordli's visit to China later this year.

Trade between Norway and China is at present of modest proportions and on the Norwegian side the export of ships has been of the greatest importance in recent years. But cooperation in the energy and oil sectors has already been initiated, and this will be considerably expanded when the Chinese begin exploratory drilling and offshore activities on a larger scale. The Aker Group, for example, has entered into a contract to build an H-3 rig at China's largest shipyard in Luda and several other such contracts are in the pipeline.

Discussions within the commission were led on the Norwegian side by Tor Stokke, departmental head in the Trade Ministry, who pointed out in his report that there are today few restrictions on the import of goods from China. The restrictions principally cover textiles, where China finds itself in the same position as a number of other developing countries. The Chinese delegation was led by Deputy Director An Dong of the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Trade.

Norwegian exports to China in 1979 totaled 176 million kroner and imports totaled 82 million kroner. Ships, metals, paper and artificial fertilizers also comprise a large part of Norwegian exports.

In response to a question from the press, An Dong replied that China could possibly consider the question of exporting manpower to Norway, if there is interest on the Norwegian side. China has already signed contracts for the export of manpower with international companies, for instance for use in the area around the Persian Gulf. But it does not seem that the question was discussed at any of the negotiations between Norway and China.

MINISTERS EXPLAIN CONCESSIONS IN JAN MAYEN AGREEMENT

LD050815 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 29 May 80 p 16

[Arild Isegg report: "Large New Sea Area Under Norwegian Jurisdiction"]

[Text] The Norwegian fishing zone around Jan Mayen has been established effective today after Iceland and Norway yesterday signed an agreement on rights to fishing and resources on the continental shelf, recently negotiated between the two countries. With the new area, Norwegian waters increase by 300,000 square km. At a press conference yesterday both Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund and Fisheries Minister Eivind Bolle were concerned to defend the Norwegian concessions which made the agreement possible.

The foreign minister expressed his understanding of the criticism that has been directed at the agreement in the light of the concessions made by Norway, but pointed out that the government had to take account of the alternative: no agreement and the establishment of a zone without Icelandic consent. The Icelanders would then assert its rights and so make the area a conflict zone, or to employ no force to that end, with the consequences that this might have.

"The agreement can lay the foundation for cooperation, while the alternative would be conflict. To bring about the agreement, a number of concessions had to be made in the third and final round of talks," the foreign minister said, pointing out also that Iceland had reduced its demands from the earlier rounds of talks.

Even if the foreign policy considerations are ignored, the foreign minister was of the opinion that it must be a definite advantage for Norwegian fishermen to be able to enter the zone without being in constant conflict with the Icelanders.

Fisheries Minister Eivind Bolle declared himself in complete agreement. From the viewpoint of fisheries policy the agreement could have been better, but a general evaluation taking fisheries policy into consideration deems it acceptable. It is important that we achieve regulated and controlled conditions, the fisheries minister said. He pointed out that it is not only the capelin stocks that are of interest here, but also another kind of cod (gadus poutrassou) in which the Icelanders themselves are not particularly interested but which is valued by other nations.

The Oslo ambassadors of the countries affected by the establishment of the fishing zone were yesterday called to the Foreign Ministry and briefed on the agreement with Iceland. In addition to the Scandinavian countries' ambassadors those of Belgium, the Netherlands, France, Britain, Canada, the United States, East Germany, Poland, the Soviet Union and Austria were involved.

The Soviet Union is one of the countries which fishes for gadus poutrassou in the area, and assurances were given that there was no question of a prohibition on fishing for this type of cod coming into force at the same time as the establishment of the zone. Primarily, the Soviet Union disputes Norway's right to a Jan Mayen Zone, but for the moment this is absorbed by the respect being shown by Norway for traditional Soviet fishing interests in these waters.

Storting Committee Approval

LD041145 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 31 May 80 p 29

[Unattributed report: "Storting Approves Jan Mayen Agreement"]

[Text] The Jan Mayen agreement between Norway and Iceland is given unanimous support by a strengthened Foreign Affairs and Constitution Committee in the Storting. This is clear from the proposal from the committee which will be discussed in the Storting this coming Friday. The alternative is no agreement and open conflict between Norway and Iceland, the committee concludes.

The strengthened Foreign Affairs and Constitution Committee does not hide the fact that there is dissatisfaction with the agreement among fishing circles.

"The solution that was negotiated means major concessions by Norway on fishing." In this connection the committee would especially like to point to the considerable rights granted to Iceland with regard to fixing capelin quotas for waters off Iceland and Jan Mayen. But, the committee goes on to say, an important consideration for the committee here was the fact that Iceland, through this agreement, recognizes Norway's right to establish a fishing zone around Jan Mayen.

In unanimous recommendation of the agreement, the following reasons are given:

"The alternative would be no agreement and open conflict between Iceland and Norway." It is not only from the point of view of foreign policy that this, in the view of the committee, would have wide-ranging harmful effects, it would also be difficult to assert our fishing interests in such a situation.

IMPLICATIONS OF FRYDENLUND MOSCOW VISIT VIEWED

LD031601 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 30 May 80 p 2

[Editorial: "The Journey to Moscow"]

[Text] There is little reason why Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund's Moscow trip this fall, which somewhat suprisingly has already been announced publicly, should give rise in Norway to a debate of the pros and cons. We have to admit that the foreign minister is right when he declares that it has always--even after the Soviet Afghanistan invasion--been a Norwegian principle that the channels for negotiation between East and West should be kept open. The Muskie-Gromyko meeting in Vienna is a confirmation of the fact that the United States which has responded to the invasion with much tougher measures than its European allies, also thinks that a dialogue with Moscow could be useful. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's imminent Moscow visit falls into the same category.

Visits for political talks, which are well prepared and do not create doubts about the views of the guests on important topics--like the Afghanistan crisis--cannot be interpreted as sign of "splits" in the Western alliance. We do not doubt that Foreign Minister Frydenlund will put forward Norway's well-known views on the Soviet military action in such a way that his hosts will be left in no uncertainty provided, that is, that the Afghanistan crisis has not been resolved by that time.

There is, however, every reason to expect that the main emphasis during the Moscow talks will be put on relations between Norway and the Soviet Union. It is perhaps unfortunate that there are quite a few questions to be raised under this heading, among others those that the Soviet press quite recently used in a most peculiar campaign against Norway. But not least against the background of Norwegian-Soviet relations we would have been more pleased to see Foreign Minister Gromyko make his long-awaited visit to Norway before Knut Frydenlund went to Moscow. It is established international practice that official visits are responded to with return visits, and it is well known that it is Gromyko's "turn" to come to Oslo.

It seems a little too simple to us when our foreign minister does not attach any special importance to these "reasons of protocol", for the question also has a political side: As recently as last year Gromyko gave the definite impression of using unresolved Norwegian-Soviet disputes as a reason for putting his Oslo visit on ice. But it is difficult to see how these problems can have been solved in the meantime. Against this background the circumvention of "protocol" can cause enormous political misunderstandings.

Foreign Minister Frydenlund sees no connection between his visit to Moscow in the fall and the Norwegian boycott of the Olympic games. In our opinion this is a correct evaluation. There is a basic difference between political visits for talks and a mass arrangement that the host country can use for blatant propaganda. The timing of the foreign minister's visit also underlines this distinction, even though the head of the West German Government--whose country is boycotting the Olympic games--has not thought it necessary to attach any weight to this consideration. For this reason the two questions must not be confused in our domestic debate.

SWEDEN

USEFULNESS, IMPLICATION OF ULLSTEN USSR VISIT PONDERED

LD031257 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 29 May 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Ullsten Travels East"]

[Text] Today Sweden's foreign minister begins a visit to Moscow. He will meet his Soviet counterpart Andrey Gromyko.

The meeting comes about by Soviet suggestion. It will give the Swedish foreign minister the chance to put forward Sweden's views on Afghanistan, Iran, disarmament and Scandinavian security. Ullsten will of course also raise the Agapov and Raoul Wallenberg cases again.

Recently the new U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie has met Gromyko, and French President Giscard d'Estaing has met Soviet President Brezhnev. Around the end of June FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is expected to visit Moscow. Thus Ullsten can point to what others are doing. And like several other West European politicians this tense spring, he has also emphasized that the talks must not be allowed to end: We must prevent detente from being lost.

At the same time, it is a fact that the Soviet Union stands weapon in hand in Afghanistan. The policy of violation goes on. There are new reports of unrest in the capital, Kabul, of arrests and acts of violence by the Soviet occupation forces.

It is true that at the beginning of the year the Swedish Government reacted quickly and strongly in its condemnations of Soviet policy. But it should not be easy to feel that one can be satisfied with such remarks and then hurry off to Moscow. If the violation had effected a country that lay closer than Afghanistan--Czechoslovakia or Hungary, say--it would certainly have seemed impossible for a Swedish foreign minister to visit Moscow while the fighting was continuing between the occupying power and the nation's political groupings.

How is it that so many--including the Swedish Government and the foreign affairs authorities--make a distinction between the two cases? In the case of Czechoslovakia we still, almost 12 years later, emphasize our indignation over how the Prague spring was crushed by keeping our contacts with this country down to civil-servant level. We will not, or course, be traveling to Afghanistan. But it is striking how quickly we are on the scene in Moscow.

One reason is that Czechoslovakia most of all aroused moral indignation, while people quite quickly and perhaps cynically came to the conclusion that world peace was not threatened. There was no need of talks to keep channels open in a tense situation.

Afghanistan, chiefly by virtue of the strong American reaction, is seen as a crisis which can create serious obstacles for efforts toward peaceful coexistence. This is why detente must be salvaged through energetic diplomacy. But in truth the majority in our part of the world, terrible though it may seem, is not concerned about the suffering people in Afghanistan, a distant and culturally backward land. All too few have felt the need for solidarity: Just look at what will happen to the summer Olympics in Moscow.

Nevertheless the Soviet leaders are troubled by the criticism of them. They are making thankful use of the concern for detente in West Europe. Ullsten's visit is surely more welcomed as an example worthy of imitation than Sweden's own political weight really motivates. His desire to travel to Moscow quickly can seem to be more meddlesome than decisive.

PAPER CITES U.S. ELECTION AS HINDRANCE TO CAMP DAVID PROGRESS

LD031045 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 3 Jun 80 p 18

[Editorial: "Europe and the Arabs"]

[Text] Yesterday's attacks against Palestinian Arabs on the West Bank of the Jordan are another sign of a badly deteriorating state of affairs. Mr Begin's flamboyant speech before the Israeli parliament to all intents and purposes marks the end of the talks with Egypt on "autonomy." In Gaza, the long-serving mayor, Mr Rashad Shawa, and all the councillors, handed in their resignations. Local councils on the West Bank were also meeting last night. Mr Begin's Cabinet, meantime, is in almost continuous uproar.

It is not clear who organised the synchronised attempts on the lives of the mayors of three West Bank towns or the grenade explosion in Hebron, though West Bankers had no doubts they came from extremist Israeli settlers. Whether this was so or whether, as might not be impossible, they were the work of the PLO in an effort to incite more violence, the fact is that tension has been steadily rising on the West Bank since the terrorist attack in which six Israelis died in Hebron last month. The scene is set for Mr Begin to feel he has no option but to clamp down an iron military control which will finally knock the stuffing out of that part of the Camp David agreements envisaging Palestinian self-government.

Against this sombre background, one fact stands out: That America, begetter of the Camp David accords, is trussed like a stuffed chicken because there is an election going on. No European parliament or politician has to have regard to a pro-Israeli lobby anywhere approaching the strength of America's. This prompted several European governments--notably Britain's under Lord Carrington's initiative--to launch schemes to draw the PLO into talks by amending the governing United Nations resolution. President Carter has said he would veto it. They are right. When they meet in Venice next week, the EEC heads of government should confine themselves to expressing support for Camp David. Painful though the delay to Nov. 4 may be, anything else would be futile and divisive.

KIPRIANOU CONFERS WITH POLITICAL LEADERS ON PEREZ VISIT

NC041622 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in English 1610 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Text] The president, Mr Kiprianou, today conferred separately with political party leaders on the eve of the arrival in Cyprus of a top UN official. The president saw the secretary general of AKEL, Mr Papaioannou, the chairman of the Socialist party EDEK, Dr Lissaridhis, and the leader of the Democratic Rally, Mr Kliridhis. They exchanged views on developments in the Cyprus problem, particularly in view of the new initiative of the UN secretary general.

AKEL Statement

NC050923 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 5 Jun 80 p 1

[Text of AKEL Central Secretariat statement following party delegation's 4 June meeting with President Kiprianou]

[Text] AKEL Secretary General E. Papaioannou and Assistant Secretary General A. Fandis had a meeting today with the president of the republic, Mr Kiprianou, at his initiative.

At the meeting, President Kiprianou reiterated to the AKEL delegation his views on the Cyprus issue as they have been outlined in his address to the nation, maintaining that there were no differences in line and tactics but that it was a matter of a misunderstanding.

The AKEL delegation referred in detail to the existing differences--as analyzed in the resolution of the extraordinary plenum of the Central Committee and the Central Control Committee--both with regard to the line and tactics for a Cyprus solution as well as to the question of the purge, which rewarded coupists. The delegation also referred to economic and other problems and stressed that life in the past 3 years had shown that it was not possible for AKEL to share responsibility at a time when the Makarios line was not being observed and when the course being followed leads to catastrophe.

Both AKEL and the people's masses are no longer persuaded by words; the people can only judge someone based on his deeds.

On the Cyprus issue, the president was content to tell the delegation that Perez de Cuellar would be coming to sound out the possibilities for resuming the intercommunal talks and if anything came out of it he would brief the party leaders.

Public Information Office Response

NC050925 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 5 Jun 80 p 1

[Text] The Public Information Office, commenting on AKEL's statement, said that the president of the republic did not have in mind to make a statement about his meetings since they were only "private", and were within the context of the efforts to ensure unity and unanimity for joint tackling of the difficulties the country is passing through and for an exchange of views on the Cyprus problem in view of the efforts for resumption of the intercommunal dialogue.

"Instead of a reply, the president of the republic wishes to stress that he has set out his views and positions to the people in his broadcast message on Saturday and that in his efforts for calm he does not intend to add anything for the time being, unless this becomes absolutely necessary", the official statement said.

OFFICIAL NOTES POSSIBLE AL-QADHDHAFI MEDIATION, DENKTAS VISIT

NC051031 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 5 Jun 80 p 8

[Excerpt] Yesterday, an official source in Nicosia did not rule out the possibility that Libyan leader Colonel al-Qadhdhafi might play a mediating role in the Cyprus issue in favor of Ankara and the Turkish side in general, the aim being to break the deadlock and resume the intercommunal talks with sound hopes for success.

The official source expressed this view when asked by our editor to comment on the announced visit to Libya by Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas, who will leave for Tripoli on 11 June.

The source also disclosed that the Turkish Cypriot leader managed to get the invitation to visit Libya recently while in Islamabad, the Pakistani capital, where he attended the conference of foreign ministers of Islamic countries. The same source said finally that Denktas would not visit Tripoli in his pseudocapacity as "president" of the so-called "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" but merely as the representative of the island's Turkish Cypriot community.

DHIMOKRATIA WARNS AGAINST U.S. PLANS FOR BRITISH BASES

NC021234 Nicosia DHIMOKRATIA in Greek 2 Jun 80 pp 1, 7

[From the "Democratically" column: "Again the Bases"]

[Text] According to recent foreign press reports there are plans for Cyprus and other territories in the area to be used by the United States as a "policing center" for the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East; therefore, another role!

Thus far, Cyprus has been famous as an espionage center. For a long time U.S. aircraft have been taking off every day from the island to spy on the Soviet Union and the Arab countries. At the same time, the British-American radar on top of the Troodos Mountains, together with the electronic systems that have been brought from Iran following the overthrow of Pahlavi, "capture" every movement within a radius of hundreds of kilometers of the island. Cyprus also has some kind of...nuclear tradition, ever since a member of the English Government provocatively and cynically declared that special aircraft are permanently stationed at Akrotiri and are ready to take off any time they receive orders to transfer--and drop--nuclear bombs in a possible war!!

Therefore, these roles will now include the role of a "policing center!" This role entails the presence in Cyprus of a section of the 110,000-man special force that has been established at Carter's orders to be used for contemplated U.S. adventures in the Arabian Gulf and the Middle East. The role of the "policing center" also entails the permanent presence in Cyprus territorial waters of units of the U.S. 6th Fleet. All of this is not conjecture; they are facts which stress to the government of the republic and the Cypriot people the urgent duty to struggle and free Cyprus from the NATOite bases and foreign troops!

BRITISH UNDER SECRETARY TEBBIT SPEAKS WITH OFFICIALS ON TRADE

AT041229 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 3 Jun 80

[Text] Great Britain is interested in participating in the bidding for construction of the new Spata Airport, in the Greek railway system; in the new Public Power Corporation (DEI), power stations and in matters related to military and civil aviation.

This interest was expressed by the British Under Secretary of Trade Norman Tebbit to Coordination Minister Boutos whom he visited this morning.

Boutos expressed Greek satisfaction over Britain's interest in regaining its position in Greek trade.

The British under secretary also conferred with Merchant Marine Minister Ioannis Fikioris with whom he exchanged views on merchant marine policy specifically on issues of interest today to the European Community. A desire for mutual cooperation was established during the meeting.

AT041237 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Text] Communications Minister Yeoryios Panayiotopoulos was today visited by British Under Secretary of Trade Norman Tebbit who discussed matters of interest to the two countries in the sectors of transport and communications.

Tebbit expressed his country's interest in cooperation on transportation projects now in hand in Greece such as the Athens Metro, modernization of the Greek railway system, construction and expansion of airports, acquisition of passenger aircraft and installation of underwater communication cables in the Mediterranean area.

Panayiotopoulos told Tebbit that the British interest is most welcome due to the high technological standard of British construction companies as well as because of the imminent full accession of Greece into the EEC.

Questions related to further expansion of trade relations between Greece and Great Britain were also discussed by Deputy Minister of Trade Stavros Tataridhis and Tebbit.

GOVERNMENT, OPPOSITION COMMENT ON BALANCE OF POWER IN AEGEAN

AT041348 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 4 Jun 80 pp 1, 3

[Excerpt] The government yesterday let it be clearly understood it has already promoted methods and prepared ways and means for the implementation of alternate defense plans to protect the balance of power in the Aegean should the relationship between Greek and Turkish forces be disturbed by the new U.S.-Turkish defense agreement. This assurance was proclaimed for the first time in January 1979 by the current President of the Republic K. Karamanlis and reiterated yesterday by the government after publication in the press of excerpts of the U.S.-Turkish agreement and the statement of PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou. According to the opinion of political observers, this preparatory work, which has already been concluded, on the replacement of existing sources of necessary defense armaments tends to strengthen the country's negotiating position in view of the expected U.S. offer for a Greek-U.S. defense agreement.

In answer to a relevant statement by Papandreou the government spokesman yesterday made the following statement:

"The government adheres to the policy laid down by the prime minister in his policy statement which is no different from the statement by K. Karamanlis to which Papandreou made reference. The policy of the government is to maintain a balance of power in the Aegean which is imperative to the country's defense. All necessary steps will be taken to perserve this balance. It is, however, much too early to publicly define the methods and reactions of Greece. At the same time, it is unlikely that the government will disclose details of the defense plans which guarantee the country's security."

The same spokesman, when asked about the accuracy of the published excerpts from the U.S.-Turkish defense agreement which--as is known--was submitted to the Greek Government for consideration, refused to confirm or deny the excerpts.

Papandreou's Viewpoint

A. Papandreou made the following statement:

"The new U.S.-Turkish 'defense' agreement converts Turkey into a permanent U.S. stronghold for the purpose of policing the eastern Mediterranean, the Balkans and the Middle East. In this way Turkey is being turned into a new 'Iran' under the shah with the 'point of the arrow' turned toward the Aegean and Greece. With the additional military aid furnished by West Germany to Turkey the balance of power in the Aegean is completely destroyed. The United States--with the support of West Germany--is establishing a complete economic-technical base for the development of the Turkish war industry within the framework of this agreement.

"In the long run, the danger to our country is fatal. It becomes obvious that its effective neutralization now gains absolute priority. It is consequently imperative that we should proceed as rapidly as possible to the development of our own war industry--in cooperation with countries with an advanced technology. This cooperation must be developed in two, three or even more directions--and it must not be in exchange for providing military 'facilities' (bases) in our country.

"I wish to remind the government of a statement made by Karamanlis to the plenum of the chamber of deputies when he interrupted my own address (16 January 1979) when he stated: 'I must assure you that the government is doing whatever is necessary to prevent the overthrow of the balance of power. The United States has an obligation to respect this balance. Even if the United States proves to be inconsistent I am in a position to inform you that there are other ways in which we can guarantee this balance.' The 'inconsistency' of the United States has already been proved in the most stentorian way. The time has therefore arrived when the government must proceed to the 'other ways' which will guarantee this balance.

"This scandalous strengthening of Turkish chauvinism by the United States and NATO countries also presupposes immediate political action [by Greece]. The government has a duty to stop all negotiations for the return of Greece to NATO's military wing. At the same time it must inform the United States that it does not intend to sign any agreement on the bases--and it must set a deadline, after which it will cease providing 'facilities' to the armed forces of the United States and NATO. At the same time the government must warn the United States that it prohibits the use of these 'facilities' for any form of intervention in the Middle East, the Persian Gulf or Southeast Asia [as published]."

TO VIMA CORRESPONDENT HIGHLIGHTS TERMS OF U.S.-TURKISH ACCORD

AT031439 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 3 Jun 80 p 1

[By TO VIMA correspondent St. Evstathiadhis]

[Text] New York 2 June--The military, economic, industrial and scientific-technological "cooperation" between the United States and Turkey, the basis of which has been defined by the so-called "package agreement" signed in Ankara on 29 March 1980, is more far-reaching and of a broader significance than was originally leaked to the public or announced by Washington and Ankara.

This is obvious even from a superficial reading of the text of the agreements, a copy of which TO VIMA possesses (Note: the United States Government has already given copies of the Ankara agreements to the Greek Government upon the latter's demand). It is most improbable that the agreements do not contain absolutley secret conditions or secret supplementary documents, especially concerning certain points regarding the operation of the U.S. bases in Turkey and the type of "modernization" of the Turkish Armed Forces which the United States plans to implement. However, even these texts of the agreement, which are not really so inaccessible, justify much uneasiness--not only in Greece--concerning the goals and the aims of this U.S.-Turkish military "cooperation."

The United States undertakes not merely to strengthen, reconstitute, modernize and arm the Turkish Armed Forces by delivering the appropriate military materiel "with absolute priority," but also to create the economic-technological basis which will permit Ankara to constantly maintain--even after the conventional termination of the 5-year validity of the agreements--an army with modern and renewable military material.

Perhaps the most significant point of the Ankara "package agreement," of which, in fact, not much has been anncunced, is the agreement on the establishment of new military industrial installations and the extension and modernization of older ones in Turkey. With U.S. money, materials, machinery and technology an industry will be developed in Turkey to produce special explosive materials and devices, rockets and missiles, to recondition engines and airplane frames, electric and air force equipment and also to modernize Turkish tanks, build a modern type frigate and modernize Turkish shipyards.

For more than 3 years it had been Ankara's admitted aim to guarantee U.S. economic-technological cooperation for the creation of a modern military industry and one of the principal reasons for the delay in the finalization and signing of the agreements was that Ankara was not able to secure the U.S. "okay." As soon as that was secured the agreements were signed....

Special provisions are made for strengthening Turkey economically on a permanent basis. The United States recognizes that an economically strong Turkey constitutes a prerequisite for strengthening Turkey militarily and it plans to urge both U.S. private capital and "other NATO allies" to contribute to Turkey's military-economic development in addition to what the U.S. Government will offer "under the best possible conditions."

It is also interesting to note that the agreements do not take into consideration that the fulfillment of at least some of their goals may conflict with Greek interests. For instance, Turkey will have access to all secret information collected by the electronic installations on U.S. bases in Turkey, spy planes and satellites. However, it is not specified anywhere that this information will concern activities of "an opponent." On the contrary, it is specified that the entire cooperation lies within the framework of the spirit and "the extension of the spirit" (sic) of the NATO treaties.

The "package agreement" is composed of 106 pages and contains the generally accepted provisions and the relevant "facilities," granted by the agreements, has three appendices (military cooperation, industrial defense cooperation and operation of the bases) and relevant agreements on the role, operation and so forth of each of the 12 large bases which the Turks grant to the United States for "joint cooperation in taking defensive measures."

RIZOSPASTIS CONDEMNS 'SLANDER' ATTACK AGAINST AKEL

AT041600 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 4 Jun 80 p 1

[Excerpts] The slanderous polemics against AKEL and its patriotic policy, as was recently undertaken by the coordinated efforts of the circles of the right and its press, will be at the expense of the people of Cyprus. This conclusion by political observers was supported by related reports and indications, according to which:

--The slander campaign against AKEL, which is purposely intended at isolating it--to the greatest possible extent--and totally disrupting the patriotic front in Cyprus, is being actively propagated by the anticommunist apparatus and the press circles which have traditionally been close to it on recommendations "from the outside."

--It is specifically stressed that this maniacal campaign "coincides" with a revival and promotion of older plans for the partition of Cyprus under the cloak of the notorious American "formula" or of similar "ideas" which lead to the "NATO" solution of "double enosis."

--As a result of all this, the position of certain democratic forces is alienating. They hastened to criticize the positions adopted by the latest plenum of the AKEL Central Committee while overlooking and ignoring certain basic points and arguments.

Authoritative KKE circles yesterday stressed the following points:

As a result of the well-known AKEL resolution to separate its responsibilities from the current policy of the president of the Cyprus Government, political personalities in Greece have adopted certain positions in the name of solidarity with the people of Cyprus which have often resulted in an open attack against AKEL, an attack which assumes an anticommunist character.

We believe that this in no way helps the cause of the Cyprus issue and it fails to strengthen the unity of the home front to which these personalities refer.

We are, however, particularly impressed by the fact that no consideration was given to the specific criticism by AKEL of the efforts by certain circles to undermine the UN processes. We are also impressed by the fact that the personalities involved in the coup remain still and are promoted within the state apparatus while patriotic fronts are undermined and weakened through systematic discrimination against progressive personalities.

What is of essence today is to have unity among all patriotic forces along the line of internationalization of the issue and implementation of UN resolutions for an independent, nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus, as well as for the effective isolation of junta followers and the tools of imperialism and the abolition of discrimination against progressive personalities in an effort to create the prerequisites for true national unity.

DEMIREL COMMENTS ON IRAQI ATTACK, ECEVIT'S REMARKS, CORUM

TA041641 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Excerpts] Prime Minister and Justice Party leader Suleyman Demirel said that those who place dynamite throughout parts of the state and the country will never be able to divide the country and the nation. Demirel also noted that Turkey and the state cannot tolerate new adventures. In a speech during his party's joint parliamentary group meeting today, Demirel said that RPP leader Bulent Ecevit is conducting agitations and sectarian provocations.

Demirel continued: The honorable Ecevit claimed that a civil war has started in the cities. Where and in which city? The number of people killed during the 21 months when Ecevit was in power exceeded tenfold the number of people killed within 10 years. It is his own administration which made the people fight each other in the streets. It is again Ecevit who is responsible for the fact that the situation remains the same now.

Pointing out that the incident in Corum began with the killing of two policemen, Demirel said that a search was initiated for the murderers of the policemen and that people in a certain quarter built a barricade and prevented the state forces from entering that area. Noting that despite everything the administration acted in a very cool manner, tried to calm the tension and prevented further bloodshed, Demirel continued: In other words, the administration did not allow Corum to be turned into another Kahramanmaras, Elazig, Kars, Malatya or Sivas. In what way is this a civil war? On whose side is the honorable Ecevit? Is he on the side of the martyred policeman or on the side of his murderer?

Referring to the incident when 12 citizens were killed by Iraqis in Hakkari, Demirel expressed extreme sorrow and grief over this incident. Pointing out that the government is waiting for the incident to be fully clarified before adopting a final stand, Demirel said: We are pursuing the matter seriously and with sensitivity. The killings of our citizens will not be forgotten. The Turkish Republic is a great state. It is natural that our attitude will be in accordance with the dignity of a great state.

The ministers and the gendarmerie commander then attended a briefing at the 118th Hakkari Mobile Gendarme Regiment and were briefed by Hakkari Governor Irfan Kurucu on public order issues as well as investments in the city.

PRC ECONOMIC DELEGATION ENDS 10-DAY VISIT

AU040842 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 4 Jun 80 p 7

[Text] On Tuesday [3 June] a high-ranking Chinese economic delegation concluded a 10-day visit to Austria. This visit mainly served the establishment of contacts with prominent Austrian businessmen with a view to gathering experience for business organization and management. The delegation, which had previously visited Switzerland and the FRG, held out the prospect that China may conclude consultation contracts with Austrian companies that seem particularly suitable. A similar delegation visited the United States last year. In addition, the PRC delegation's visit to Austria will apparently also provide opportunities for cooperation in the agricultural sector which, next to light industry, continues to get priority also in the PRC economic plans.

PAPER REPORTS VAN AGT CHANGE OF HEART ON SURINAME MEDIATION

LD031529 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 30 May 80 p 3

[Correspondent's report: "Van Agt Will Not Go to Paramaribo"]

[Text] The Hague, 30 May--Prime Minister Van Agt does not plan to visit Paramaribo in the near future in an attempt to mediate between the Suriname Military Council and Prime Minister Chin-a-sen, as he had contemplated earlier this week. The Dutch prime minister's decision is based on negative advice about such an attempt at mediation; in addition, the fear that a visit to Paramaribo could have an adverse impact played a role in this decision. The question was therefore not discussed further in the short Cabinet meeting today.

MALTA

MINTOFF CRITICIZES EUROPEAN DISREGARD OF MEDITERRANEAN

LD041449 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 30 May 80 p 18

[Arminio Savioli interview in Valletta with Maltese Prime Minister Dominic Mintoff: "Dom Mintoff to the Europeans: "You Are Lagging Behind"--date not given]

[Excerpt] We tackled with Dom Mintoff the topic of Europe and the Mediterranean. The prime minister did not conceal his disappointment or spare his criticism, even with respect to a country such as the FRG, whose government is friendly toward him and whose industrialists ("not out of generosity, let us not deceive ourselves; merely for profit") are contributing capital and technology to the development of Malta's "postmilitary" economy. "The FRG is deeply involved in seeking the paths, means and time scale for its reunification. This is understandable and right. But the national issue is absorbing it to such an extent as to distract it from the other great issue which should also concern it: that of relations with the countries of the southern shore of the Mediterranean."

And France? "France is not aware of the Mediterranean and the problems of peace and security in this sea. It 'leaps over' it, so to speak, in its effort to maintain and extend control over the French-speaking countries of west and central Africa. Or if it concerns itself with the Mediterranean, it does so in a questionable manner. A final instance: The intervention in Tunisia, which has resuscitated the specters of the colonial era."

These are opinions--we objected--which seem to disregard the great plans of the SPD (or at least of Brandt personally) for the development of the Third World, and Giscard d'Estaing's recent "Arab" and "pro-Palestinian" initiatives. Mintoff's reply was that these plans and initiatives must not be disregarded nor overrated. Behind the appearances, the maneuvering, the gestures and the promises, Mintoff detects a deafness, a lagging behind, a reluctance on the part of Europe to really involve itself boldly and with conviction in a Mediterranean peace policy. It is true that, despite and beyond the White House's resounding "mistakes," it is paradoxically sometimes the Americans, or at least some of them, who display--according to the Maltese--greater sensitivity than the Europeans toward certain aspects of the Mediterranean issue. This is demonstrated by the recent visit of a representative of the Washington leadership to Spain, Morocco, Algeria and Malta, who, while talking with the Valletta leaders, recognized "the role of the medium and small countries, in international affairs which has so far been disregarded." Even with respect to the communist issue there is an effort at understanding in the United States. Some members of a U.S. delegation expressed agreement, not only in accepting that the PCI's possible entry into the Rome government is a matter which concerns only the Italians, but also in acknowledging that this would not be a destabilizing factor at all, "since no Italian, no more than any European, is prepared any longer to die for the USSR or for the United States."

According to Mintoff, Europe is experiencing a strange contradiction between a relative passivity and a certain presumption. On the one hand, it says and believes that it is (on its own, with its strength alone) a "third power" on the world scene; on the other hand, it does very little to assert this independent role. However, it is mistaken; in fact in order to really have an effect, Europe--Mintoff says--needs the support and cooperation of the other Mediterranean countries; but it cannot secure this support and cooperation if it does not decide to be effective.

Dom Mintoff's criticisms do not rule out considerable admiration for Europe's economic capabilities, technical and scientific level and cultural heritage. On the contrary, it is precisely because he knows and appreciates Europe's contribution to the history of the world that Mintoff regrets (and is astonished by) what he calls the "pessimism" of the Europeans--even of leftwing Europeans. For instance, he is convinced that Italy has "all the ingredients for building a great future," but "is behaving as if it did not know that it had them." He cannot understand the reasons for certain cautious acts, waverings and relinquishments. He views us (from his island microcosm) as giants hampered by unknown fears. He counters every objection by citing the paucity of his own resources, which does not prevent him--he says, not without pride--from undertaking courageous initiatives. "Our small country, with only 300,000 inhabitants, has eliminated NATO's presence. Italy, with all its power, has supinely agreed to strengthen NATO in Sardinia. Why? I cannot understand it."

ISRAELI, DUTCH FOREIGN MINISTERS DISCUSS RESOLUTION 242

Shamir Views Dutch Position

TA041759 Jerusalem Domestic Service in Hebrew 1700 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Text] At the end of his official meetings in The Hague Yitzhaq Shamir said that Holland is firmly opposed to changing Resolution 242. On the other hand, it is not yet clear whether it will support a declaration supporting self-determination for the Palestinians.

Talking to our correspondent, the foreign minister said that the general position of his interlocutors was one of understanding and friendship although differences emerged on the settlement question. Shamir noted that at this stage it is difficult to foretell the decision of the EEC leaders in Venice in a few days. The foreign minister will arrive in Denmark tomorrow.

Van der Klaauw on Palestinian Issue

TA051839 Jerusalem Domestic Service in Hebrew 1705 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] Dutch Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw said that the PLO's declaration in Damascus a few days ago about the annihilation of the Zionist entity was a shock. This declaration will now be taken into account at the meeting of the EC leaders in Venice when they discuss the Middle East. The Dutch foreign minister spoke with our correspondent at The Hague Tzi Lidar at the end of Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir's visit there.

[Begin recording] [Lidar] We had good and encouraging talks, the Dutch foreign minister said. He immediately added: I was not convinced by Minister Shamir on the issue of the settlements. The Netherlands is opposed to any new settlements and thinks that Israel's policy on this matter does not contribute to the autonomy talks.

Minister van der Klaauw stressed his country's support of Security Council Resolution 242. However, in his opinion, one part of that resolution is outdated, namely, the paragraph referring to the Palestinian problem as merely a problem of refugees. I do not know, the minister added, whether that requires an amendment of the resolution. In fact, that does not matter so much. What is important is that a solution should be found to the Palestinian problem while, certainly, adhering to maintaining Israel's strong security.

Replying to my question, the minister noted that the PLO's declaration in Damascus a few days ago about the need to liquidate the Zionist entity was a shock: In contacts we have had with the PLO so far we have heard completely different things.

[Van der Klasauw speaks in English; Hebrew translation is superimposed] If the PLO has now changed its position it will be much more difficult to involve it in the peace process.

[Lidar] A few months ago an official PLO representative was received by the Dutch Foreign Ministry. I asked the minister whether that meant that the Netherlands had changed its position vis-a-vis the PLO. The minister rushed to reply: That was a misunderstanding. We think that it is helpful to have a certain relations with the PLO; However, I do not want to create the impression that we have recognized that organization.

Nevertheless, the Netherlands supports the right of self-determination for the Palestinians in the framework of a comprehensive and final agreement which would also assure Israel's security. When I asked the foreign minister whether the Netherlands would be in favor of self-determination for the Palestinians in the framework of their own state, Van der Klaauw unambiguously replied:

[Van der Klaauw -in English] If that is the outcome of the peace negotiations--yes. [correspondent translates the above] [end recording]

FEDERAL STATES REJECT GOVERNMENT'S EEC CONTRIBUTION PLANS

LD051514 Hamburg DPA in German 1428 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Summary] Hamburg--The Federal Government's attempt to enlist the help of the federal states in financing the extra cost arising from the Brussels EEC compromise has met with their solid rejection. Both the states with CDU/CSU governments and the ones governed by the SPD declared their opposition to paying a contribution to the Brussels compromise. The Bavarian minister president and CDU/CSU candidate for the chancellorship, Franz Josef Strauss, said in an interview that the Federal Government must make savings in order to provide the necessary sums. To increase consumer taxes would be "the Federal Government's 1980 tax deception." Bavaria was not prepared to join in a financial (?operation). The Federal Government had more than enough money to present itself as a generous spender by making costly tax (?reductions) in an election year.

Hamburg's Finance Senator Noelling said the SPD similarly rejected tax concessions by the state for the sake of EEC finances. The state could not agree to making new sources of finance available to the EEC. Instead of asking the federal states to contribute to EEC finances, the government should make every effort to reform the Common Agricultural Policy.

BUNDESTAG MEMBERS SEND MESSAGE TO U.S. CONGRESS ON CAMP DAVID

LD051232 Hamburg DPA in German 1143 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--Herbert Wehner, leader of the SPD Bundestag group, and many members of the group have sent a message to the U.S. Congress describing the Camp David agreement as the only realistic step capable of leading to an Arab-Israeli reconciliation. The vital interests of the West can be maintained only by a policy of persistent support for the present peace process on the basis of Camp David and UN Resolutions Nos 242 and 338. The signatories, who include Bundestag Deputy President Annemarie Renger, emphasize that also from the point of view of Palestinian self-determination a secure peace in the Middle East can be found only within the framework of Camp David. They stress the need for uniform Western action on the Middle East question.

DIE WELT: U.S. CHANGES EUROPEAN PROTECTION STRATEGY

DW031351 Bonn DIE WELT in German 3 Jun 80 p 8

[Thomas Kielinger Washington dispatch: "The Priority on Europe Dwindles"]

[Text] The world political situation has forced the U.S. President to tacitly carry out a fundamental revision of a political-military concept that has existed up to now. In this particular case it is NATO and the U.S. contribution toward strengthening it in the event of hostilities that is involved. In Washington's future planning this contribution will be reduced. A theory that has been designated for quite some time as the swing strategy says that the United States will make its naval and ground forces stationed in the Pacific quickly available in the event of a Soviet attack in Central Europe--always on the assumption that the Soviet military potential would be concentrated on Europe as the only theater of a possible East-West conflict.

NATO has priority ranking--for decades this had been considered the axiom of the planners in the Pentagon with respect to both the threat as well as the U.S. military-logistic response to this threat. The famous "PRM 10" (Presidential Review Memorandum 10) of 1977 from the first year of the Carter administration once again stipulated the principle of the swing strategy.

This is past history now. The turn away from the swing principle in the past several weeks was explained to the Europeans by Robert Komer, Secretary of Defense Brown's special adviser on NATO affairs. Komer based his argument, which was fully accepted by Brussels NATO quarters, above all, on two reasons: The newly added responsibility of the United States in the Persian Gulf and the surrounding area; then the strongly enhanced Soviet naval presence in the Far East, especially in the area between Korea and Vietnam.

Both theaters in the future will tie up the U.S. military presence more than enough. Admiral Thomas Hayward, U.S. naval supreme commander, recently conceded that the Soviet Naval Forces now have a submarine capacity which is two to three times as great as that of the United States. It is also China, above all, which feels threatened by this growing sea dominance of Moscow. In the former U.S. naval base of Cam Ranh in South Vietnam the Soviet Navy has gained a valuable base through which it succeeded in enhancing its range of action and its supply routes. In addition, there is the control of the air space south of China by the "Backfire" bomber. It has already been seen flying over Vietnam.

The U.S. military presence in the Pacific is already meager enough for purposes of deterrence. According to insiders, it has actually already been tasked beyond its capabilities now that it must look after its new responsibilities in the Persian Gulf on a permanent basis. Burdening it further with swing plans to the advantage of Western Europe would make its credibility totally hollow. Apart from China, the Japanese and the South Koreans would be most severely alarmed if the old "NATO first" concept continued to exist under the changed conditions of the strong Soviet presence in the Far East. Essentially the U.S. military potential in the Pacific Basin consists of the 7th Fleet with 25 ships including two aircraft carriers, the ground forces in South Korea (38,500), a Marine division and air squadron, and 12 air combat wings in Okinawa, Japan, South Korea and the Philippines.

Thus a turn away from the swing strategy means no longer planning for "a war and a half" (a "whole" war in Europe, "half a war" overseas) but for three theaters at the same time: for Europe, the Persian Gulf and the Far East, with the naval potential concentrated above all along the whole line--southern flank of NATO (eastern Mediterranean), Gulf, Pacific. Temporary help in Europe in the event of hostilities will not be excluded but is no longer mandatory in planning, in fact, it is hardly possible any longer. The Soviet capacity to attack in the rest of the theaters has increased too much for that. This also holds true for the Persian Gulf where the Red Navy is still inferior to the Americans, to be sure, but where the Russians in Afghanistan have gained a new base for an effective air surveillance.

Consequently, the end of the U.S. swing strategy spells for the Europeans the task of closing the emerging strategic gaps by means of additional efforts of their own. This applies particularly to the navies and air forces of the Allied countries Italy, France, England and the Federal Republic. The new situation will probably be high up on the list of discussion topics at the annual meeting of the NATO Council of Ministers in Ankara in late June. Washington quarters hope that the understanding demonstrated by the Alliance for the new U.S. commitments will be supplemented with the realization that the Europeans will, in fact, have to do more for their part of security. An initial warning beside will be addressed to Greece and Turkey to bury their conflict at long last which is detrimental to the Alliance.

CSU PAPER DENOUNCES SCHMIDT'S FOREIGN POLICY

DW060905 Munich BAYERNKURIER in German 7 Jun 80 pp 1,2

[Article by Friedrich Zimmermann, chairman of the CSU Land Group in the Bundestag: "Playing With Fire"]

[Excerpt] The so-called new Ostpolitik of the SPD marked the beginning of a policy of yielding and submission to Soviet demands, a policy of surrendering important German legal positions and a policy of the conclusion of treaties in which the interests of the Federal Republic of Germany suffered unjustifiable harm to the advantage of the communist states. This policy of adaptation and renunciation on the part of the SPD has been given some flank support in the defense and security policies of the past few years. While the SPD belittles the growing superiority of the Soviet military apparatus and solicits understanding for the motives of the Soviets, it has pursued a policy of zealous adaptation to Soviet demands within the framework of the CSCE and disarmament negotiations. The construction of a neutron weapon against massive Soviet tank attacks planned by the U.S. Government, with which the military superiority of the Soviets was to be counteracted at least partly in an important field, was torpedoed by the anti-American campaign initiated by SPD Federal Manager Bahr. The decision of the U.S. President at the time not to build this weapon was the reply to this failure especially on the part of the Federal Government.

The Soviet Union has not honored this German yielding in the face of the Soviet offensive strategy by decelerating or even mitigating the speed and extent of its military superiority. On the contrary, it has enhanced its potential for applying military pressure through a massive installation of newer and newer medium-range missiles against which the Western defense alliance has nothing equivalent to put up. Even in the face of this aggressive Soviet arms policy a large part of the SPD is not prepared to accept the closure of the arms gap in the medium-range sector envisaged by NATO and the U.S. alliance partner. At the last SPD party congress in Berlin nearly 50 percent of the delegates opposed the NATO efforts aimed at not letting the more and more menacing Soviet armament ultimately lead to the free West's inability to defend itself. Despite the NATO decision to close the arms gap, the discussion on this issue is being waged in the SPD with an openly anti-American tone and with a great deal of understanding for the motives of Soviet armament, an armament which, as far as Wehner is concerned, serves purely defensive objectives. We are not aware that he perhaps has corrected this view following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The Moscow faction in the SPD continues to pursue the goal of foiling the NATO decision on closing the arms gap. In the meantime, Chancellor Schmidt has yielded to the increasing pressure of the leftwingers in his own party. With his negotiations offer to the Soviets Schmidt has damaged the NATO decision on closing the arms gap in this decisive point. By doing this he not only surrenders to the leftwingers in his own party, but he also retreats more and more in the face of Soviet blackmail maneuvers and steers the course of dissociation from the West, especially from the United States, and of an intensified policy of good behavior toward the Soviet Union. Schmidt himself time and again emphasizes the difference of interests between the Federal Republic of Germany openly the policy of the United States toward the Soviet Union. [sentence as published] In the SPD the Soviet act of violence in Afghanistan is played down. Wehner even justifies it as a preventive action for which he obviously musters understanding. Regardless of all the offensive and subversive activities of the Soviet Union in the world, the SPD intends to continue the illusory detente policy which is based on the treaties with the East. In so doing it is the victim of the illusory pipe dream that detente is divisible. [paragraph continues]

On the other hand, the detente illusions are of little help in Europe if the Soviet Union simultaneously severs the West's lifelines to the Persian Gulf and around southern Africa.

Chancellor Schmidt is steering a dangerous course since his foreign policy is causing us to increasingly find ourselves affected by Soviet blackmail strategy. He exposes our most important ally, the American nation, to public criticism and its leadership even to open scorn. At the same time he courts the aggressor of Afghanistan by helping him dodge responsibility for this brutal aggression, and by allowing Wehner to urge him into a Moscow pilgrimage. Thereby he creates confusion and mistrust on the part of our friends and allies. As a result, the reliability of German foreign policy is beginning to waver. This policy by Schmidt could become a threat to the existence of the FRG, whose exposed geographical location makes a security alliance with the United States and NATO absolutely necessary. This foreign policy course of the SPD under executor Schmidt is driving the Federal Republic into the arms of Moscow via dissociation from the West. The CDU/CSU, in contrast, with Franz Josef Strauss advocates close cooperation with the West--for a future in peace and freedom.

ADDITIONAL SOVIET THREAT FEARED FROM NEW MISSILES

DW040908 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 4/5 Jun 80 p 4

[Commentary signed TY: "Is Europe Threatened by a New Missile?"]

[Text] In the nuclear age politics lag behind the practice of armament. The danger of arms control being perpetually behind events is even aggravated by the fact that the public discussion of these issues is again "lagging behind" and is failing to keep abreast of developments. What this specifically means at this time is this: While the public debate is still in progress on how correct and binding NATO's "arms gap closure decision" of last December was, the Nuclear Planning Group of the Alliance is already debating details of this arms gap closure, and "informed quarters" even know about a new Soviet missile that might sabotage action by the West.

Information about Soviet missiles with ranges shorter than that of the SS-20 medium-range missile (allegedly 4,500 kilometers) has been making the rounds since last year. What this information boils down to is that the Soviet Union is trying, apart from enhancing its medium-range potential with the SS-20 and the Backfire bomber, to "cover" the sector "below" this potential, meaning the so-called theater weapons. Specifically it intends to use for this purpose, obviously, the SS-21 missile (with a radius of 120 kilometers), the SS-23 (350 (?) kilometers), and the SS-22 (1,000 kilometers). If this missile plan is put into practice, and supposing the ranges feared are about correct, then danger threatens particularly from the SS-22. This missile could be stationed at the edge of the Soviet Union and still reach Western Europe. The SS-22 would not be affected by an agreement along the lines of the double NATO decision because this agreement has been aimed so far only at the SS-20.

Hubertus Hoffmann, an aide of CDU Bundestag Deputy Peter Kurt Wuerzbach, is afraid that the new missile might play such a role in Eastern arms calculations. Hoffmann will publish his facts and fears in NATO's fifteen nations journal in the near future.

GISCARD CALLS FOR PAUSE IN ADMITTING NEW MEMBERS TO EEC

LD051156 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Raymond Barre, together with several ministers, chairmen of the National Assembly and the Senate and many public figures this morning attended the national day of the Chambers of Agriculture, held under the patronage of Valery Giscard d'Estaing. The president of the republic spoke at length on the current problems of agriculture and farmers, and expressed the wish that a pause be observed in negotiations over the enlargement of the Community. Neogitiations with Portugal, Greece and Spain are now under way.

[Begin Giscard recording] Apart from strictly agricultural problems, discussion now underway for several months have clearly shown that the integration of certain new members is not yet complete, since they ask for exemption from some Community obligations. This attitude on their part carries precise consequences which some have so far failed to perceive. It does not seem possible to me to combine the problems and uncertainties associated with the prolongation of the first enlargement and those which would be posed by new memberships. For this reason, given the attitude of certain of our partners since the beginning of this year, it is advisable for the Community to strive as a priority to carry the first enlargement through before embarking on a second one. [loud applause] [end recording]

Yes, the problem in question is the attitude of Great Britain; you got it right.

GOVERNMENT CONDEMNS ATTACK ON WEST BANK MAYORS

LD051230 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] A French Government statement repeats its condemnation of the attempts perpetrated Monday against three West Bank mayors. The government, says a Quai d'Orsay spokesman, condemns the attempts committed on Monday, 2 June, against the mayors of Nabulus, Ramallah and Al-Birah, which represents a particularly obnoxious form of terrorism. Having always condemned the use of violence from wherever it may come, it recalls that the Israeli authorities are dutybound to respect the Geneva Conventions, as well as the rights and liberties of the populations living in the West Bank and Gaza.

TURKISH FINANCE MINISTER MEETS WITH MONORY

TA060705 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin, who attended the OECD ministerial council meeting in Paris, met with French Economic Minister Rene Monory. The talks on the postponement of Turkey's debts, which are to be held in Paris from 17 to 19 June, as well as Turkey's other economic problems were discussed during the meeting.

It was reported that Sezgin thanked Monory for coordinating the postponement of Turkey's debts. According to AKAJANS [MEDITERRANEAN NEWS AGENCY], Sezgin expressed the desire of the Turkish Government to develop the economic relations between the two countries.

Monory expressed satisfaction with the positive results of the new stability program implemented by the Turkish Government since 24 January. Pointing out that the development of Turkish-French economic relations will benefit both countries, Monory added that French business circles will be extensively informed about the Turkish Government's recent decisions on foreign capital aimed at encouraging investments.

MARCHAIS HAILS USSR FOREIGN POLICY, HITS GISCARD, U.S., SCHMIDT

LD051225 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 30 May 80 p 4

[Unattributed report on speech by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais at PCF rally in Malakoff on 29 May: "The Struggle for Peace and Disarmament Is a Major Axis in Our Battle"]

[Excerpt] In his speech Georges Marchais dealt in particular with questions of peace.

In the sphere of foreign policy, he demonstrated, Mr Giscard d'Estaing's action is characterized principally by duplicity.

For instance, it was in the name of peace and disarmament that the president of the republic went to Warsaw last week to meet with Leonid Brezhnev. However, once he returned to Paris he allowed his party, the Union for French Democracy [UDF], to loudly demand neutron bombs for France.

We are categorically opposed to that proposal.

We have said that we Communists advocate a real national defense system capable of ensuring France's independence and ensuring that its sovereignty is respected in the face of any possible aggressor. That is why, observing that we did not have the means to attain that objective merely by the conventional forces at our disposal, we came out in favor of maintaining nuclear weapons 3 years ago.

Therefore, the strategy we advocate is clear: It is a strategy of deterrence, in other words, one which enables our country to prevent war by discouraging any possible aggressor in advance.

No to the Neutron Bomb

However, the neutron bomb by its very design is completely foreign to such a strategy. It is not a deterrent weapon but an offensive weapon intended to be used outside our territory in the case of a declared conflict. With the neutron bomb Mr Giscard d'Estaing is somehow sealing in advance the French Army's participation in an armed conflict outside our territory alongside the other NATO countries.

Moreover, the UDF Defense Committee chairman admits this bluntly: In the Giscardian party's view--and I quote--"our defense is inseparable from the defense of Western Europe. Western Europe's defense requires...U.S. participation." For him this defense should not be limited to the framework of the "national sanctuary." He specifies against whom this "Atlantico-European" solidarity should be exercised: the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries.

This is, therefore, a complete break with the deterrence strategy, the "all-round" defense strategy which General de Gaulle had adopted. Mr Giscard d'Estaing is now aligning with U.S. strategy, and the United States has, since the seventies began, been seeking ways of starting limited nuclear wars which will not ask an irreparable price from them, in other words, which will preserve the American Continent. The neutron bomb is the ideal weapon for carrying out that plan.

This evening I would like to repeat what I said at the European communist parties' meeting on peace and disarmament: The French Communists are more than ever intent on making the struggle for peace and disarmament a major axis in their battle. [paragraph continues]

At the same time as they are extending their own action, they are pursuing and extending action with other peace-loving French forces to oppose the American missiles and the neutron bomb and they are making a contribution to the people's consultation launched by the peace movement.

Therefore we resolutely say no to the neutron bomb.

We say no to the revival of the arms race to which it contributes and which poses serious threats to peace.

For the same reasons we say no to the deployment of new American nuclear missiles in Europe--missiles which break the balance of forces on our continent and hence pose a serious threat to its security.

The Soviet Union Wants Peace

We are far from alone in waging this battle in France and in the world. The forces of peace have the means of preventing imperialism from resorting to war. The balance of forces at the international level is permanently in their favor.

For 35 years--1.5 times the period which passed between the two world wars--world peace has been safeguarded. It has been possible to avoid a third war.

To a vital extent this has been rendered possible by the role played by the socialist countries and especially the Soviet Union.

All its history and its current initiatives prove that the Soviet Union wants peace. It could be said that that is in its very nature because its goal is man's happiness and liberation. Socialism carries peace with it.

As soon as it came into existence the very day after the October Revolution, the young Soviet state declared peace to the world in a decree which has remained famous under the name "Decree on Peace."

Since then the Soviet Union has not changed. Despite the constant hostility which imperialism has always shown it, it has constantly struggled to prevent the outbreak of a war which would have unforseeable consequences and has struggled for peaceful coexistence.

Today the Soviet Union and the socialist countries are behind many specific and constructive peace proposals.

This is the case with the struggle for the signing of the Soviet-U.S. SALT II agreements which Carter still refuses to sign; and Leonid Brezhnev's unilateral decision in Berlin last fall to withdraw 1,000 tanks and 20,000 men from Central Europe. Very recently we have seen the Warsaw Pact countries' important proposals, particulary the proposal for a meeting between all world heads of state to reduce international tensions and halt the arms race. The same is true of the proposal put forward by the Afghan Government to conclude agreements with neighboring countries on the basis of goodneighborliness and noninterference in Afghanistan's internal affairs. Such a political settlement would make it possible to envisage the withdrawal of Soviet troops and the establishment of a lasting peace in this region of the world.

Those are only a few elements but they clearly show the Soviet Union's and socialist countries' desire for peace. Thanks to their constant efforts imperialism has been unable and is still unable to draw the world into war. That is one of the socialist countries' essential contributions to mankind's history.

Moreover, if any additional confirmation was needed of the fact that imperialism can no longer impose its will we would find it in the holding of the Olympic games.

Helmut Schmidt's Weighty Responsibility

For several months Carter has used all the means at his disposal to bring about the death of the Olympic games. What result has he attained? Today Carter is isolated. Isolated with only one major country from Western Europe: the FRG.

In this connection I would like to say that if there is one particularly shocking no to the Olympic games it is that pronounced by Helmut Schmidt's government. Nobody can or should forget that it was Germany, some 40 years ago, which launched the wave of barbarity which ravaged Europe and caused massive destruction and killed tens of millions of people. Years and years of efforts to promote peaceful coexistence, detente, and friendship among peoples enabled the consequences of the disaster to be overcome, the international situation to be changed and progress to be made toward reconciliation with the German people. The Olympic games constitute one of the most striking contributions to fraternity among young people from all countries and to friendship and peace among peoples.

I say that it is absolutely intolerable for the very country where the Hitlerian barbarity took shape and unfurled to pronounce a refusal filled with distrust and hostility toward a country--the Soviet Union--which lost 2[illegible] million of its children in the victorious struggle to crush Naziism for the benefit of all peoples including the German people. It is not only intolerable, it is also disturbing. It is disturbing that the majority of the West German people should agree to support the boycott of the Moscow games. It should give pause for reflection about the future to all those concerned about peace in Europe and our own country's security.

Helmut Schmidt and his government are assuming a particularly weighty responsibility since the young West German athletes expressed their desire to take part in the games with a courage which we salute. They want to pit their talents and strength against the representatives of five continents in the field of sport. We know that they still hope to be able to do so. We share that hope with them. There is still time since the IOC and the organizing committee have said they are keeping open the opportunity of doing so. The West German chancellor would do well to seize this opportunity.

In any case, one thing is sure: In this affair Carter and his boycotters are already defeated. The few ultrareactionary politicians--including some Giscardians like Mr Pinton--who are trying to exert outrageous pressure on the athletes will not change this situation. The Olympic games will take place. A large number of countries from all parts of the world will take part. The standard will be high. It will be a great victory for sport and athletes, a victory for friendship and a victory for peace.

PCF MEMBER EXAMINES CSSR REPRESSION FOLLOWING VISIT

LD051305 Paris LE MONDE in French 31 May 80 p 6

[Article by PCF member Antoine Spire: "Prague Night"]

[Text] I visited Prague recently on behalf of the Committee for the Defense of Freedom in Czechoslovakia (Note 1: This committee was formed "on the initiative of Communist militants who intend to work for the defense of Czechoslovak citizens' freedoms and rights which, in their eyes, are indissociable from the socialist option in that country.") [paragraph continues]

Charter 77 lawyer Josef Danisz was to be my first interlocutor. He is the only political prisoner to have been amnestied. He was told that the article written in this newspaper by five PCF lawyers (Note 2): (lawyers Andreux, Jacob, Kenig, Michel, Rappaport) had had no influence on the decision; what is said in Paris has considerable influence onthe Husak government's decisions.

However, this is no reason to think that Danisz' future is secure. He has been banned from the bar for 5 years and wanted to continue to follow his profession as legal adviser to a company. However, every time he applies for a job he is rejected and this illustrates the government's desire to reduce him to manual labor. He would like--dozens of intellectuals asked me this like him--to receive a grant from a French university to carry out work in keeping with his abilities.

Danisz, like many charter 77 signatories, has had his driving licence confiscated. Tomas Liska, a student, acted as his chauffeur several times. This young man was accused of "hooliganism" and has now been banned from the university. He is not alone....

Police Questioning

It is mainly for such students that the "parallel universities" are organized, and these courses sometimes attract several dozen people to one apartment. Philosopher Julius Tomin is one of the promoters of these courses. Recently the police have brutally interrupted these courses several times. RUDE PRAVO--the Communist Party central organ--did not hesitate to mention attendance at these courses as the reason why a student, Bednar, is no longer allowed to attend university courses.

Tomin reported these police interruptions in an open letter sent to G. Husak on 7 April: "They dragged me down from the third floor, then tried to question me in Bartolomejska Street and finally threw me outside. 'Let's throw him in the cellar,' one of the policeman suggested. 'Let's throw him in the trash can,' another decreed. Fortunately the former solution was chosen and they left me on the remains of a pile of coal. It is conceivable that I should be dragged down the stairs and kicked simply because I want to give a lecture on Aristotles' metaphysics to a handful of people? Is it conceivable that young people should be beaten, thrown downstairs, dragged around and thrown against doors simply because they want to learn what Aristotle thought about this world more than 2,000 years ago? Why do the members of the state security forces want to prevent us from educating ourselves at any price? When I was being questioned one of my interrogators said: 'So, Mr Tomin, you would like these young people who attend your lectures to be able to study? But in that case they, like you, would demand a job in keeping with their qualifications. However in this country somebody has to work, Mr Tomin!'"

The intellectuals are therefore "at work." Historian Karel Bartosek is a shaft sinker, another well-known philosopher is a road sweeper, history professor Kochik cleans toilets 8 hours a day. The Prague intellectuals talks about their "double day" with some humor. Indeed, as one of them told me, the country is depriving itself of a whole generation of intellectuals and their experience is being stamped out. A people's memory is being liquidated.

Charter signatories are not even allowed to borrow reference books from scientific institute libraries.

Vera Chytilova, producer of daisies, has just finished a film of which a whole section was censored without explanation. There is a French cultural center operating in Prague and it runs courses which were assiduously followed by several hundred people. One day, on the pretext that the Libyans had threatened to blow up the center, the authorities began to check the identity of all those attending: Two-thirds of the pupils were dissuaded from continuing to attend the courses in this way.

In one district of Prague children aged between 15 and 17 years organized a exhibition of their drawings and photographs in a cellar. The police came and arrested the children and seized all the materials on the pretext that the exhibition had not received official approval. Cultural life goes on under cover. I saw hundreds of samizdat publications some of which have been read, I was told, by more than 5,000 people. "Every Czech is a publisher," one dissident saying goes.

However, the mess organized by the authorities is not only cultural. An economist explained to me the Charter 77 group's concern to stick to the population's concrete demands, and they are numerous! "It is everyday life which is a problem," he said. Though everybody clocks in at 0800 hours and clocks off at 1800 hours.... there are many who "slip out" between times to stand in line at the shoe repairer's , to find a tailor or buy meat. All the more so since meat has become increasingly hard to find in Prague for a few weeks now. You must either be able to get provisions in the special stores or be a personal friend of a butcher and slip him a coin as well. All my interlocutors had read Simecka's book (Note : ("The Reestablishing of Order" by Milan Simecka, Editions Maspero) and insisted on telling me how true the reported facts are. Life is made up of a pursuit of wasted time in useless tasks: Standing in line finding the storekeeper who will sell you the spare part you need or reimburse your returnable bottles. Holidays last 14 days, 3 weeks after 5 years with the same firm, 4 weeks after 15 years. Too few people receive permission to go abroad. It is hardly surprising that under these conditions some people sarcastically call the party card the "work card".

"For too many workers the state appears as an enemy to fight against," a Czech philosopher told me. Not only is everyday life made up of petty pilfering, but a large part of everybody's energy is devoted to saving on his work strength and getting time back from the boss-state.

All the Charter 77 members I met insisted on the devaluation of the idea of socialism. A whole generation has developed without any democratic experience; it risks absorbing the socialism of this authoritarian, bureaucratic and hated regime. It was Jiri Hajek, Dubcek's former foreign minister, who told me on leaving: "It is more difficult than ever to explain to young people that one day we will be able to marry socialism and democracy together in the direct line of spring 1968." We have not finished calculating what the Prague night will cost the world.

CGT, CUBAN LABOR FEDERATION SIGN COMMUNIQUE

FL041028 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Text] France's General Confederation of Labor--CGT--has called for a campaign called "truth about Cuba, first free territory in the Americas" at the conclusion of a high-level meeting with a delegation of the Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions (CTC).

The call was made in a joint communique signed in Paris yesterday by the CGT and the CTC delegation led by CTC Foreign Relations Secretary Jesus Escandel who has been visiting the French capital since Monday. The communique, which also was signed by CGT Secretary Pierre Gensous, stresses the support of French workers for the Cuban people's demands to North American imperialism that it end the U.S. blockade, return the Guantanamo Naval Base territory to Cuba and end spy flights over the island.

LE MONDE PRAISES GISCARD VISIT TO FINLAND

[Editorial: "Finnish Lesson"]

[Text] Mr Giscard d'Estaing's visit to Finland which ended on the evening of Tuesday, 3 June took place in an atmosphere of great understanding. Although no communiques were released, it is clear that both Helsinki and Paris are very satisfied with the 48 hours devoted to celebrating French-Finnish friendship and praising the virtues of detente.

For the Finns, it was important to confirm their ties with a major Western power; their independence--always difficult to preserve--can only emerge strengthened, especially since it would hardly be possible for Moscow to take offense at it now. The fact that France has been asked to carry out studies prior to building a nuclear power plant is significant in this connection: In meeting its nuclear energy requirements Helsinki has hitherto turned only to Moscow and Stockholm. The fact that it can now call at the door of a NATO member country therefore constitutes a success for the delicate policy of balance which Finland is forced to pursue.

Deeply concerned with the problem of security in Europe, the Finnish leaders must also have been pleased to find a particularly "open" interlocutor in Mr Giscard d'Estaing. Indeed, as far as Helsinki is concerned, the Afghan affair should have no repercussions on the situation in Europe. Of course the president of the French Republic does not go that far; nevertheless, he does believe--and he repeated it several times during his visit--that the top-level dialogue with Moscow must continue and that detente is more important than ever, "despite the attacks made on it."

"Unless the moves needed to reestablish a favorable climate are made" these attacks could, however, exert a negative influence on the Madrid conference, which must examine the implementation of the 1975 Helsinki accords, said Giscard d'Estaing, who is counting a great deal on this meeting for imparting a new thrust to his plan for a European disarmament conference. Officially, this latter conference should deal only with conventional weapons so that the French strike force would not be discussed. Indeed France could make concessions and this was doubtless what it was urged to do in Helsinki, which for some years has been advocating a plan to denuclearize northern Europe. However, this plan is making no progress since President Kekkonen is unwilling to include the Soviet nuclear installations on the Kola Peninsula in his definition of northern Europe.

On his visit to Helsinki Giscard d'Estaing was not reluctant to show that French policy is understood perfectly in some European countries, and especially in the country whose capital has become the symbol of detente. This symbol, however, dates back to 1975 and it must be acknowledged that the Helsinki accords have not yet produced any major successes, especially on the human rights field.

Also, let us not make the mistake too often made in the West when discussing "Finlandization." For Finland, which emerged bloodless from World War II and abandoned by all those who criticize it now, the essential task has been and still is to protect its independence and character as best it can. A prisoner of its own history and geography, nevertheless, it provides a lesson in courage. It is a gross error to use its name as a synonym for capitulation. Quite the opposite is true since it has managed to resist and remain itself, since it does still exist.

During his two-day stay in Rome, Okita will hold two rounds of talks with his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo. He will also meet with Italian President Sandro Pertini.

Comments to Newsmen

OW060131 Tokyo KYODO in English 0121 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] Rome June 5 KYODO--Japanese Foreign Minister Saburo Okita said here Thursday he personally did not believe the sixth economic summit of Western industrialized nations, scheduled in Venice on June 22 and 23, will be postponed if ailing Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira is unable to attend it.

Okita arrived in Rome from Paris Thursday to hold regular consultations with his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo.

He told Japanese newsmen that there has been no precedent of one of the leaders of the seven nations taking part in the summit absenting the meeting in the past. He believed that Japan may be able to send a proxy of the prime minister to attend the summit.

On his meeting held with Colombo Thursday Okita revealed that discussions centered on the international situation, including the Middle East and Asian problems, Venice summit and bilaterial relations.

He said Colombo revealed that his country agrees to the discussion of political issues also at the coming summit. Okita said the Italian Foreign Minister also welcomed the fact that Japan has started to show a positive posture in discussing matters concerned with international politics.

EUROPEAN LEFT URGED TO INDUCE SOVIET AFGHAN WITHDRAWAL

[Article by Italian Socialist Party European Parliament Deputy Jiri Pelikan: "Die for Kabul?"]

[Text] Is the war which has been raging in Afghanistan for 5 months a national liberation war waged by the Afghan people against foreign invaders or a "rebellion" against a legal regime? That is the question which the Western left must answer.

It is no longer enough to almost unanimously (aside from the PCF) condemn the Soviet intervention. It is necessary to consider what action should be taken and to take it. So far any political initiative has been left to governments, whether those in Western countries, Islamic countries or the Soviet bloc. There has been a growing number of conferences, meetings between heads of state and visits by foreign ministers. The statements and communiques led public opinion to believe that a "political solution" to the Afghan problem can be found with the USSR's agreement. Is this naivety or cynicism? In any case this attitude can only result in the massacre of the Afghan people, the crushing of the people's resistance and, finally, the acceptance of the fait accompli.

We are told that a political solution would be rendered possible by the "expansion" of Mr Karmal's present government. However, even if the Soviet leaders were prepared to allow this--which is by no means certain--such an operation is now no longer possible after the bloody intervention and the atrocities committed which have engendered hatred for the Russians and widened the gulf between the imposed leaders and the majority of the population. The same phenomenon has been blocking the situation in Czechoslovakia for 11 years, although Czechoslovakia had excellent relations with the USSR before 1968.

We are told that if Mr Karmal's regime is recognized and the Afghan borders closed, the Soviet troops will withdraw. That is probably true because the Soviet Army would then have no "internal" need to support the regime with its presence.

However, such a hypothesis is based on a faulty assessment of the Soviet operation in Afghanistan: It was not aimed at supporting a particular group of pro-Soviet leaders in Kabul, because the necessary changes could be made without massive intervention by Soviet troops. On the contrary it confirmed that Moscow has modified its strategy and no longer intends to make do with a pro-Soviet, officially nonaligned regime. The USSR has decided to occupy Afghanistan in order to set up its military bases there, establish a bridgehead for its future interventions in Iran and in the Persian Gulf region, to exert pressure on West Europe and guarantee future access to the oil it will need.

It would therefore be an illusion to believe that the USSR is prepared to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan if the Kabul regime is recognized, if the borders are closed and if the Afghan people's resistance can be drowned in blood. It is regrettable that the French and foreign press did not publish in detail a revealing speech by Soviet Ambassador to France Chervonenko. He is not only the Soviet Union's official representative. He has behind him valuable experience, having been ambassador to Prague in 1968 and during the first stage of "normalization." Mr Chervonenko told the French Diplomatic Press Association 20 May 1980 that a withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan would constitute a "gift for the United States" and would amount to "a guarantee given to foreign interference (sic) in Afghan affairs." It is therefore logical that the Soviet Army should remain in Afghanistan because the USSR cannot be expected to give "gifts" to the Americans. The Soviet Army is "at home" in Afghanistan while all those who oppose this presence come from outside and are therefore aggressors.

The USSR's one aim is to justify its military presence, which is gradually changing from "temporary" to "permanent" (the agreements signed on this question between Kabul and Moscow are the same as those signed between Prague and Moscow in 1968; the adjective "temporary" has already vanished) and to have this presence recognized by other governments as an "existing reality", to use Mr Chervonenko's expression once more. That is why only "the Afghans' capacity to resist the Soviets" and "the West's willingness to supply them with the means" can make Soviet leaders reconsider their decision and encourage their withdrawal from Afghanistan.

However, I would add that this possibility also depends on pressure from world public opinion and on pressure exerted within the Soviet Union, just as the Americans' withdrawal from Vietnam depended on the Vietnamese resistance (passively aided by the USSR and China) and the pressure of public opinion worldwide and in the United States. Of course, public opinion is not expressed in the USSR as it is in the United States. However, we must not forget that for the first time (aside from the heroic but short-lived resistance by Budapest in 1956) the Soviet Army in Afghanistan is having to face a people's armed struggle and that the prolongation of this foreign war could shake public opinion in the USSR and in other East bloc countries.

The Western left has great responsibility. It cannot stop at verbal condemnations and hide behind governments' failure to act, unless it wants to be an accomplice to genocide and a policy which threatens not only detente but world peace in a very direct way.

In face of a people which is fighting without foreign aid, the European left cannot leave initiatives to governments and diplomats--which does not mean that their role should be underestimated--but should itself demand the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan through its own channels. A major role can be played by the "Eurocommunist" parties like the PCI but also by the Socialist International and its members and by the trade unions. The left was able to mobilize the masses and urge them to take to the streets during the Vietnam war. Why not do the same for the Afghan people?

The left should prevent any "solution" which would isolate the Afghan resistance and bring recognition of the regime imposed by the Soviet intervention. In particular it must oppose attempts by the great powers to sign a sort of new Yalta treaty aimed at the redistribution of spheres of influence in the Third World.

The left should try to obtain a better knowledge and understanding of the Afghan resistance and support its just aspirations, in particular its struggle for national independence. It must stop describing the Afghan patriots as "rebels" and judging them by its own Western criteria. We now know that the resistance within the country is spontaneous, not organized, but truly a people's resistance, and that it can therefore gradually be turned into a broad movement and find the responsible spokesmen and organizations which would become the Western left's allies and interlocutors. On the other hand, ignoring this movement will throw it into the arms of the right and push it toward extremist positions.

It is understandable that fear of dying for Kabul justifies passivity. However, it is precisely so that we will not one day have to die for a sultanate or a piece of desert that we must now prevent Kabul from becoming another Warsaw Ghetto.

Is it too much to ask of the left that it speak out in support of the Afghan people's cause?

Allowing the Afghan resistance to be crushed by tanks, aircraft and famine opens the way to future aggressions, against Iran tomorrow and Yugoslavia after that.

PCI LEADER GIORGIO AMENDOLA DEAD IN ROME AT 73

AU051403 Rome ANSA in English 0835 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] Rome, Jun 5 (ANSA)--Giorgio Amendola, one of the most influential leaders of the Italian Communist Party, has died today in Rome at the age of 73.

REGIONAL CAMPAIGN ENDS; COSSIGA, PARTY LEADERS COMMENT

AU060924 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] Rome, June 4, (ANSA)--The campaign in Italy for the Sunday and Monday vote for new regional, provincial and municipal councils up and down the peninsula wound down last night at midnight with a burst of press and televised statements from the nation's political leaders.

The brief but animated campaign beamed to the potential electorate of some 43 million voters has dealt with the big domestic and international issues, ranging from the NATO missile arsenal in Europe and the boycott of the Moscow Olympics to Afghanistan, Rome government economic policy and the battle against terrorism in Italy.

Problems at the local level were futher eclipsed by the bitterness of the Cossiga-Donat-Cattin affair centering on allegations that Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga tipped off the deputy secretary of his own Christian Democrat Party, Carlo Donat-Cattin, so that Donat-Cattin's terrorist suspect son could escape capture.

All during the campaign, the political heavyweights in Rome have stressed the political significance of the upcoming administrative vote in the future balance of party power in Rome. In substance, the ruling Christian Democrats have firmly denied that the vote can bring the Communists nearer to the government area, whatever the polling booths say.

The present government is a three-party coalition led, as in every cabinet since World War II, by the Christian Democrats (DC) with the Socialists (PSI) and Republicans (PRI) as the junior partners.

The Communists are equally convinced that the country needs a change in the government formula to ensure their direct or indirect participation in running things.

The fear dominating the minds of the minor parties sitting on the opposition benches--the right-of-center Liberals (PLI) and the Social Democrats (PSDI)--is that the two giants will, in any case, reach an understanding over their heads.

The prime minister, in his appearance on the nationally televised question and answer session with newsmen last night to close the series, firmly denied that he had told the deputy secretary of his party "anything that could help his son, Marco". Cossiga said that he had merely sought to bring the 28-year-old terrorist suspect, with two warrents out for his arrest, out of hiding and added that the fact that Marco Donat-Cattin is at large "is no secret". On the topic of terrorism, the prime minister declared that to combat the phenomenon, the moral and civil unity of the Italian people is required.

In reply to a question on the attention his government has paid to the Communist Party (PCI), the prime minister said that this attention derives from the consideration that the party represents "vast popular masses and all the democratic forces have asked how these masses might be utilized" towards the solutions for Italy's problems. Fielding a query from a newsman who sought to attribute a right-of-center stance for the current cabinet, Cossiga declared that his government "is not right, neither as regards the political formula nor in connection with the choices it makes".

The speaker of the lower house, Nilde Jotti, in Milan yesterday to wind up the campaign for her Communist Party, identified the conditions prevailing throughout the campaign as "extremely tense and serious" and linked this state of affairs to "the worsening economic crisis, the ongoing menace to peace in the world and the continuation of terrorist attacks" at home.

DC Secretary Flaminio Piccoli, carrying the ruling party banner in Bologna, accused the Communists of mounting a "plan to twist the significance of the Sunday ballot, to aggravate the political problems and keep the administrative issues in the shade".

Bettino Craxi, the Socialist Party secretary, once again urged the voters to bear in mind the political meaning of their upcoming decision in the booths in an interview slated to appear in today's edition of the Turin daily, LA STAMPA. Craxi declared that, "it is certain that the response from the ballot box will be decisive not only for present conditions of stability and governability but also as regards prospects for the long term".

Also the Social Democrat Party secretary, Pietro Longo, in an interview in today's edition of the Milan newspaper, IL GIORNALE NUOVO, looked to the future and saw on the horizon, after the vote, a series of steps which will lead the country towards a new government formula. "I foresee a single-party DC government", Longo said, "one possibly headed by (former Premier Giulio) Andreotti. It is likely, however, that (PCI Secretary Enrico) Berlinguer has other formulas in mind, all certainly bound to create the conditions for a national unity government with the Communists", the PSDI secretary added.

Giovanni Spadolini, the PRI secretary, harked back to the June 1979 general elections in his statement yesterday in Turin to underscore the perils now posed for Italy's eighth legislature. "The political slant given to these administrative elections by the Communists and others", Spadolini said, "forces on a choice closely concerning, alongside good local government, the survival of the legislature".

For PLI Secretary Valerio Zanone, speaking last night in the capital, the target of the attacks mounted during the campaign has been the Rome government. "The PLI has no intention of laying traps for the government", Zanoni declared and added, "The government will do its own stumbling and tripping up all by itself".

A sharp statement released last night by the Proletarian Unity Party charged that, "for thirty years the Christian Democrats have run our country like something they owned. This private trafficking in power has brought on the decline of institutions and the dangerous and dramatic regression of our democracy".

ALGERIAN FOREIGN MINISTER, SUAREZ DISCUSS MISSING BOAT

LD051358 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] The Algerian foreign minister's visit to Madrid has ended and he left for home this morning. Hector Arenas reports on the visit from Madrid's Barajas Airport.

[Begin recording] The Algerian foreign minister, Mohamed Seddik Ben Yahia, finished his official visit to Spain of less than 24 hours at midday today in an atmosphere of confidence that he could give some of the background to the disappearance of the crew of the Spanish fishing boat, Garmomar, captured by the Saharan POLISARIO Front, an organization which maintains special relations with the Algerian regime.

Minister Ben Yahia who, immediately on arriving in Madrid yesterday was received by Prime Minister Suarez and Foreign Minister Marcelino Oreja, said shortly afterwards that in both meetings they had discussed all subjects of interest. However, his statements here at Barajas Airport have given hope, but have also been frustrating regarding the case of the Spanish fishing boat.

Answering a question on whether Algeria could take some steps in relation to its POLISARIO friends in favor of the release of the Spanish fishermen, he answered specifically [Ben Yahia brief voice recording in French fading into following sentence]:

Mr Ben Yahia answers that the Algerian Government is not directly concerned with this case but that it will spare no effort on its part so that this incident might be resolved within a reasonable period of time and have a happy ending.

Then the Algerian minister was asked if his government would act as a mediator in this incident, to which he replied: We have not been invited by the Spanish Government nor by the POLISARIO Front to use our good offices in the search for a solution.

He was then asked if he could confirm the POLISARIO attack on the Spanish fishing boat, replying: We, the Algerians, have no reason to confirm the fact, since we have no part in this incident, which took place a long way from our frontiers. Nevertheless, he said that, yes, the Spanish Government had confirmed the fact during the Madrid talks.

Finally, the Algerian foreign minister said that in his meetings with Prime Minister Suarez and his Spanish counterpart, Mr Oreja, which took place in a very cordial and sincere atmosphere, effective standpoints to find a satisfactory agreement and a political balance in the region were made clear, and it is intended to find a peaceful solution to the problem of the Western Sahara.

Before boarding the small official airplane which would take him to Algiers, Minister Ben Yahia confirmed the Algerian prime minister's forthcoming but undated official visit to Spain and, before that, the Spanish foreign minister's visit to Algeria.

SUAREZ CITED ON CONGRESS MAJORITY, UCD LEADERSHIP ISSUES

LD051057 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 3 Jun 80 p 11

[Unattributed report: "If Suarez Has Anything To Tell Us, He Will Tell Us Soon"]

[Excerpt] Spokesman for the Catalonian minority Miquel Roca Junyent has stated that "if Suarez has anything to tell us, he will tell us soon; I do not like expressiong opinions on hypotheses," referring to the prime minister's statements in Valencia, where he seemed to refer to a possible agreement between the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] and the Catalonian minority to form a stable majority in the congress.

Valencia, 2 June--Prime Minister Suarez' statements in Valencia on the possibility of forming a parliamentary majority which would make possible greater support for the present government's policy, while at the same time praising the Catalonian minority's "correct and consistent" stance during the debate on the motion of censure submitted by the Socialists, have given rise to a number of speculations with respect to the possibility that it is with this parliamentary group that the UCD wishes to form that parliamentary majority.

However, although the prime minister had already done so in his statements, Roca Junyent himself has denied any contact with the UCD to this end, in addition to expecting none this week, either.

The prime minister also added that this is a matter to be decided by the UCD standing committee, which has today begun "a period of reflection" to analyze the consequences of the parliamentary debate; he also stated that the possibility of submitting a vote of confidence to the congress has not been considered.

He was also asked about the demand, which has already been made, for his replacement as leader of the UCD and of the government itself--a matter which, in Suarez' opinion, rests solely with the UCD's decisionmaking bodies. "I would set to work," he said, "together with whomever my party appointed to replace me, if that happened."

With respect to the autonomy blueprint presented by the prime minister to the congress, Suarez said that "we wish to implement it in agreement with all the political forces in order to achieve a stable coexistence," while at the same time stressing that "the future statutes will have the same level of powers and institutions." The prime minister criticized the haste with which some decisions have sometimes been made, working until the early hours of the morning, which was detrimental, and accordingly this matter had been decided upon on the basis of "thorough reflection and study on the part of the UCD."

MINISTER COMMENTS ON GISCARD REMARKS ON EC MEMBERSHIP

LD060852 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Summary] President Giscard yesterday addressed the French Agriculture Chamber Assembly and proposed what we might euphemistically call a "pause" in the entry of new members into the EEC. He did not mention Spain by name but no one doubts that he was thinking about our country's entry, which would have a greater effect than the entry of Portugal, while Greece is already a legally accepted member. Our Mr Europe, Calvo Sotelo, minister for relations with the European Community, was quite frank when he commented on Giscard's statement.

[Begin recording] [Calvo Sotelo] This is the most serious incident since the negotiations began. Up to now we have had incidents which, I believe, have had no effect on the general timetable known to everyone. It would be rash now to say that there will be no effect on the timetable. We must wait to see what attitude the Community adopts.

[Announcer] Calvo Sotelo is waiting to see what might happen at the next EC Council of Ministers meeting.

[Calvo Sotelo] I would like to point out that, so far, the Community as such has made no statement. Negotiations began following a decision of the Community's Council of Ministers, attended by ministers from the nine member countries. I think that at a future meeting, either in Venice in a week, or at the one due to be held in Luxembourg at the end of the month, the Council of Ministers will have to make a statement on the matter. Meanwhile, all we have is the French president's statement which is rather vexatious for Spain, but this represents the opinion of only one government of the Nine.

[Announcer] Calvo Sotelo hopes that political respect for the candidates is maintained:

[Calvo Sotelo] My personal reaction has been one of some surprise, particularly over the timing of the French president's statement, but also one of trust in the Community's political sense, the respect that member countries should have for their political commitment to candidate countries. [end recording]

PCE'S AZCARATE COMMENTS ON CARRILLO-MITTERRAND TALKS

LD291531 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 20 May 80 p 7

[Commentary by PCE Executive Committee member Manuel Azcarate: "The Mitterrand-Carrillo Meeting"]

[Text] The meeting held by Mitterrand and Carrillo in Madrid last Friday has been very widely reported in the Spanish and international press.

I believe that this is logical and natural. It was not merely a conversation between two general secretaries--one of a Socialist Party and the other of a Communist Party. The time, the context within which it took place and also the place--the fact that Francois Mitterrand came to Madrid (as he himself emphasized)--have a particular significance.

The starting point for this meeting could not fail to be the gravity of the international situation. And it must be acknowledged that, with respect to a number of burning issues--Afghanistan, Iran, the ratification of SALT II and the importance of averting a process which could bury detente, lead us to the cold war and have even more catastrophic consequences--the meeting confirmed the existence of substantial areas of agreement, specifically with respect to the need, in view of an extraordinarily dangerous intensification of what could be termed "the dialectic of blocs," for Europe--without calling the existing treaties into question--to play an independent role and be able to contribute initiatives, promote negotiations and contacts and contribute elements to peaceful solutions, strictly respecting the peoples' independence and noninterference by one country in another--solutions which will avert the arms race and promote an atmosphere of peace and cooperation.

Now these issues are in themselves vital and decisive for all the progressive workers forces in Europe. How should we tackle them? Each going his own way, in disarray? With some aligning themselves with one bloc and others with the other? And we do not say this as a rhetorical hypothesis. Such things have happened in the past.

But the problem is: Is there any possibility now of doing otherwise?

This is, I would say, the basic problem, and that which gives the Carrillo-Mitterrand meeting singular importance. It is--or could be--the beginning, the starting point, for something new and something very serious: an effort to bring into the European workers movement, with its various components, a new dynamic--for the present, a dynamic of dialogue, exchanging views and joint debates, which is no mean thing, but with a goal, a perspective, a hope: to examine through dialogue whether foundations exist for initiatives and joint action on the decisive problems of detente, peace and disarmament.

Let us recall what the communique says: "The meeting confirmed the usefulness and importance of developing dialogue and exchanges of views among parties belonging to the European workers movement."

To that end we will work, or rather, continue to work, but with a more tangible and more solid starting point after the Madrid meeting.

The latter's significance is all the greater because it is not an isolated event; it forms part, to some extent, of a process of contacts and talks in the European Parliament (Berlinguer-Brandt and Berlinguer-Mitterrand), meetings held in Bonn by a League of Communists of Yugoslavia delegation and our talks with Labor Party members, not to mention the relations among various communist parties.

Other factors to be borne in mind are public stances on the part of a number of socialist and social democratic parties in Sweden, Belgium, Austria, Italy, and so forth.

Here in Spain the points of agreement between the Spanish Socialist Workers Party and ourselves on foreign policy problems are substantial.

We mentioned at the beginning that the place--Madrid--of the meeting between Mitterrand and Carrillo was significant. It was indeed. To some extent the French Socialist leader wished to underline by coming here the extraordinary importance which the CSCE conference, to be held in our capital in the fall, will have and already has. Preparing for it from now on to ensure that it will yield results positive for detente is something which does not rest with governments alone: proceeding from dialogue among parties of the European workers movement and socialists and communists, if we succeed in promoting joint initiatives in this field, this would have considerable significance.

Bringing a new dynamic into the European workers movement, respecting, of course, the identity of all parties and the relations among them--a dynamic of dialogue and a search for points of agreement--is extremely important for peace, of course, but also for such urgent issues as the response to rightwing and reactionary pressures and threats, and the formulation of a new leftwing alternative to Europe's crisis.

Last Friday's meeting was only a first step, but on a path which could lead far.

KEKKONEN: FRENCH DETENTE POLICY STRIKES 'SYMPATHETIC CHORD'

LD051513 Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Jun 80 p 6

[Noel-Jean Bergeroux dispatch on French President Giscard d'Estaing visit to Finland: "Kekkonen-Giscard d'Estaing Talks Center on Disarmament Topics"]

[Text] Helsinki--detente and arms limitation should logically be the main topics of French-Finnish summit talks, bearing in mind the two countries' stances in this connection and also bearing in mind the location, since it was in Helsinki that the CSCE conference met in 1975. And this was indeed the case, though both sides insisted somewhat on the importance of bilateral relations and the need to step up exchanges between France and Finland in both the economic and cultural fields.

Welcoming his guest Monday, President Kekkonen stressed that "Finland and France pursue several similar objectives" and are striving "to act to strengthen and advance peace both in Europe and throughout the world.... We Finns are aiming at the same goal."

During the dinner given in Giscard d'Estaing's honor at the presidential palace, the Finnish head of state returned to this topic, stressing in particular the "Finnish people's sincere and deep desire to see barriers lowered and European understanding and unity consolidated." Mr Kekkonen added: "One of the great traditions of French foreign policy is to regard Europe as an entity. We too regard this as a natural and central concept...." Mr Kekkonen emphasized his desire "to convene a European disarmament conference."

The Finnish head of state added that "since France is asserting the independence of its foreign policy, its openness to the rest of the world and its spirit of initiative with a view to extending detente, its aspirations strike a sympathetic chord in Finland. They are in line with our own viewpoint on how to approach relations among nations. Learning from their own history, Finns attach great importance to national identity, independence and characteristics."

Giscard d'Estaing stressed the "example of determination provided by Finland and its people. You have been determined to exist as a nation of the future and to remain masters of your own affairs. This determination has prevailed over all challenges and trials. Your identity has been asserted by resisting all assimilations. Your independence has established itself and been defended with arms and consolidated by diplomacy.... Your basic options are supported by broad consensus, establishing a particularly strong foundation for your foreign policy."

The president of the French Republic added: "Our two countries, with their own characteristics, set similar targets for their activity: to preserve their identity and guarantee their security--in short, to provide themselves with the means to remain themselves. We pursue the same objective on our continent--security and cooperation."

Next, Giscard d'Estaing evoked (as he did in an interview published the same day in the daily HELSINGIN SANOMAT) the Madrid conference, which Franch has announced that it will attend but whose results, it hopes, will not be limited to purely symbolic agreements. In this connection he said: "It must be noted that the conditions which enabled detente to become established are now in jeopardy. The attacks made on it lead one to wonder about what possibilities of significant progress the coming Madrid conference could create unless the necessary moves to reestablish a favorable climate are made.... Both our countries have played an important role in developing detente policy. We both have proposals to make concerning future stages, especially in the disarmament field.... [paragraph continues]

But in the present situation my visit is also an opportunity to express our concerns about pursuing a process which we can clearly see is threatened. The reestablishment of the trust on which detente is based requires adequate gestures and initiatives in those places where this trust has been damaged."

"Independence, Vigor, Peace"

Monday afternoon, after visiting the Heroes Monument, the head of state also addressed the French community in Helsinki during a reception at the French Embassy. He said: "My aim is to make France an independent and vigorous nation carrying the message of peace." Expanding on these three points he said among other things: "France determines its future independently, but neither haphazardly nor irresponsibly. On the contrary, it is inspired by its people's wisdom and reason. In my handling of French policy I am inspired by the French people's wisdom and reason."

With regard to peace he explained that "in the present phase it is important that France be the superpowers' interlocutor whenever a situation has to be analyzed and the escalation of threats has to be assessed. This is what I have done recently and what I will continue to do. Following the applause for this reference to the Warsaw meeting with Mr Brezhnev, the head of state remarked: "This is the first time I have discussed this subject in public, and your applause is revealing because you are representative."

ULLSTEN RETURNS FROM MOSCOW TALKS 'EMPTYHANDED'

LD051455 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 31 May 80 p 5

[Staffan Teste report: "Ullsten Met Soviet Leaders. No News of Wallenburg"]

[Text] Moscow, Friday--Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten is returning to Sweden after talks with the Soviet leaders as emptyhanded as he was when he arrived here.

Ullsten demanded a definite answer from Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko on the fate of Raoul Wallenberg.

The Swedish foreign minister also asked for a definite answer on a number of families that want to be reunited, primarily the Agapov family.

Ullsten also demanded that negotiations begin between the Soviet Union and Sweden on the question of dual citizenship for people from the Baltic states, for example, who now are resident in Sweden.

In none of these cases was Ullsten, who also met government chief Kosygin, given any indication of any positive changes in their previous standpoints by the Soviet leaders.

The Soviet mass media have given Foreign Minister Ullsten's visit maximum publicity. Ullsten is the first foreign minister from neutral countries and Western countries to be the guest of the Soviet Union since the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund, who has also had an official invitation, has postponed his possible visit until the fall. The Soviet Union has in recent weeks stepped up its efforts to try to show that it does not stand isolated after the many U.S. boycotts.

Ullsten himself does not see his Moscow visit as a propaganda victory for Soviet policy. "Politics always contains an element of risk," Ola Ullsten said. "You have to be prepared for this, otherwise, you will never get any results.

"I am prepared to bear the criticism that I may get because I came here. I think that we have such a fundamental interest in the fact that such talks as these take place that I do not give much heed to such criticism. As long as it is a question of open talks, which are reported in public, then it is a constructive move."

[DAGENS NYHETER] Was this not a favorable situation for you to squeeze out something advantageous on these issues: Wallenberg, the cases for the reuniting of families, dual citizenship?

[Ullsten] Perhaps I have.

[DAGENS NYHETER] But you have nothing concrete to show?

[Ullsten] No, it does not really work like that--that you sit and talk and get results immediately. To the extent that the Soviet Union has a stronger interest than in other situations in making positive moves, it can only help in these questions.

[DAGENS NYHETER] So you think that you have found a solution to them?

[Ullsten] No, I have not said that. I mean that in a situation where there is a lot to talk about you just cannot refrain from meeting, and it cannot be disadvantageous to bring up this type of question in such situations. It can perhaps be more constructive to do so than it would be at other times. [answer ends]

As far as the cases of the reunification of families is concerned, Ullsten had been lobbied before his Soviet visit and he was able to hand material to his Soviet hosts on the matter. Ullsten was, however, unwilling to report how many reunification cases Sweden is taking an active interest in at present.

On the Wallenberg affair Ullsten said that he had asked for material from his Soviet hosts, but had not been given any. Ever since 1956 the Soviet Union has referred to a medical report that Wallenberg died in the Lubyanka prison in Moscow. The documents which the Soviet leaders refer to have as yet not been shown to any Swede. Ullsten did not succeed in getting to see the paper this time either.

The bulk of Ullsten's talks with his Soviet hosts and the 80-minute conversation with government chief Kosygin was devoted to international questions. Ullsten gave an account of the Swedish view that it would be time at the European security conference in Madrid in November to reach a decision on a European disarmament conference. The Soviet Union has shown a desire to get such a conference going as soon as possible.

"However, our view is that such a conference must be well prepared if it is to be of any use," said Ullsten, who did not consider that he had been given any indication during the 2-day talks of Soviet interest in the idea of having Stockholm host the conference, an idea that Ullsten himself had put forward and had won support for from the other foreign ministers in Scandinavia, among others.

When discussing Afghanistan Ullsten stressed the Swedish view that a political solution to the question is impossible before Soviet trocps leave the country. Ullsten also brought up the trend of events in Iran and stressed that it was important that the Soviet Union also contributed to the solution of the problem of the American Embassy hostages.

"No great power ought to try to gain any political advantage from the situation in Iran," Ullsten said.

On Scandinavian questions that were discussed the Soviet Union brought up the question of the contingency stockpiling of arms in northern Norway. Ullsten declared that he could not see that it meant any change in Norwegian policy on military bases. The problem is more a Norwegian-Soviet problem which Gromyko ought to take up with his Norwegian counterpart when he comes to Moscow, Ullsten said.

"We were of course able to agree that, even though we have different political points of departure and such bilateral bones of contention of the Wallenberg type, the cases of the reunification of families and dual nationality for ex-citizens of Baltic states, relations between our countries are fairly stable," Ullsten said.

PAPER WEIGHS DANGERS, BENEFITS OF ULLSTEN MOSCOW TALKS

LD051405 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 31 May 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Ullsten in Moscow"]

[Text] There have been a lot of East-West contacts recently, after the two superpowers came dangerously close to a collision course after the Soviet Union's occupation of Afghanistan.

It is unclear to what extent talks in Belgrade, Vienna and Warsaw have been able to help in removing misunderstandings and in easing the grave tension. But reports so far from some of these talks indicate that it has not been possible to reduce the distrust and that the Soviet Union, despite sharp worldwide reaction to the war in Afghanistan, has no intention of withdrawing from this previously nonaligned nation.

In such a situation it is risky for a Swedish foreign minister with little experience of summit-level international politics to go off to Moscow. Not least when this time his staff must manage without the man who has the greatest experience of negotiating with the Russians.

This is not to say that Ola Ullsten should not have traveled east to a meeting whose initiative is still unclear: Did it come from the Soviet or the Swedish side? But the foreign minister has taken a risk both on the international and domestic levels. The French president's recent meeting with Brezhnev was definitely not the domestic political success that he had calculated. And for a Swedish politician foreign policy is not the most comfortable arena in which to create a political profile.

With all these risks taken into consideration, it is important that the foreign minister of a neutral country has the opportunity to express in Moscow a growing concern over the situation in the world since the invasion of Afghanistan. Sweden has already condemned the Soviet violation in the United Nations and there is no doubt that it is the Swedish view that the Soviet invasion is the main reason why the international climate has worsened so much. [paragraph continues]

If this is pointed out once again even by small and neutral states it can hopefully contribute to Russian interest in some form of neutrality for Afghanistan.

Similarly, it is also important that Sweden raised the question of the American hostages in Iran in Moscow. Six months ago the Russians were as shocked as the rest of the world at this crime against international law and the fact that a mob was allowed to destroy the foundations of all diplomatic activity.

That Moscow later, along with other socialist countries, considered itself in a position to gain advantages from this is a great embarrassment for a superpower. Sweden is right when it appeals directly to the Russians through its foreign minister for their active support for the release of the hostages. It would not only contribute to the improvement of the Soviet Union's now tarnished reputation. It would also be a contribution to detente.

It seems as if it was the important international questions that were to the fore in the Swedish-Soviet talks in Moscow. And this is perhaps an area where Sweden can help in creating openings. As far as bilateral humanitarian problems are concerned, the Soviet leaders of yesterday and today do not seem able to open any doors.

GOVERNMENT TO SUBMIT NEW PROPOSAL ON DEFENSE BUDGET

LD031407 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 30 May 80 p 4

[Unattributed report: "Falldin: Defense Budget Reviewed"]

[Text] The government will resubmit a proposal to the Riksdag in the fall on military defense planning during the next 5-year period.

In this way last week's Riksdag vote, which was decided by drawing lots, will be invalidated. The vote supported a Social Democratic proposal for the reduction in the planning budget of about 2 billion kronor in all for the 5-year period.

Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin said in an announcement Thursday [29 May] that the government will be making a new proposal. It can be expected that the slim nonsocialist majority in the Riksdag will adopt the proposal without any voting mishaps, as happened last time.

"Defense and security policy is definitely not served by arbitrary changes and chance decisions," the prime minister said.

But he added: "But this does not mean that because of the serious economic situation the defense forces will not be forced to make cuts in areas that are not of direct relevance for our defense capability."

The background to the problems, Falldin maintained, is Sweden's direct responsibility for maintaining security stability in Scandinavia. The credibility of Swedish defense, both at home and abroad, is dependent on the defense forces' access to the resources which enable them to carry out the tasks imposed on them within the framework of security policy.

"Our traditional policy independent of alliances, which is intended to ensure our neutrality in the event of war, enjoys broad popular support," the prime minister said.

SVENSKA DAGBLADET ON NEED TO MAINTAIN STRONG DEFENSE

LD051017 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 2 Jun 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Sweden's Security"]

[Text] Through a grotesque parliamentary mishap the defense budget framework was subjected a few days ago to cuts of about 500 thousand kronor per year. Fortunately there are technical possibilities of rectifying matters in the fall session of the Riksdag; and, as is natural, Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin has already announced that this will be done.

According to information which there is no reason to doubt, part of the background to Mr Falldin's announcement is that the vote, which was decided by lot and therefore seemed strange to the rest of the world, led to strong reaction abroad or, in short, sharp terms: Confidence in the Swedish defense forces--and thus, of course, in our nonaligned security policy--has been jeopardized.

There is every reason to remind ourselves in this context that as early as October last year Cabinet Secretary Leif Leifland considered that he had a duty to inform the government that such important countries for us as Finland, Great Britain, West Germany and the United States had expressed their concern over Swedish disarmament.

For far too long the debate on defense policy--to the extent that there has been one at all--in our country has been concerned with details, important in themselves but seldom set in the context of a plausible overall picture. The effect of the defense forces on the size of the budgetary deficit has been considered more important than their ability to win respect in the eyes of the rest of the world. Orders for equipment and unit disbandments have been discussed more with a view to their consequences for employment in one location or another than with regard to the defense forces' capability to assert our freedom and independence with arms in an emergency, in an emergency--the most extreme emergency, the grim possibility of which is the very reason we have military defense in the first place.

Year after year the real strength of the defense forces has been whittled away.

The air force has long been reduced to half of what it was at its best; a decision to halve it again is now being implemented. The navy has for the most part suffered similar misfortunes--incomprehensibly when one remembers Sweden's geography and the investment in equipment for war at sea which is such a striking feature of international military trends. The army also displays very serious shortcomings, in terms of equipment and training.

So we have now reached the stage when our defense policy has begun to deeply worry our neighbors. For obvious reasons the concern expressed by Finland must be given special consideration, but even the reactions from the great powers in the West deserve to be taken deadly seriously.

The simple and bitter truth is, namely, that Sweden's defense capability is not only our own business.

As long as Sweden maintains a sufficiently strong defense--sufficiently strong in the eyes of the rest of the world, that is--our country which, broadly speaking, covers half the demarcation line between the superpower blocs in Europe, can serve as a stabilizing factor of considerable weight.

There is really no need to waste any words on how important it is for Finland that the great powers have confidence not only in Sweden's DESIRE to remain neutral but also in our determined will AND CAPABILITY to assert our neutrality with arms. [capitalized words italicized in original]

It was just this point that was stressed in Mr Leifland's above-mentioned memorandum to the government. Confidence in Swedish defense has been a prerequisite for the Atlantic Alliance's relatively modest involvement in Scandinavia. If this prerequisite disappears it is obvious that NATO can be forced to take steps in Norway and Denmark which the Russians can interpret as "provocations", with concomitant risks for Finland that do not need to be spelled out.

It is well known that our neighbors, presently in the shadow of the crisis in Afghanistan, assess the risks of the outbreak of large-scale conflict as more immediate than for a long time.

It would not be a bad thing if the Swedish defense debate gave somewhat more serious consideration to this perspective than it has in the past.

FORCES COMMANDER REJECTS NEGOTIATIONS WITH CONSCRIPTS UNION

LD301331 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 28 May 80 p 13

[Bengt Falkkloo report: "Commander-in-Chief Lennart Ljung: 'I Will Not Negotiate With a Conscripts Union'"]

[Text] Even if all of Sweden's 50,000 conscripts were to form a union of their own there would be no negotiations and no agreements. Commander-in-Chief Lennart Ljung said an unequivocal "no" to the plans worked out by the conscripts. Instead, he wants their right to industrial democracy and influence to be discussed in other ways, for example, by giving individual chiefs greater freedom to make decisions themselves.

After 10 years of conscripts conferences, where the call for an independent trade union has been discussed, an interim committee was elected with the task of working out the details of how the trade union is to be organized before next year's conference.

"But no way can I--that is, the authorities--agree to normal trade union negotiations," Lennart Ljung said, citing the three points that he considers make the whole idea impossible.

These are voluntary membership of the union--how many will want to become members--the law that requires conscripts to obey orders and which has its own special requirements, and also foreign confidence in the Swedish defense forces.

"There are other possible roads that we might follow, and much has happened in the last 10 years. We are now working to implement questions of influence even more."

Today there is a conscripts conference once a year. In addition, elected representatives from each regiment and unit within a military region have the opportunity to meet to compare conditions. Unit councils also meet.

"The first authority for the conscripts is the unit council. If they cannot get their demands met and do not win a hearing for their views they can take these up at the military command area conference or the conscripts conference.

"We are working now on giving unit chiefs greater powers, then they will be subject to greater pressures if they are compared with other units within the same military command area where the men have better conditions. There have also been many improvements in this field in recent years, although it is true that there is still much to be done."

The commander-in-chief also wonders where the planned trade union will get its money. It can certainly not count on state money, at least not from the defense forces' funds. If on the other hand a youth organization is formed, funds could perhaps come from other sources.

"If one looks at the cool interest that has been shown for the conscripts conference, then one has one's doubts. Only 38 percent took part in elections and 13 units and schools did not take part at all."

Defense authorities do not believe that questions of industrial democracy and influence are the most important things for people doing military service.

"It is money. During my visits to different places and my discussions with the men it is money problems that are the most pressing."

The hardest hit are the "bachelors," those who are not entitled to any payments for family or accommodations. A single man is not entitled to an accomodations allowance.

"And I can do nothing about such matters. Of course it would be a good thing to get 30 kronor a day in pay, but I would much rather see deductions and other allowances come from another source."

THATCHER CONTINUES TO PRESS FOR OLYMPICS BOYCOTT

LD051740 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1710 GMT 5 Jun 80

[By David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher said today she offered no apology for continuing to press Britain's athletes to boycott the Moscow Olympics. "I offer no apology for pressing the government's case with sporting organisations and athletes," the prime minister said in a letter to shadow sport spokesman Mr Denis Howell.

Last month Mr Howell wrote to her attacking her for "berating" British athletes on the issue. He wrote then: "Many British sports people have asked me to express to you their dismay at the constant berating to which they are subjected, well orchestrated by political editors, because they have exercised their democratic right to take their own decisions about competing in the Olympics."

Mrs Thatcher replied today that political editors in Britain are free unlike those in the Soviet Union, to express their own opinions, which, she said, were shared by a majority in the House of Commons. The prime minister went on: "I find it difficult to understand your unwillingness to accept that there are times when sports and politics cannot be separated.

"The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has created such an occasion. At the very time when they are playing host to the Olympic games, the Russians are cynically and brutally waging war on a neighbour. Only last week reports appeared in the press of the killing of more schoolchildren and the herding of others with electric cattle prods."

Mrs Thatcher said: "Moreover, as I am sure you know, the Soviet Union has never regarded sport and politics as separate. Their sport is an arm of government policy and the Olympic games in Moscow is seen by the Russians as a political event of major importance.

"We feel strongly that the Soviet Union is not an appropriate host for the Olympics in the present circumstances. Nor do I consider it wrong for the government to make public its opinions about sports matters." She said the Soviet Union was "cynically disregarding and devaluing Olympic principles." Mrs Thatcher said: "Our advice will not change. It is up to athletes to decide in the light of that advice. They must ask themselves whether it is right to go to Moscow against a background of bombed and burning villages in Afghanistan."

Mrs Thatcher also wrote that the curtail British trade would not hurt the Soviet Union, but would hurt British firms and workers.

Mr Howell said tonight British sportsmen and women would "overwhelmingly reject this double talk" of the prime minister's. He said her letter "reveals she believes sport to be expendable." He went on: "Apart from being unacceptable to sport, this answer reveals an astonishing attitude--that in spite of the Afghanistan crisis, the government does not intend to take any effective action so far as Soviet aggression is concerned."

EGYPT'S: KHALIL MEETS WITH CARRINGTON ON EUROPEAN MIDEAST ROLE

NC052020 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1900 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] London, 5 June--The deputy leader of the National Democratic Party [NDP], Dr Mustafa Khalil, met this evening in London with British Foreign Minister Lord Carrington.

The 1-hour meeting was held at the House of Lords and attended by the Egyptian ambassador in Britain, Hasan Abu Sa'dah, and the former British representative at the EEC, Sir Donald Maitland, who is currently the British Foreign Ministry's permanent under secretary. After the meeting, Mr Abu Sa'dah told the MENA correspondent in London that the Egyptian and British parties reached an understanding concerning the new form of the European initiative on the Middle East. However, Mr Abu Sa'dah did not wish to divulge the ideas or concepts which are being considered by the Western states with regard to this initiative.

The Egyptian ambassador described the meeting as useful and constructive, adding that the British side has reiterated its satisfaction with the Egyptian concepts previously outlined by Vice President Husni Mubarak during his meeting at the end of last month with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and British Foreign Minister Lord Carrington. At that time the new form of the European initiative was modified to make it agree with the essence of Egyptian ideas. The ambassador said that the British side has expressed its agreement with Egyptian concepts regarding the European role during the current phase and that the British officials have expressed their full support for the Egyptian stance as well as an understanding of an sympathy with the legitimate Palestinian rights.

The ambassador said that during this meeting Dr Mustafa Khalil elucidated the Egyptian attitude on current Middle East developments. He also briefed the British side on the latest autonomy talks in Herzliyya and their aftermath. Dr Khalil also briefed the British officials on the outcome of his recent visit to the United States. In his statement, Mr Hasan Abu Sa'dah said that, during their meeting, Mr Mustafa Khalil and Lord Carrington discussed the new ideas and suggestions which will be submitted by Britain during the Western countries' forthcoming conference in Venice on the Middle East problem. The ambassador added that the Egyptian and British views are identical.

Meanwhile, responsible British Foreign Ministry sources have stated that, during the meeting among Dr Mustafa Khalil, Lord Carrington and Sir Donald, the Arab-Israeli conflict was reviewed, as were Middle East developments and the settlement of this problem.

Tonight, Egyptian Ambassador Abu Sa'dah will hold a dinner banquet in honor of Dr Khalil. A number of high-ranking officials at the Egyptian Embassy as well as the directors of the technical bureaus of the Egyptian Embassy will attend. On Saturday, Dr Khalil will meet with the representatives of the Egyptian delegates to the United Kingdom. Dr Khalil arrived in London yesterday from the United States.

UN'S PEREZ HOLDS MEETINGS WITH GREEK, TURKISH SIDES

[Text] Perez de Cuellar, the UN under secretary general for special political affairs, who arrived in Cyprus last night, was received by President Kiprianou today. Present at the meeting, which lasted for about 1 hour, was Ambassador Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus. After the meeting with the president of the republic, Perez de Cuellar then went to the Turkish sector of Nicosia and met with Mr Denktas, the Turkish Cypriot leader.

Another meeting between the president of the republic and the UN official began at 1130 at the presidential palace and is still continuing. KHARAVYI Support for Talks

NC061052 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 6 Jun 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Let Us Find a Way Out"]

[Excerpts] We attach great importance to the arrival here of the UN under secretary general for special political affairs, Perez de Cuellar, in an effort to find an outlet for resuming the intercommunal talks. In today's difficult international conditions--the heightening of tension in our region and the transforming of Turkey into an important bridgehead and war annex to the aggressive policy of NATO and the United States--the deadlock in the Cyprus issue and the prolongation of the aggression and occupation in northern Cyprus create terrible dangers for the future of our people. The patriotic forces are justifiably concerned because they know the treacherous and deceitful plans of NATOist imperialists in changing Cyprus into their military springboard. We also know the NATOists' enmity for a peaceful and just solution that would safeguard the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, nonalignment and demilitarization of our island.

We believe that the intercommunal talks constitute a basic link in the process for promoting a final solution of the Cyprus issue within the UN framework and we firmly believe that this process must function so that it will not fail and be replaced by the other unacceptable and dangerous processes being proposed by the enemies of Cyprus.

It is for these basic and serious reasons that we consider as an imperative duty of the government, the Greek Cypriot side and all the country's patriotic forces to sincerely, honorably and effectively promote the resumption of the process of the intercommunal talks. At this moment we are called upon to support the new attempt by the UN Under Secretary General Perez de Cuellar, whom we consider a sincere and warm friend of Cyprus. It is an attempt to get us out of the deadlock and standstill and lead us to the solution defined in the UN resolutions. Let us come to our senses and fulfill with zeal this duty to save Cyprus. If we fail, we would have to pay an enormous price, which would mean continuing and perpetuating the faits accomplis of the occupation as well as amassing new dangers and unforeseen consequences.

We now await the United Nations and particularly its Security Council and high-ranking officers, to develop more initiative and action and to fully undertake their responsibilities toward Cyprus and toward peace in the sensitive eastern Mediterranean region--responsibilities that arise from the UN resolutions and that are serious and truly historical in the case of Cyprus.

Denktas Comments Before Visit

TA051325 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] President Rauf Denktas said that the Greek Cypriots have denied the existence of the bizonality [last word in English] principle, which was being discussed during the talks to solve the Cyprus problem. Denktas recalled that, however, UN Secretary General Waldheim has made moves confirming the existence of this principle and the fact that it was discussed at the Denktas-Makarios summit meeting.

Commenting on reports that UN Under Secretary General for Special Political Affairs Perez de Cuellar will arrive in Cyprus to reconcile the two sides on the issue of the bizonality principle, Denktas said the Perez de Cuellar could deal with all the problems. However, there should not be any difficulties concerning the existence and meaning of the bizonality principle. Denktas noted that, by dreaming of eventually Hellenizing Cyprus and of transforming the Muslim Turkish Cypriot community into a minority by usurping its cofounder rights, the Greek Cypriot side shows its intransigence. Denktas also expressed the hope that during his visit to Cyprus Perez will take action to lead the Greek Cypriots onto the right path on these main issues.

Denktas: No New Proposals

In a statement to journalists at the end of the meeting, Denktas said that Perez did not bring any new proposals regarding the talks. Perez held a meeting with Greek Cypriot community leader Spiros Kiprianou this morning.

[Text] Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis, addressing a foreign press conference, said Greece does not oppose the economic aid which Turkey is asking for in order to cope with its declining economy. I KATHIMERINI BLAMES TURKEY FOR WEAKNESS IN NATO BORDER AREA

[Editorial: "It Is Their Own Fault"]

[Text] A series of recent developments and actions makes it obvious that the problem of bringing order to the Grecian area has risen on the list of priorities and goals of the leaders of NATO and particularly of the power which, "de facto," dominates the Alliance (and whose priorities do not always coincide with the goals and priorities of the Alliance as a whole). From recent statements by the Alliance's secretary general on the need for our country to return to the Alliance's military wing and certain reports about submission of new proposals to Greece for this very same purpose to--obviously not so coincidental--relevant articles in authoritative Western (primarily American and British) newspapers, everything points to the fact that the entire issue has acquired a certain urgency in the eyes of the circles we mentioned earlier. Consequently, Greece is, or is likely to be, placed face to face with various proposals or recommendations for its return to NATO's military wing under conditions and prerequisites which will naturally touch upon the essence of its differences with Turkey.

We have no knowledge of the content of proposals which will reportedly be submitted to our country and we do not desire to reach advance conclusions--even though relevant press reports suggest that the new proposals will not be essentially different from the previous ones rejected by Greece because they could create conditions dangerous to our country's national sovereignty and security. We will limit ourselves to stressing, recalling and clarifying certain aspects of a relationship which exists throughout the entire issue.

In a recent article the New York TIMES noted that, although the southeast wing of NATO ought to be very strong, it is, on the contrary, militarily weak and politically chaotic due to the dispute between Greece and Turkey.

We now ask a question: Who caused and maintains this dispute? There is only one answer: Turkey did it by itself. It is only Turkey which undertook the invasion of the independent state of Cyprus and continues to keep under its military occupation 40 percent of Cypriot territory, contrary to repeated UN resolutions. It is only Turkey which "out of the blue" raised claims and views on Greek control of the sea, air and seafloor without justification and contrary to the general and specific provisions of international law. It is only Turkey which presents "conditions" that mean the loss of Greek sovereign rights over Greek territory and prevents Greece's return to NATO's military wing. All this, which is very well known to everyone, was also recently admitted by the authoritative London TIMES in its editorial.

Who then is responsible for the dispute which weakens the southeast wing of the Atlantic Alliance? At the same time, who is responsible for the fact that Turkey has dared to follow such hegemonistic and expansionist views and, primarily, for Turkey's insistence upon such views? [paragraph continues]

Naturally Turkey would not have dared to express, or at the least to insist on such views if there had been a clear and active expression against them by those strong forces in the international arena--and particularly by the superpower from across the Atlantic--upon which Turkey is completely and absolutely dependent. On the contrary, these forces supply Turkey with ample economic aid--without even establishing conditions for its withdrawal from Cyprus and for lifting its unacceptable claims upon Greek territory. Consequently, as is also natural, Turkey has gained courage and continues to insist even more upon its raucous views against Cyprus and against Greece.

The same U.S. newspaper further reports that "the extensive frontiers of Turkey with the USSR are considered to be the most vulnerable area of the eastern wing of NATO." How could this be untrue at a time when the main bulk of Turkish Armed Forces has been deployed not against the USSR but against Greece and Cyprus? Former Turkish Prime Minister Ecevit in a speech at the Institute for Strategic Studies in London publicly and directly stated that for Turkey the danger does not come from the USSR but from Greece.

Controlling and restoring the situation which was created was and remains up to those who are "concerned" over the weakening of NATO's southeast wing. They can only blame themselves for this situation.

However, we have the impression that it is not the stability of the southeastern wing of the Alliance which is truly of interest to those who refer to it. Had they been truly interested in this they could have restored it easily. We much fear that they want Turkey to be their local overseer between the eastern Mediterranean, Mesopotamia and the Persian Gulf for reasons and goals which have absolutely nothing to do with the Atlantic Alliance and the so noisily presented "interests of the Western world."

So far they tried with their different "proposals," which were nothing but adoption of the Turkish expansionist claims, to "clear up" the situation at the expense of our country. We do not know if they will once again attempt the same thing. What we do know is that the Greek Government will stint no effort to prevent any, even the least, "threat" to Greek sovereign rights over its national territory or against any, even a distant, threat to its national security. We are also certain that our country will not be drawn into any clashes or confrontations over issues or interests alien to it. At a time when powers of the extent and strength of the European Community and Japan separate their position and avoid such involvements then what should we have to say?

It is proper that everyone should know that the time of submission, of exclusive dependencies and of naive (no matter how harmful they may be) "volunteered positions" and of "taken for granted" positions and situations, or, concisely the time of enslavement of others, is over for good.

BRITISH DISCUSS SALE OF 4 FRIGATES, TANKS, OTHER TRADE

AT051314 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 5 Jun 80 p 1

[Text] Greece is studying a British proposal for the supply of four frigates to the Greek Navy. This was revealed yesterday during a press conference by the British Under Secretary for Trade Norman Tebbit who added that if the agreement is concluded the four ships will be of the most advanced technological type known as "Type 24" which has not even been supplied to the British Royal Navy for use to date. Tebbit added that one of the frigates will be built in British shipyards in Scotland and the other three in Greek yards under British supervision. The cost and date for handing over the ships are considered to be competitive to those offered by other countries. Tebbit refused to reveal further details of British credit conditions but said a reply is expected very soon from the Greek Government.

The British under secretary revealed that Britain is interested in selling passenger aircraft to Greece and particularly stressed strong British interests on the prospect of closer cooperation with Greece more generally in the economic sector.

Tebbit, who is visiting Greece on the occasion of "Poseidonia" [maritime exhibition] after referring to his contacts with Greek ministers stressed the possibilities for cooperation both in the economic as well as in the maritime sectors.

The British under secretary for trade, after reiterating his country's interest in cooperation in the energy sector, in railway modernization, in construction of the new Athens Metro and airport, also stressed the following:

1--Greek entry to the EEC will strengthen the Community's position in the maritime sector because, together with Britain, the two countries are the most significant ones in the merchant marine.

2--The existence of Britain and Greece with their mercantile fleets in the EEC will strengthen the Community's position in transportation in comparison to the eastern [countries].

3--An agreement was reached for cooperation between Greece and Britain in the construction of four frigates for the Greek Navy. [as published]

4--There is an interest in the sale of British tanks to Greece and even in the assembly of British tanks by the Greek war industry.

5--The British market is an excellent market for fruit and vegetables and Greece must have access to the share which belongs to it provided that the quality of Greek produce satisfies British consumers.

6--Britain is interested in cooperation with Greek businesses in the food processing industry (technology, mechanical equipment and so forth).

At this point Tebbit characteristically stressed that "the entry of Greece into the European Community is a good opportunity for Greek producers and British firms which, through cooperation, can have joint economic benefits."

In conclusion the British under secretary mentioned that the spinning and weaving problem always remains between British and Greece but expressed the belief that any possible difficulties will be overcome due to the policy being followed in this sector.

MARKEZINIS BLAMES NEW DEMOCRACY FOR ECONOMIC, OTHER PROBLEMS

AT051405 Athens ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS in Greek 5 Jun 80 pp 1,14

[Report by Thessaloniki Correspondent Al. Rigas on a speech delivered by the leader of the Party of the Progressives, Spiros Markezinis, on the evening of 4 June in Thessaloniki]

[Excerpts] Speaking last night here at a meeting of approximately 700 of the party's north Greek personalities, Progressive leader Spiros Markezinis first severely criticized the New Democracy government of the past 6 years for its policies in all sectors and stressed that today's new government under Yeoryios Rallis is condemned to failure because it is simply a disguise of the older one. He then explained that this is the very reason that the people are right in seeking a change. He added that this Panhellenic demand for change can be achieved by those peoples' forces which prevailed in 1944 and in 1946-49 and managed to guarantee the position of Greece among the free and independent nations.

At the same time the leader of the Progressives referred to the 1974 plebiscite on the political regime and stressed that this was in no way correct since in August 1974, when the 1952 Constitution was reinstated, there was no mention of provisions dealing with the monarchy. He added that if this is not an adulteration then it is nothing more than an apotheosis of the absurd.

Markezinis also stressed the following:

--Knowing that the majority of the Greek people want change and fear elections the government is trying to exhaust its 4 year term at a time when 1980 appears incomparably grimmer nationally and economically than 1977 when it hastened to speed up elections. Elections should be speeded up now in the very same way. He then stressed that those in power have only one thought in mind--how to monopolize authority disregarding not only the fact that they represent a minority but also using the most outdated old-party methods of horsetrading in order to preserve the government and gain the presidency.

--Referring to the New Democracy government's economic policy in detail, Markezinis said this policy has led from bad to worse ever since 1974. He stressed that inflation is increasing by leaps and bounds, that instead of justice in taxation there is the most stark taxation injustice and the lower tax brackets are being hit the hardest due to the inflexibility of the tax criteria. He stressed that the country's productivity is now being counted in negative figures and that investments are discouraged through domestic uncertainty. At the same time, because those in power cannot borrow at home they issue paper money and in order to gain foreign exchange they borrow overseas under today's adverse conditions to the point that they will be unable to resist the pressures of the International Monetary Fund in the same way that Turkey was unable to. For this reason, he concluded, a shock treatment is essential in the financial sector if confidence is to be regained.

--Referring to the complex problems which make up the national issue, Markezinis blamed those in the government for committing the unforgiveable mistake of confusing the attempt to have peace with the attempt to avoid war with Turkey stressing that the tactic of "the Cypriots decide and the Greek Government supports" is deceiving, weak and dangerous. He blamed the government for the deterioration of the Aegean situation and of providing Turkey with rights because without a reason it withdrew from NATO. He added that the Cyprus issue cannot be successfully solved unless full light is shed on what exactly happened in 1974 in Cyprus, in other words, unless there is first an investigation of Cyprus, even with the grant of amnesty in advance for those who would be convicted.

--Referring to the officers incarcerated in prison, he described them as political prisoners and stressed that there is no crime in this instance and that an unprecedented number of people were prosecuted retroactively under legal interpretations unheard of in any European country. He added that this legal issue will be handled by the Progressives not only by restoring freedom but also by restoring ranks and positions. Markezinis stressed that the moral issue cannot be won and unity cannot exist if the Greeks are divided into two classes of citizens.

--He lauded the high morale of the officers corps and that of the security forces but added they are faced with serious economic problems and that they ought not to be underestimated.

--Referring to education he described its current state of affairs as deplorable, he described higher education as in a state of dissolution and that at all cost it must be freed from politics.

Concluding his address Markezinis said the acute home and foreign problems which our country faces coincides with an international situation which is murky and fosters all sorts of possibilities while we are on the dangerous front line. This requires a government with a renewed recent peoples mandate, in other words, it is imperative to have elections as soon as possible.

NOTE SENT TO IRAQ IN PROTEST OF DEATHS ON BORDER

TA051446 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Excerpt] In its meeting today under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel, the Council of Ministers decided to give a note to the Iraqi Government on the killing of 10 Turkish citizens who crossed the Iraqi border. The note states that the Turkish Government reserves all its rights and demands regarding the incident. In a statement following the meeting which was held at 1100 and which lasted 3 1/2 hours, Demirel said the following on the issues discussed and resolutions reached during the meeting:

[Begin Demirel recording] The Council of Ministers discussed the border incident near Hakkari. During the 3 days that have elapsed since the incident, we have investigated all aspects of the incident and in light of the information we received we assessed the incident once more during the Council of Ministers meeting. Iraqi soldiers killing our citizens without questioning them and charging that they crossed the border is not only a flagrant violation of article 20 of the third section of the sixth protocol annexed to the Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation signed between the two countries in 1946, but is an action which is incompatible with humane and spiritual values. We have taken note of this fact with regret. The incident is a violation of the agreement between the two countries. It is an inhuman incident which should not occur between Muslims. Article 20 of the protocol annexed to the agreement states precisely: Any person who crosses the border without the proper documents and permission will be held, and if he has acted against the laws of that country he will be brought to trial and will be returned to the border authorities or other accredited persons of the country from which he came after he completes his sentence. Those who cross the border by mistake or through losing their way will be returned to the borders of the other side without any further steps being taken against them. This is what the agreement states.

The measures to be taken against those crossing the border have been determined by an agreement. They have killed our 10 citizens without investigating the incident. We find that this stand contradicts the spirit of goodneighborliness, friendship and brotherhood, as well as the existing agreements. I disapprove of the stand of the Iraqi officials toward this grave incident. That is why the government has decided to give a note to the Iraqi Government. This note protests this incident and demands the speedy punishment of those who committed this crime. It also points out that the Turkish Government reserves all rights and demands regarding this incident. We shall continue to pursue the matter. The incident will not be closed with the sending of this note. I am openly stating this. The Council of Ministers also reviewed the 1980 program and targets. [end recording]

Ecevit Comment

TA061041 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has said that the killing of 10 Turkish citizens in Hakkari's Cukurca District on grounds that they crossed the border has wounded the Turkish nation in the heart. In a statement in Ankara, Ecevit said that the citizens who were killed were cutting grass with no harmful intentions at a point where the border is undefined. Recalling that there were also little children accompanying the citizens who were killed, Ecevit said: As a matter of fact, as stated in the note issued by the government yesterday, the reply to defenseless people who did not resist when warned should not be to kill them. Ecevit noted that the friendly relations between Turkey and Iraq based on mutual trust were, above all, founded on the close feelings between the two peoples. Recalling that Iraqi authorities should refrain from moves that might damage or upset these feelings, Ecevit called on the pertinent Iraqi authorities to effectively warn security officials stationed in border regions.

ERKMEN RETURNS FROM OECD MEETING, COMMENTS ON ECONOMY, IRAQ

TA051634 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen, who attended the OECD meeting held in Paris, returned home today. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, Erkmen said that economic problems and the inflationary pressures caused by the raising oil prices were discussed during the meeting. Recalling that the continuous price increases brought an additional expenditure of about $175 billion to consuming countries, Erkmen said that this money was placed in banks in Western countries. Erkmen added that the issue of all countries being careful concerning the effects of inflation on their budgetary and financial policies was accepted in principle.

Replying to questions by journalists, Erkmen said that he greatly regretted the incident at the Iraqi border and that the killing of unarmed persons was not compatible with international law, Islamic principles or human rights.

PROTOCOL SIGNED ON DELIVERY OF TWO U.S. DESTROYERS

TA051128 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Excerpt] The protocol concerning the delivery of the two U.S. destroyers, Piyalepasa and Kilicalipasa, which were given to the Turkish Navy, was signed in Ankara. U.S. Chief of Naval Operations Adm Thomas Hayward, who arrived in Ankara to sign the protocol, visited the naval headquarters this morning. He was received by Turkish Navy Commander Adm Bulent Ulusu with a military ceremony. Hayward and Ulusu conferred for some time and discussed issues regarding the navies of the two countries. Later, the destroyers' delivery protocol was signed.

In a statement during the signing ceremony Ulusu said that the two destroyers, which joined the ranks of the Turkish Navy under the names Piyalepasa and Kilicalipasa, will greatly contribute to the maintenance of peace in our region and to NATO efforts toward this end.

In his statement, Hayward said that the cooperation between the navies of the two countries is very important in strengthening NATO's defensive strength in this region, where Turkey has strategic importance.

After the speeches, Hayward and Ulusu signed the protocol on the delivery of the two U.S. destroyers to the Turkish Navy.

ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE REJECTS JP PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS AMENDMENT

TA060530 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] The National Assembly's Constitutional Committee rejected the constitutional amendment proposal from Justice Party leader Suleyman Demirel and his colleagues. Today the constitutional committee chairman, National Salvation Party Deputy from Konya Sener Battal, announced the reasons that led to the rejection of the amendment proposal. Battal said that the election of the president by the people would disrupt the balance among the legislative, executive and judiciary organs; would necessitate rearranging the constitutional institutions in accordance with the presidential system of government; and would deprive the presidency of its role as arbitrator above all political parties. The constitutional amendment proposal prepared by Demirel and his colleagues stipulates that the president be elected through general elections if the Turkish Grand National Assembly fails to elect a president 15 days before the date the president's mandate ends. The proposal will now be brought before the National Assembly for discussions.

NSP THREATENS TO WITHDRAW SUPPORT FROM GOVERNMENT

TA061024 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] National Salvation Party [NSP] leader Necmettin Erbakan said that if the requests and demands specified in the warning letter to be submitted to the prime minister are not fulfilled within a month, the NSP will stop supporting the government. Erbakan added that if the decisive and concrete decisions in the warning letter are implemented, the party will continue to support the government. Erbakan said: Otherwise, the NSP will automatically be relieved from the obligation to support the government.

In a news conference at the parliament, Erbakan said that this conditional decision was not made with the aim of overthrowing the government. He added that, however, if steps were taken within the parliament to overthrow the government his party would freely determine its position in accordance with the meaning and essence of the parliamentary move. Erbakan concluded by saying that early elections in October--provided conditions in the country call for it--might also be a solution but that, given the current situation, it is necessary to form a government that will be able to ensure security during the elections.

TRT DIRECTOR DISCUSSES FINANCIAL PROBLEMS, IMPARTIAL REPORTING

TA051853 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Summary] "TRT Director General Dogan Kasaroglu said that for the Turkish TRT not to be involved in politics and to work impartially, it had to reach the point where it could meet its own expenses." Kasaroglu was speaking at the meeting of a parliamentary committee. Kasaroglu stated that the impartial reporting of political news items was a constitutional necessity. Recalling that the Constitution asked for legislation to determine the method political activities would be reported by the TRT, Kasaroglu asked that this legislation be passed as soon as possible so that the TRT would not be involved in sterile political arguments.

"Pointing out that the lack of stability in the TRT administration was one of the main problems it was facing, Kasaroglu said the politics which affects other state enterprises were also present in the TRT. He added that as a result the TRT had eight directors during the last 6 years. He stressed that the TRT directors should be considered technical elements without any political involvement." Kasaroglu said that radio broadcasts reached 98 percent of the citizens and that the television programs were watched by 85 percent of the people. He said efforts would be made this year to provide programs that would reach all of the population. He added that a second television channel would be established to provide educational programs and that for the moment color television was out of the question because of Turkey's economic conditions.

"Defining the TRT's 1980 financial situation as a catastrophy, Kasaroglu said that the TRT had a limited revenue from fees and advertisements. Kasaroglu added that the TRT would be able to prepare impartial programs only when it would be able to provide its expenses from its own resources. It is out of the question to claim that the TRT is impartial when in fact the TRT can exist only through financial aid provided by governments--no matter which political party is in power, Kasaroglu added."

UK DEFENSE MINISTER DISCUSSES NATO NUCLEAR STANCE

LD051217 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 5 Jun 80 p 6

[Clare Hollingworth dispatch: "Russia Steps Up Nuclear Threat to West Europe"]

[Text] Bodo, Norway--Since the NATO decision on Dec 12 to update theatre nuclear weapons Soviet productivity in the nuclear field had increased alarmingly, Mr Pym, defence secretary, said yesterday in Bodo after a NATO meeting there.

By the end of 1982, Western Europe alone would be faced with more than 1,000 nuclear warheads, added Mr Pym, who told me he believed the Russians' objective was to expand their territory and influence.

They aimed to exert political pressure to do this, but he thought they would be ready and prepared to fight if unable to achieve their aims though political or economic means.

"A new SS-20, the Russian mobile missile which can cover targets anywhere in Europe, is coming into service every five days," Mr Pym said.

These "Euro-strategic" nuclear weapons are not covered by SALT I or SALT II because they cannot cross the Atlantic Ocean.

Together with the Russian Backfire bomber they are responsible for the decision by the Atlantic Alliance to deploy a theatre nuclear force of 572 land-based cruise missiles and Pershings-2s in Europe late in 1983.

Mr Pym added that the Russians' older SS-4 and SS-5 missiles have not been removed from their sites in Western Russia as expected by NATO and other intelligence services.

Mr Harold Brown, American defence secretary, confirmed that America was withdrawing 1,000 nuclear warheads from Europe as part of the modernisation programme.

In a communique on the Nuclear Planning Group meeting defence ministers noted Russian deployment of the SS-20 missile and Backfire had "continued unabated," together with "retention of Soviet SS-4 and SS-5 missile launchers."

This coupled with continuing deployment of SS-20 missiles, might lead to an even greater superiority in long-range theatre nuclear weapons in the mid-1980s than previously expected, they said.

Their main theme, however, was an appeal to Russia to reconsider two offers made by America "to conduct serious negotiations on arms control involving long-range theatre nuclear forces." Moscow has been unresponsive.

NUCLEAR SAFETY ACCORD CONCLUDED WITH SPAIN

LD051137 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 31 May 80 p 4

[Unattributed report: "Agreement on Nuclear Safety Signed by Portugal and Spain"]

[Text] The Portuguese and Spanish governments have pledged to establish in their territories "the systems necessary for detecting conditions of radioactive alarm and to inform each other if this could have repercussions in the other country." This is one of the clauses of the Portuguese-Spanish agreement on cooperation in the field of the safety of border nuclear installations, published in yesterday's official gazette.

The agreement was signed in Lisbon 31 March and envisages the setting up of a permanent technical commission to ensure its implementation.

Regarding as "border nuclear installations" those whose site is located less than 30 km from the border between the two countries, the agreement stipulates that the appropriate authorities of the country constructing them will notify those of the neighboring country of applications for permits to site, construct and operate the installations, and the notifications will be accompanied by the documentation concerning nuclear safety and radiological protection. This information will be supplied sufficiently in advance to allow the neighboring country's possible comments and remarks to be taken into account by the constructor country.

Under the agreement, the governments of the two sides "will take the necessary steps to lay down emergency procedures for crossing the border in the event of an emergency."

The official gazette also includes a cultural cooperation agreement between Portugal and India.

NORWAY'S VIEWS AT MBFR AT VARIANCE WITH PRAVDA'S

LD061555 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 5 Jun 80 p 19

[Dag Halvorsen report: "Norway Fears Buildup on the 'Flanks'"]

[Text] Vienna--For the first time Norway spoke at the MBFR talks on troop reductions in Central Europe on Wednesday. The talks have been going on in Vienna for 7 years without having reached any definite results. It seldom happens that representatives of the so-called flank nations in NATO (Norway, Denmark, Italy, Greece and Turkey) speak at the talks. However, the topic of military balance on the northern and southern flanks has been raised several times, especially by the West.

Norway attaches great importance to its view that the reductions in Central Europe should not create new tension on the flanks. It is not in our interest that Soviet troops, for example, that are withdrawn, are deployed near our borders. However, it has been difficult to get definite assurances from the East on this point as on other important points.

Nevertheless, Norway attaches great importance to these talks which many people consider merely to be a waste of time, effort and money. But especially in difficult periods between East and West it is important that such channels are kept open and that negotiations on security problems continue between the parties. The chief Norwegian delegate, Ambassador Einar Ofstad, stressed that it is now extremely important to reach agreement on a first phase in reductions. Like other NATO nations Norway considers the most recent Western proposals from December 1979 to be a satisfactory basis. One proposal requires that, first of all, the United States should withdraw 13,000 men while the Russians pull out 30,000 soldiers. However, the proposal was totally rejected by the Warsaw Pact. As recently as Tuesday the Soviet party organ, PRAVDA, wrote that the new proposal exceeds the agreed framework for negotiations and that it is to the detriment of the security interests of the East bloc countries. PRAVDA dissociated itself from the so-called confidence-building measures which will also apply outside the Central European reduction area.

PRAVDA's views are totally at variance with those that Norway has always promoted, even during the talks in Vienna. Norway is especially interested in confidence-building measures such as prior notification of maneuvers and troop movements that involve more than one division, but is also very interested in securing enhanced rights as an observer at maneuvers from the European security conference and in the context of MBFR. But it does not seem as if the East bloc is more amenable now than it was before, despite all appeals for cooperation in reaching definite results in the military sector as an important part of the process of detente.

GREEK FOREIGN MINISTER EXPRESSES GRIM OUTLOOK AFTER OECD SESSION

ATO61247 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1800 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Interview with Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis by ERT, national radio and television, Paris correspondent Yiannis Angelopoulos on 5 June, on conclusion of the OECD conference--video recorded]

[Text] [Question] The prospects of world economy and international trade were two of the main issues dealt with yesterday and today in Paris by the 19th ministerial-level OECD conference. Foreign and finance ministers of the 24 member states of the international economic organization attended the conference. After examining the general progress of world economy, particularly with regard to the problems of energy and raw materials with special emphasis on the role of developing countries and, specifically, relations between North and South, they defined a series of prospects which appear to remain rather murky at the moment. The new OECD declaration on international trade policy was approved bearing in mind current conditions and the goals of the previous declaration of 1974.

Greece was represented at the conference by Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and Trade Minister Dhias.

Mr Minister, does the future of world economy remain murky?

[Answer] Unfortunately, the OECD atmosphere was dominated by the concerns of today's world over the immediate and primarily over the more distant future. All prospects are grim. I will try to avoid giving you too many figures. Prospects for development in 1980, in any case, remain negative for the second half. It must be approximately 0 percent for the total of the year. The deficit in the foreign payments balance for OECD countries, which in 1978 had a surplus of $10 billion, is at this moment $75 billion. The latest price hike has not yet been taken into consideration. It has already gone beyond 80 and may even go higher. On the other hand, unemployment is steadily increasing and, more generally, the economic situation is developing unpleasantly. It would be dangerous for one to talk of forecasts beyond 1980. What I would like to state is that, as yet, there is no ray of hope on the horizon.

[Question] All these difficulties, Mr Minister, are they exclusively due to increases in the prices of oil and raw materials or are they due to other causes as well?

[Answer] These difficulties most certainly are not exclusively due to increases in oil and raw material prices even though these increases have terrifying significance, a significance which is increasingly understood by all European nations. I will again give you some absolutely characteristic figures: During the last 12 months the increase in oil prices cost OECD countries an additional $150 billion because we have had an increase of 135 percent while, during the same period last year we spoke of an increase of only 40 percent. You understand what this means to the OECD countries and to the whole world.

[Question] Mr Minister, I would like to ask you about a problem which I believe dominated the deliberations of your council: What exactly was the nature of attention given to the situation in the developing countries and specifically to the question of relations between North and South?

[Answer] Here you enter the essence of the matter. This is what I meant when I earlier said that the problem does not solely consist of the oil price hikes. If we look at it only in this way then we isolate only one of the many phenomena and symptoms of a more general crisis. The problem is that the world has not yet managed to find a solution, nor even to approach a solution to the problem of relations between North and South, that is, the rich and the developing countries.

This problem has been under discussion for the past 16 years. An entire decade has gone by since U Thant rang the bell of danger in his capacity as chief of the United Nations at that time. Since that time the price of oil has increased 17 times; the price of food has increased four times; and the population of the earth has increased by 1 billion. There are always 1 billion people in the world who are underfed. The distance between the developed countries and the developing countries is increasing. Tension, therefore, also increases. The problem that has evolved is very serious. I deeply believe and I think this is also the belief of all those who are today members of the OECD conference, whether they did or did not open admit it, that this is the future problem of the world. If humanity does not manage to solve this problem, then we will go from bad to worse and future prospects will be unpleasant, causing grave concern. This, in any case, was also stressed by the (?Brandt) committee. All the committees, all the experts, all the great personalities of the world stressed this very same problem in their statements. This was the problem which dominated this session of OECD.

[Question] With reference to Greece, Mr Minister, what specifically are the prospects defined on the basis of all facts expressed by you earlier?

[Answer] Greece is also a member of this world. It is natural that it suffers the very same consequences as all other countries. I would, in a few words, say to you that the world crisis is also transferred to our own country. If you just think that this year's increase in oil prices, which I mentioned earlier, means an average cut of the national revenue of OECD countries by 2 percent, then in Greece this ought to mean something higher. Because we have a greater dependence upon oil, you can well understand that the world economic crisis will have direct consequences in our country as well. The Greek people and the Greek Government have a duty to face those consequences.

[Question] At this opportunity, Mr Minister, were you briefed by the French side on the meeting between the French president and Brezhnev in Warsaw?

[Answer] No, there was no such briefing. As you know I was briefed by the Polish ambassador to Athens, who handed me the resolution issued by the Warsaw Pact countries and at the same time briefed me, from the Polish point of view, on the Warsaw Pact point of view, on the discussion held there. We have had no special briefing from the French side.

[Question] Thank you, Mr Minister.

WEU VOTES FOR INITIATIVES ON MIDEAST, FRG NAVY RESTRICTIONS

ID051625 Paris LE MONDE in French 5-6 Jun 80 p 10

[Unattributed report: "WEU Assembly Declares Itself in Favor of Self-Determination for Palestinians on West Bank and in Gaza"]

[Text] The Western European Union assembly, attended since Monday, 2 June, in Paris by British, French, West German, Italian and Benelux parliamentarians, adopted Tuesday--by 39 votes to 5, with 13 abstentions--a recommendation proposing the preparation of an international conference on the Near East conflict. Israel, the Arab countries, a delegation truly representative of the Palestinian people, the United States and the West European countries would take part in this conference. In addition, the assembly declared itself in favor of an amendment to UN Resolution 242, "aimed, on the one hand, at maintaining Israel's security within secure and internationally recognized borders and, on the other hand, guaranteeing the Palestinians their inalienable right to self-determination on the West Bank and in Gaza in order to establish their own homeland there."

On the previous day, the assembly had requested by 55 votes to 6, with 2 abstentions, an amendment to the Treaty of Brussels (which set up the Western European Union in 1954) in order to alleviate the restrictions imposed on the FRG naval forces: Under this treaty and its protocols, the FRG Navy is restricted to eight 6,000-ton destroyers, other vessels being unable to exceed 3,000 tons in the case of combat vessels and 6,000 tons in the case of auxiliary vessels: The assembly requested the lifting of these ceilings and also of a measure essentially confining the deployment of these forces solely to NATO'S command zone in Europe (Saceur), in particular, the Baltic and eastern areas of the North Sea. (In fact, two West German destroyers, accompanied by two support vessels, are currently in the Indian Ocean.)

The French representatives--in particular, Messrs Bozzi and Valleix, both of whom are Rally for the Republic members--have stressed, without directly criticizing these amendments, that it is advisable to proceed cautiously in this field and await more specific requests from the Bonn government.

EUROPEAN-ARAB COOPERATION CONGRESS OPENS IN ATHENS

AT081239 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 7 Jun 80

[Text] The theme, "West Europe and the Arab east--ways for cooperation in a mutually dependent world," will be the subject of a 3-day congress which opened in Athens today under the auspices of the Greek Mediterranean Center for Arab and Islamic Studies and the Club de Rome.

The Greek Mediterranean Center, founded 3 years ago under Professor Yeorgakis as chairman, is a live institution concerned with the study of problems in Greece and the Middle East. The Club de Rome, which provided the initiative for the congress and requested the center's cooperation, was founded in 1968 for the purpose of studying and understanding trends created by today's contradictions in a continuously evolving humanity.

The congress opened with a message from Prime Ministers Yeoryios Rallis which was read by Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis. In his message the prime minister mentioned the following: "The Greek Government is very pleased to host in Athens this meeting of Europe and the Arab world, organized by the Club de Rome and the Greek Mediterranean Center for Arab and Islamic Studies. Many distinguished personalities are attending this congress for the purpose of exploring and implementing forms of cooperation and mutual interest dictated by an ever increasing mutual dependence. The time has come for us to dedicate ourselves to the search for these forms. Welcoming you to Greece, I assure you once more that the Greek Government is interested in your work and supports it."

Proclaiming the commencement of the congress, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis then stressed that Greece is entering Europe with full rights in order to take up the position which belongs to it. At the same time, however, it does not forget nor does it overlook its special position in the immediate neighborhood of the Arab world with which it has so many historic, economic, political and cultural ties.

Mitsotakis continued that Greece's rapid economic development, its multifaceted policy of peace, friendship and cooperation which is developing in all directions and particularly in our immediate area both toward the Balkans and toward the Arab world, the ever increasing attachment of Greece to international economy, trade, merchant marine, technical affairs and so forth, allow it and dictate to it to have an active policy on issues of interest to this congress.

The ever increasing mutual dependence of our world is something through which we live on a daily basis whether this is related to the energy we import, whether it is related to the agricultrual and industrial goods which we export, or whether this is related to our needs for capital which will further help exploit our potential in all sectors.

We know that we cannot achieve something of this sort by ourselves. It is on this that we base our support of every initiative and specific proposal tending to coordinate the mutually fulfilling potential of our countries toward the achievement of specific goals.

The chairman of the Greek Mediterranean Center, Professor Yeorgakis, addressed the congress and said that more than 1,000 years ago, according to certain documents, the world was reportedly coming to an end. Today, 1,000 years later, the world is being led toward destruction not on the basis of superstition this time, but on the basis of facts based on logic. For this reason we need dialogue.

In ancient times we sought golden solutions to man's prosperity through dialogue. In our times we conduct a dialogue in order to avoid the solutions which are difficult. With this congress we proceed to specific proposals for cooperation between Europe and the Arab world which will furnish the world with a hope for its survival.

The opening of the congress was attended by Minister in Charge of EEC Affairs Kondoyioryis; Minister Without Portfolio Paleokrasas; Deputy Foreign Minister Rendis; ministers and former ministers of European and Arab countries; Secretary General of the Foreign Ministry Theodhoropoulos; and governors, foreign ambassadors in Athens, personalities from international organizations and others.

Attending the congress are delegations from Algeria, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Iraq, Lebanon, Morocco, Qatar, Sudan, Tunisia, North and South Yemen, and Syria.

Also attending from Europe are personalities from West Germany, Austria, Belgium, Spain, France, Italy and Switzerland.

FRG DEFENSE CHIEF APEL DISCUSSES RESULTS OF MEETING IN NORWAY

DW061043 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2050 GMT 4 Jun 80

[Reporter Dreckmann interview with Federal German Defense Minister Dr Hans Apel in Bodoe, Norway; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The NATO defense ministers have once more pointed out the seriousness of the decision to close the arms gap. Were there any doubts in that regard?

[Answer] Naturally there are different debates in our countries and certainly questions come up over and over again about how serious NATO is with regard to its decisions.

We have therefore considered it advisable, in order that negotiations will start as soon as possible and that the Soviet Union will not entertain wrong expectations, to point out that the NATO decisions will remain as they are. It also means that the serious offer to the Soviet Union will continue to exist, namely, to negotiate on arms limitation with regard to medium-range arms.

[Question] This offer is being made. Are the partners still of an undivided opinion with regard to balance on both sides, meaning closing the arms gap and negotiating?

[Answer] This offer is being made. Are the partners still of an undivided opinion with regard to balance on both sides, meaning closing the arms gap and negotiating?

[Answer] It is undivided. In political debates there are certainly politicians, also in our own country who place the emphasis differently. I think that priority ought to be given to arms control, to negotiations with the Warsaw Pact.

But behind this there must be absolute seriousness about adhering to the schedule if such negotiations do not take place and if results are not achieved. In other words, to station in Europe in late 1983 those kinds of U.S. arms which the Soviet Union already has.

[Question] Is this also the political assessment of the Americans?

[Answer] The political assessment is expressed in the communique we adopted in Brussels and in what we have said here. We are completely on the same line in this respect. Both sides will be implemented--if there are no arms control negotiations, the West unfortunately will have to close the arms gap.

PAHR RETURNS FROM 10-DAY LATIN AMERICAN TOUR

AU061116 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 5 Jun 80 p 2

[Text] Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr returned to Vienna yesterday afternoon [4 June] from his 10-day Latin American trip. Pahr had paid an official visit to Brazil 26-30 May, chaired a conference of Austrian ambassadors in the Latin American countries in the Venezuelan capital of Caracas on 31 May, and visited Nicaragua on 1 and 2 June.

Pahr's talks in Latin America primarily dealt with economic topics. Generally, they served the purpose of intensifying cooperation between Austria and Latin America in all fields.

Comments on Nicaragua

AU061117 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 6 Jun 80 p 2

[Philipp E. Gudenus report on telephone interview with Foreign Minister Pahr "directly after his return" from Brazil and Nicaragua]

[Excerpt] Vienna--Austria and Brazil are supporting the current development in Nicaragua in the hope that a pluralist democracy will develop there. This was stated by Foreign Minister Pahr directly after his return from his trip to Brazil and Nicaragua in a telephone interview with DIE PRESSE. In reply to the objection that there is no indication at present of such a development whatsoever, the minister declared that both the junta and the State Council of Nicaragua had stated their intent for a redemocratization. There is private enterprise in the country, which is also promoted by the state, he said.

In reply to DIE PRESSE's argument that the junta had no practical influence on politics and that a few weeks ago two junta members resigned to protest the reshuffle in the State Council [as published] and the predominance of the state party, the Sandinists, that was established in this body, the minister declared that the composition of the State Council was "rather mixed" but he admitted that "groups close to the Sandinists have a slight majority."

However, it is necessary to prevent any isolation of Nicaragua, he said, adding that this was something about which there was consensus between Brasilia and Vienna. It was a mistake to leave Cuba alone in the past.

According to the minister, Austria has already done quite a lot for Nicaragua: In addition to a $50,000 donation for a children's library, Vienna has agreed to finance a hospital for a period of 3 years; moreover, ambulances and 1 million schillings worth of medicines were made available to Nicaragua.

GOVERNMENT OPPOSED TO 'PAUSE' IN EC ADMISSIONS

LD061406 Hamburg DPA in German 1331 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Hamburg--The surprise statement by President Giscard d'Estaing that the European Community should first conclude its expansion from six to nine member-states before admitting Portugal, Spain and Greece has apparently hit the capitals concerned like a bombshell. Even so Bonn and the Community were at pains to warn against dramatizing Giscard's statement. Government Spokesman Boelling said in Bonn today that the Federal Government is not of the opinion that Giscard has embarked on a new policy. He merely wished to draw attention to the problems facing the Community as a result of expansion. Bonn stood by the line pursued hitherto. Boelling intimated that the Federal Government is opposed to a pause in the current negotiations for admission.

FOOD MINISTER DEFENDS UK BUDGET COMPROMISE

LD071105 Hamburg DPA in German 1053 GMT 7 Jun 80

[Text] Duesseldorf--Federal Food Minister Josef Ertl (FDP), speaking in Duesseldorf today, has resolutely defended the Federal Government's attitude concerning the question of the British EC contribution. "I am warning those who maintain it went too far. There could be a rude awakening," Ertl said at the opening of the 11th international bakery exhibition. If Great Britain had left the EC or France had adopted national measures, then that would have meant the end of the Community, the minister said. In a world of growing power concentration Europe's existence is vital for the equilibrium of peace.

GENSCHER: EC DOES NOT INTEND TO CHANGE RESOLUTION 242

LD081300 Hamburg DPA in German 1133 GMT 8 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--In the words of Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the European states do not intend to disturb the existing peace processes in the Middle East but, on the contrary, support them.

On ZDF television Genscher emphasized on Sunday that it has never been the EC's intention to change UN Resolution 242 concerning the Middle East problem. As far as the question of the Middle East initiative by the Europeans regarding a Palestinian state is concerned, all that has happened is that the EC is to define its position or approach. This is to be discussed at the coming European Council meeting in Venice. The EC will have to continue looking at the latest state of development in the Middle East.

In the same program foreign policy expert of the CDU/CSU Werner Marx said that the Americans had achieved the first genuine peace agreement between Egypt and Israel. If the Europeans were to change the basis then they would also restrain the Egyptians and disturb long-term U.S. policy. The Europeans ought to concentrate on joint action with the Americans. Development policy, in Marx's opinion, would have to fall in with German foreign policy guidelines and serve its own interests. Genscher rejected an extension of the East-West antagonism to the Third World. Bonn seeks cooperation with those countries on an equal footing.

Federal Minister for Economic Cooperation Rainer Offergeld expressed the view that the Federal Republic should do more in the development policy sector if stability in the Third World is to be safeguarded.

The problems caused by the energy price explosion for developing countries without oil will have to be resolved. The Third World's natural environment will also have to be preserved. Bonn has doubled its development aid in 2 years. The Federal Republic's development policy has gained in credibility as a result of Moscow's aggressive conduct in Afghanistan.

GENSCHER VIEWS FDP'S ELECTION PROSPECTS, EAST-WEST RELATIONS

LD061356 Hamburg DPA in German 1246 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Excerpts] Freiburg--According to its chairman, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the FDP is facing the toughest election campaign in its history and must therefore do its utmost to pass the test of the Bundestag elections on 5 October. Alluding to the heavy election defeat in North Rhine-Westphalia on 11 May, the federal foreign minister called on the delegates at the FDP election congress in Freiburg today not to water down political issues and not to waver on the question of the coalition. Genscher addressed this appeal to the 400 delegates: "Let us be very clear about the significance of 5 October. On that day the FDP is not merely facing an election like the SPD and the CDU/CSU; the FDP is facing a decisive test. It will be touch and go."

Genscher stressed that a vote for the FDP is a guarantee that Helmut Schmidt will remain federal chancellor. It would also guarantee that Franz Josef Strauss will not become chancellor. At the same time the FDP chief drew a clear line between his party and the SPD.

For the first time he said the SPD/FDP coalition is threatened from two sides. "From the right, Franz Josef Strauss and the CDU/CSU are once again lining up in their old formation while, from the left, the demand is heard from not uninfluential groups of the SPD for a government formed solely by the SPD. This demand would mean the end of the social-liberal policy." It is therefore the task of the FDP to enable continued progress in freedom in coalition with the SPD.

Genscher affirmed his party's determination to consistently continue the policy of detente despite the present international crises centering on Afghanistan, Iran and the Middle East, and to extend it from Europe to other parts of the world. "Anyone who doesn't want to shoot must talk and negotiate," he said. Together with its coalition partner the FDP will defend "tooth and nail" the fruits of this policy and make every effort "to create the prerequisites for further progress." The basis of this policy is the Federal Republic's membership in the European Community and in the Western defense alliance, the foreign minister stressed.

Genscher once again appealed to Moscow to enter "at long last and without preconditions" into negotiations on medium-range missiles so that the time left until the stationing of new Western nuclear weapons can be used for negotiations. The Vienna disarmament negotiations should be pressed forward with equal vigor. Genscher recognised that the USSR also has legitimate security interests, but in return he demanded that Moscow should show understanding for corresponding Western interests.

Genscher said he is satisfied with the progress made in the relations between the two German states despite the critical international situation. The possibilities of cooperation between Bonn and East Berlin are, in his view, far from exhausted and each new long-term project with the GDR creates new joint interests in a further improvement of relations.

SCHMIDT ON FUNDING OF EC OBLIGATIONS, EAST-WEST CONFLICT

LD090958 Hamburg DPA in German 0914 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] Essen--Federal Chancellor Helmut Shcmidt has made a powerful appeal to the federal laender to grant more funds to the Federal Republic because of increased foreign political financial burdens, in particular as a result of the EC budget compromise.

At the start of the SPD election party congress today in Essen Schmidt accused the laender of having denied the republic the necessary financial allocations and of having ignored for 10 years the basic law's provision on the even distribution of funds. The CDU/CSU majority in the laender has misused the Bundesrat. "The Federal Republic is to be starved financially."

The chancellor confirmed the Federal Government's intention of raising the taxes on petroleum and spirits should the laender refuse to increase the republic's present share of 67.5 percent of retail taxes. He said that in a talk yesterday evening with him and Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer the SPD land prime ministers said they are willing to bear a corresponding share of the international burdens.

In the foreign political part of his speech Schmidt declared his loyalty to the continuation of the policy of guaranteeing peace, detente and disarmament. He repeated his proposal that East and West should forgo for a 3-year period the stationing of new nuclear medium-range missiles in Europe, in order to negotiate as soon as possible on the limitation of these weapons.

With regard to the federal elections Schmidt advocated continuing the coalition with the FDP and questioned the ability of the CDU/CSU to govern, with their Candidate for Chancellor Franz Josef Strauss.

In foreign policy the main points of Schmidt's speech were loyalty to the Federal Republic's firm integration in the Western alliance and the European Community and to friendship with France and the United States. However, the chancellor also spoke of the representation of independent German interests and of further efforts for cooperation with the East. He allotted to the Germans a share in the responsibility for seeing that chances for overcoming international crises are not thrown away but used. "This means that in order to preserve peace we must prove ourselves in peacetime."

Schmidt said that the crises concerning Iran and Afghanistan have shown that the threat to security does not consist primarily in an East-West confrontation in Europe, but at least just as much in East-West conflicts in the Third World. The German contribution to a Western overall strategy to stem threats of conflict in the Third World can only be of a political and economic nature. It is the West's task to strengthen the sovereignty of the nonaligned states.

With reference to his trip to Moscow at the end of June Schmidt said, in reference to Afghanistan, that he and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher will state very clearly to the Soviet leadership that unsolved regional conflicts in the world or ones that are growing could make an increase in the danger for Europe inevitable too. He stressed: "We shall speak plainly, without false politeness." "No one will see us weak-kneed, but equally no one will see us being overbearing and flexing our muscles." Schmidt confirmed that he also intends having a meeting "soon" with SED chief Erich Honecker in the GDR.

CARTER 'MONUMENTAL DEFEAT' AT HANDS OF CONGRESS ASSESSED

DW061220 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 6 Jun 80 p 4

[Commentary Signed A.: "A Hard Blow to Carter"]

[Text] A truly paradoxical political climate prevails in the United States, a climate which gives election campaigner Carter more and more trouble: When we add up the figures from the results of the primaries, these figures back him. He can no longer be deprived of the Democratic nomination for the presidential elections.

Yet other figures, in turn, speak against the incumbent President Carter: Both houses of Congress, the House of Representatives and the Senate, have just inflicted a veritably monumental defeat on the head of government by voting into oblivion Carter's bid to legalize a gasoline price increase of 10 cents per gallon for imported crude oil. The rejection of this Carter project was so unanimous that the President did not even have the option of rendering this parliamentary revolt ineffective in practice by means of the veto vested in him under the Constitution. It is true that in both houses more than 2/3 of the congressmen are against Carter's plan to shock the consumers and to collect between $10 and $12 billion to boot. What wields particular weight is that not only the opposition Republicans, but also the majority of the Democrats voted against their own President. This spells the failure of another attempt to enforce drastic measures for cutting back energy consumption. It has happened again that Congress has refused to be convinced by Carter's arguments--but also that the President does not even have his own fellow party members on Capitol Hill under control.

Such defeats at this time are particularly detrimental to the prestige of a presidential candidate; wanting to hike gasoline price so drastically for Americans who are really dependent on their automobiles testifies much more to audacity than it does to political perspective.

COMMENTATOR LAUDS FRENCH DECISION TO DEVELOP NEUTRON WEAPON

DW091042 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 9 Jun 80 p 8

[Article signed Me: "A Necessary Weapon"]

[Text] Nothing has changed in 3 years regarding the arguments for the neutron weapon as an indispensable antitank device. But the hysterical outcry of 1977 against this combat weapon, whose fatal radiation field is limited to just a few hundred meters, will probably not be repeated when the French side develops it. The insight seems to have grown that without this weapon the concept of flexible response to an attack against NATO territory will not be credible. The French president, who is being criticized at present for not liking an extension of the European Community, has achieved great merits with his decision to develop the neutron weapon. But he cannot make up for the time lost: His decision will change nothing about the extremely unfavorable situation of the North Atlantic Alliance in the next 3 to 4 years. The agitators of 1977 have helped the Soviet leadership score a double success: It can count on a long period when military technical ability as well as psychological will will be lacking in the West with regard to effective defense. There will be a critical period of time until both assumptions have been disproved.

EXPERT VIEWS ADVISABILITY OF TRADE EMBARGO AGAINST USSR

DW061018 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 6 Jun 80 p 13

[Werner Obst commentary: "The Soft Spot of the Soviet Union"]

[Text] Great differences of opinion exist on the usefulness of taking sanctions against the Soviet Union. The author of the following article voices an unambiguous opinion. He worked for many years in the "Bureau of the GDR Council of Ministers" before fleeing to West Germany and is considered a respected expert on the Soviet economy--the editorial board.

It is a fact that today the Soviet Union is lagging considerably further behind the technical-economic standard of the leading Western industrial nations than it did 10 years ago, although it has obtained a considerable amount of Western technology, know-how and credit assistance. Seen in this way the cool approach of West European statesmen would be understandable if normal trade with the Soviet Union were to be continued in an unhindered way--because due to the beginning of greater NATO efforts, Moscow also in the future will not be able to escape the military stalemate.

If the Kremlin leaders assess the situation in a similar way, the Soviet Union would basically have just two options: either betting in the near future even more on the military card, or trying to win new ideological, economic and thus foreign policy room for maneuvering by making substantial reforms together with liberalization while at the same time preserving the one-party system. But a lot of dogmatic Marxist ballast would have to be thrown overboard.

In view of this world situation the arguments used in this country against a Western embargo are not only petty, as usual, but the West handles possible trade sanctions vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, as a potential instrument of Western policy, in an extremely dilettantish way.

Supplies by OECD countries to the Soviet Union in 1979:

	Billion DM		Export Percentages
1.	Federal Republic	6.6	2.1
2.	United States	6.6	2.0
3.	Japan	4.5	2.4
4.	France	3.7	2.1
5.	Italy	2.2	1.7
6.	Great Britain	1.6	1.0
7.	Canada	1.2	1.2

If there is no success in introducing an embargo as part of an overall strategy and as an immediate or abrupt decision, but as the subject of negotiations, the West would be stabilizing the present regime unnecessarily. This would weaken the pressure to introduce reforms and keep the East-West conflict going instead of reducing it. However, it is also true that trade with the Soviets in the future will not threaten the existence of the West--but this policy, as before, would be destructive. In pursuing this course we would again nourish the earlier illusion of being able to intensify detente by "closer economic ties" with the East because communism would then lose more of its revolutionary spirit than vice versa. Facts at any rate, such as Afghanistan and the Soviet "increased armament" ["ueberruestung"], demonstrate how illogical and inconsequential this hope is.

Naturally one cannot expect our large industries to think in such categories, but Helmut Schmidt is quite accustomed to such things. One might expect that Franz Josef Strauss would succeed in unmasking the schizophrenia of this Ostpolitik before the voters, namely, increasing armament even more and yet continuing to supply the Russians. Strauss might be expected to convince the voters that an embargo against the Soviet Union does not involve war or peace at all, but a rational, successful policy vis-a-vis the East in the interest of peace and German security because a far-reaching embargo will undoubtedly decrease the military chances of the Soviet Union in the long run.

The terrain for this line of argument is inexhaustible; the Union parties have just not used it so far, which accounts for their inability to score gains since the Afghanistan crisis. The SPD and the government have both oversubscribed to the Soviet danger--but only the SPD has used fear in its dealings. The fact that Bonn particularly wants to intensify scientific-technical cooperation now with the Soviet Union, shortly before President Carter at the summit conference on 22 and 23 June in Venice hopes to win over the Europeans conclusively for joining an embargo against the Soviet Union, shows the following: After the Olympic and Iranian boycotts together with NATO's decision to close the arms gap, where Bonn acted more unambiguously in a pro-American way than all the others, it now acts most dubiously with regard to the embargo issue.

If one considers how rigorously the Olympic participants were handled, the conclusion is obvious that the chancellor wants to leave unscathed the main pillar of German detente policy, namely, trade with the East, because otherwise the whole structure of Social Democratic foreign policy would have to collapse. Has Helmut Schmidt, through hard reactions in less important areas, tried to create an alibi for himself to cover up his yielding on a basic problem? It ought to be clear to national economist Helmut Schmidt that this time not some independent German action is involved, as at the time Adenauer implemented the pipeline embargo for the sake of the Americans, but a joint, coordinated action by the big Western industrial nations.

In 1979 the Soviet Union purchased goods from OECD countries totalling DM37.4 billion, which was 35.2 percent of its overall imports amounting to DM106.2 billion. Every individual Western nation, however, participated to an extremely small extent in Russian imports.

The European Community, the United States, Japan and Canada, with DM28 billion covered 3/4 of all supplies to the Soviet Union. Should the European Community cooperate, an embargo of other countries could be dodged as not carrying any weight. The enormous Western supply volume could thus be used as a negotiating means--and this is the issue at the moment--in order to demonstrate to Moscow the determination of the West to neutralize Afghanistan.

In doing this the West would actually risk little because we can replace Russian supplies at any time. Granted, we obtain 16 percent of our natural gas imports from the Soviet Union and 40 percent of the enriched uranium, which suggests dependence; but, in fact, we would get natural gas and uranium everywhere in the world for the same price. In fact, the Federal Republic years ago decided to sign such contracts with the Soviet Union to support Ostpolitik economically because, otherwise, the Soviet Union would not have been able to finance its enormous needs for supplies. So it was a political decision; economically, we were not and are not dependent on Soviet supplies.

AUSTRALIA'S PEACOCK IN PARIS; TECHNICAL MISSION TO VISIT

OW061328 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 1130 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] An Australian technical mission will visit France next week to look into the possibility of Australia exporting uranium to France. The foreign minister, Mr Peacock, said meanwhile negotiations will continue on what safeguard arrangements would be adequate to allow France to buy Australian uranium.

Speaking in Paris after talks with France's President Giscard d'Estaing and his French counterpart, Mr Francois-Poncet, Mr Peacock said commerical interests would not be put before safeguard requirements. He also said the French president had assured him that France does not want to drive Australia out of its existing sheep markets. Mr Peacock has told French officials that Australia was concerned that the European Common Market might subsidize the export of sheep meat to countries where Australia had established markets.

LE MONDE VIEWS RESULTS OF GISCARD VISIT TO FINLAND

LD061537 Paris LE MONDE in French 5-6 Jun 80 p 10

[Noel-Jean Bergeroux report: "Giscard d'Estaing Ends Visit to Finland"]

[Text] Helsinki--No communique was issued at the end of Giscard d'Estaing's visit to Finland. And in official reports on the bilateral talks nuclear cooperation appears only in the list of "positive prospects."

Only after the French delegation and journalists had left Helsinki was it announced that a specific result--thought no necessarily giving hopes for the near future--was achieved, namely an agreement for France to carry out a feasibility study for a 1,000-megawatt Finnish nuclear powerplant. The preparatory study will be carried out by Sotratome (a company aided by the French electricity company and the Atomic Energy Commission.)

Such studies are carried out a long time prior to building a powerplant. Nevertheless, such a decision is particularly significant here. Finland produces its nuclear energy from two kinds of powerplants: the Russian 440-megawatt plants (one already working and another about to enter service) and two Swedish 650-megawatt plants which should start working at the end of this year.

These two sources can be explained on the one hand by the special relations linking Finland and the USSR and, on the other hand, by the fact that Sweden is a neutral country. If France, a member of the Atlantic Alliance, were now to participate in Finland's nuclear equipping, if the plan announced Tuesday evening is realised, it would be an important political factor. The discretion surrounding negotiations on this topic also demonstrates the two sides' desire to avoid giving the plan too much publicity and above all to prevent the matter from gaining a diplomatic dimension too quickly.

The other areas of cooperation examined are more regular. Both countries have undertaken to step up teaching of each other's language. In France this will take place at the university level through the creation of a post of assistant professor at Paris-III University and the creation of an extra post of lecturer at the oriental languages school. A plan for a Franco-Finnish foundation will be examined.

In the economic and industrial field, the areas in which priority efforts will be made are the timber industry, of course, telecommunications and machinery. Negotiations will be started on installing a paper factory in France.

Further exchanges are envisaged particularly in the fields of urbanization, the use of timber in construction, insulation techniques, the struggle against marine pollution, and so forth. Exchanges will also be intensified in the organization of forest exploitation, specialist training and agricultural research. French Agriculture Minister Pierre Mehaignerie expressed the hope that French fruit and vegetables sales will increase in Finland during the seasons when they do not compete with local produce.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing commented as follows on his talks during the three half-days: "We found a climate of openness and democracy in which French leaders feel at ease."

DEFENSE MINISTER CALLS NEUTRON BOMB DECISION 'POLITICAL'

LD082004 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 8 Jun 80

[Text]--The French Minister of Defense Yvon Bourges talked about the neutron bomb today at the 49th congress of reserve officers.

He said that France's decision to equip itself with this device is a political one which falls within the responsibility of the president of the republic and the government. But for France, he added, the neutron bomb would be a deterrent nuclear weapon which would form part of the first warning strike--while the strategic weapons are designed to hit an opponent who had attacked France proper. Our military specialist Pierre Martillon comments:

[Begin recording] The minister of defense has just given his answer to the polemical discussion that has been in progress for the past few weeks on the neutron bomb. Its advocates want this weapon, which must be used without delay on any enemy breakthrough, to be given to the military, that is to say, the key required to use it should be given to corps commanders. The neutron bomb would in that case become a superartillery shell which corresponds to the American doctrine on the use of tactical nuclear weapons.

Orthodox Gaullists are against the neutron bomb for this reason, General de Gaulle having always refused to entrust the military with the decision to use even tactical nuclear weapons.

The minister of defense has just removed this obstacle by stating that if France were to equip itself with a neutron bomb, it would be used as the Pluton [French missile] is being used at present, that is to say, not as a superartillery shell but as the first stage of deterrence, a sort of warning shot fired before launching strategic weapons.

For Jacques Chaban-Delmas, there is one objective: There should not be the slightest infringement of the essential principle on which our strategic defence is based: nuclear deterrence. [end recording]

ISRAELI FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES ON OFFICIAL VISIT

Shamir: EC Mideast Statement Possible

TA051617 Jerusalem Domestic Service in Hebrew 1600 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir said he did not rule out the possibility that a statement of principle on the Middle East issue would be published at the EC conference in Venice, in spite of U.S. and Egyptian objections. The U.S. and Egyptian positions regarding an independent European initiative does not differ from Israel's position.

Minister Shamir was speaking to our correspondent Eliyahu Zehavi on his arrival in Copenhagen.

Talks With Foreign, Prime Ministers

TA061414 Jerusalem Domestic Service in Hebrew 1400 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] Denmark today reiterated its continued commitment to Israel's security. In a talk with Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir in Copenhagen, Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs Kjeld Olesen said that various clauses in the PLO charter forestall any chances that Denmark would recognize that organization. At this stage, Denmark does not favor an amendment of Resolution 242. According to Olesen such an amendment would be possible if all the relevant parties mentioned in that resolution agreed to it.

Our correspondent Eliyahu Zehavi reports that, after the meeting with the minister of foreign affairs, Minister Shamir conferred in camera with Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen.

ENERGY MINISTER ON INTENTIONS FOR OIL PURCHASES FROM IRAQ

LD091041 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 5 Jun 80 pt 1 p 5

[JB. report: "Negotiations for Large Oil Purchases From Iraq"]

[Text] The state intends to make oil purchases from Iraq on the same scale as those from Saudi Arabia. The state oil company, Danish Oil and Natural Gas Inc [DONG A/S], has already begun negotiations and Iraq's oil minister has received an invitation for an official visit to Denmark.

This information is contained in a note from the energy minister to the Folketing Energy Committee on his discussions in Iraq at the end of may with Iraqi Minister Tayih 'Abd al-Karim.

During these discussions the energy minister expressed Danish interest in negotiations between DONG A/S and the Iraqi state oil company, SOMO, on oil supplies starting at the beginning of 1981. The Danish negotiators plan imports of up to 20,000 tons of oil a day. This is about 1 million tons of oil a year, the same quantity as in the contract with Saudi Arabia.

Poul Nielson informs the energy committee that Iraq sells about 80 percent of its oil to state companies and that the country is one of the moderates on prices. The Iraqi view is that the price of oil "should be fixed with respect to trends in prices of the oil-exporting countries' imports and the trends in exchange rates." Discussions in Iraq showed agreement between Denmark and Iraq that negotiations should also include questions of cooperation in the energy field and that contacts between the two countries should continue "partly at a social level and partly at civil servant and ministerial level."

CARTER THREAT AGAINST EC MIDEAST INITIATIVE 'OVERREACTION'

LD090955 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 4 Jun 80 pt 1 p 8

[Editorial: "The Threat of a Veto"]

[Text] Strong words between friends, when President Carter says that he will use his veto in the UN Security Council against European attempts to pick away at the foundation of the Middle East peace negotiations. I cannot control the Europeans, he said in a television interview on Sunday, they have their own views; but I would not hesitate to use my veto to stop them undermining the Camp David process.

It is a completely unthinkable situation and President Carter had no need to take such a formidable stand on it. However, the distance between Europe and America is still not so great that the United States should need to defend the peace process against European initiatives with its veto.

It is possible that Carter feels provoked by the French foreign minister who was in Washington on Friday. In a number of statements he gave a most pessimistic evaluation of the remaining possibilities of the Camp David agreement now that the deadline for an Egyptian-Israeli agreement on Arab autonomy in the occupied areas has passed. But even in a French accent European intentions could hardly be misunderstood by Washington. The governments of the European Community have no desire at all to obstruct the continuation of the Camp David negotiations, and if a successful attempt is made to get them going again in the next week or two, as President Carter expects, no one who wants to take action could impede them. Quite the reverse. If the United States does not succeed in getting the negotiations resumed during the early part of the summer there could be a need for an initiative from outside as a supplement to American efforts. What worries the European governments is the possibility that the peace process will come to a complete standstill while America in the coming months will be engrossed in its election campaign and circumscribed in its freedom of movement in foreign affairs as a result.

One of the ways out being discussed is to get the Security Council, whose Resolution 242 is the basis for all negotiations, to give impetus to a new round of talks. Just as the old resolution was added to after the 1973 war, a breakdown in the Camp David negotiations could result in the addition of a new and more balanced definition of the objectives of the negotiations. The original resolution only spoke of the Palestinians as a refugee problem, and much has happened since then. President Carter talks of their right to a homeland while the Europeans talk of their right to self-determination, a phrase ascribed to the French president, but one also used in the communique from the Scandinavian foreign ministers' meeting. It is possible to envisage a resolution in which the Palestinians right to self-determination is confirmed alongside Israel's right to safe and recognized borders, in the hope that this would be able to help not only the resumption of the peace process but also its acceptance by more Arab countries.

It is one of the possibilities that will be discussed by the leaders of European governments at the EEC summit in Venice at the end of the month. The American threat of a veto will of course have an effect on their deliberations, for the European Community can have no desire for a confrontation with the United States on Middle East policy. It probably will need a shock of some kind to get the stalled negotiations moving again, but it is undeniable that it is not the United States that is in need of the shock.

KEKKONEN ON MADRID, SUPERPOWER CONFLICTS, FRENCH TIES

LD051231 Paris LE MONDE in French 31 May 80 pp 7, 16

[Amber Boumglou interview with President Urho Kekkonen at Tarminiemi on 19 May: "It Was Necessary To Go to Warsaw"]

[Text] [Question] What are the repercussions of the invasion of Afghanistan on detente and the Helsinki agreements?

[Answer] Events in Afghanistan and the cooling of relations between the great powers--which I regret--are undoubtedly having already favorable [as published; presumably misprint for "unfavorable"] effects on detente. The current international crisis has clearly increased distrust, awakened old fears and aroused new worries. It has therefore hampered international cooperation as a whole.

These events ought not to have any direct effect on the CSCE Final Act. The Final Act is a remarkable and lasting political achievement in Europe jointly approved by all participant states. That is why I still attach the same importance to each section of the Final Act as I did in 1975.

I am thinking of the two statesmen who met in Warsaw. Even if the chance of succeeding was very flight, it had to be seized. They have such a sense of responsibility and are able to assess the situation so well that they did not ignore even this small chance for contact. I hope that their meeting will be able to have a positive and favorable influence. This will be possible if statesmen use this chance in an unbiased way to improve the situation. The conflicts between the great powers have been such that it will take a great many ideas to quickly produce positive results. Similarly, while the recent scientific conference in Hamburg produced hardly any specific results, I think the opportunity of the coming Madrid meeting should be used to bring European people together. Even if the results in the Spanish capital are modest, like those achieved in Hamburg, we must try to achieve something specific. We must even begin to think about the organization of the following meeting--the one which will be held after Madrid.

Avoiding a Conflict

[Question] Is there not a danger of a major conflict between the United States and the USSR in the light of events in Iran?

[Answer] This danger cannot be completely ruled out in view of the extreme gravity of the current international situation. On this point, however, I remain confident that the two superpowers are aware of the dangers which such a situation involves, that they accept their responsibilities and are aware of the consequences which an open conflict between the superpowers would have in present circumstances. While I recognize the extremely serious nature of the Iranian situation, I hope I am right when I say that the probability of a conflict between the superpowers is still, nonetheless, relatively small.

LAST LINE

[Question] Is it possible both to maintain East-West detente and guarantee the exercise of human rights everywhere?

[Answer] In principle I see no contradiction between detente and the exercise of human rights. The rules governing the detente process, so to speak, are spelled out in the Helsinki Final Act. Respect for human rights therefore constitutes one of the principles governing relations among states. Even though the application and interpretation of the Final Act lend themselves to differing views, which clearly stem from differences in political regime, the Final Act as a whole is still recognized by the participant states as a basis for common action.

A Sense of Realities

[Question] You have been watching over your country's destiny for some 25 years: What qualities do you think the man who must necessarily continue your work one day should have?

[Answer] A large dose of common sense, political experience and a sense of realities in foreign policy affairs.

[Question] After passing through the wilderness, the Social Democrats have returned fully to public life. They have even been leading the coalition government for several years. Is there a chance of seeing the conservatives enter government one day?

[Answer] In principle I can see no obstacle to that. In Finland, however, the conservatives' participation in government--and the same is true for all the other parties--depends primarily on which parties are, at a given moment, prepared to cooperate on the governmental plane. As you know, our multiparty system enables a majority government to be formed only in the framework of a coalition. Experience shows that it is precisely the majority government which is the most appropriate tool to direct public affairs in Finland.

[Question] What are the reasons for the internal political crisis which is emerging?

[Answer] It is more a crisis due to economic problems. The members of parliament cannot see very clearly how to solve these problems in the given situation; there is no model which could serve their purpose. For 10 years development has been fairly calm. In recent years we have been able to strengthen economic structures and the constructive forces of our economy. However, quite suddenly a short time ago there were strikes. Therefore we must look at how this situation can be overcome, examine the problems which remain in some spheres and consider how the economy should be run in this transitional period.

Common Interests

[Question] And yet, with the power struggle within the Center Party and the Social Democrats' avowed desire for a spell in opposition, there does seem to be a real political crisis. There is even talk of the possibility of a minority government. You, however, have always advocated the broadest possible government coalition.

[Answer] It is true that I have tried to maintain such a foundation. However, it did not consist in a bourgeois or leftwing majority. The majority coalition government was aimed at avoiding conflict between the various parties or even within each party. Recently, however, I have found that there can be difficulties in governing even with a majority foundation. There are examples quite close to us of minority governments which manage to solve problems which arise. That even happened at one time in Britain--the mother of the parliamentary system.

[Question] Relations between Finland and France are free of any clouds. Nonetheless, what do you expect from President Giscard d'Estaing's visit?

[Answer] I would simply like to day and point out how positive relations between Finland and France are and how grateful we are to the president of the republic for visiting our country, to try to gain a personal knowledge of the factors behind our policy which our two countries share. I hope that President Giscard d'Estaing's visit will give him and the French leaders and journalists accompanying him as varied a picture as possible of Finnish realities--of this small country which, I think, seems far away to the French people. I also hope that this trip will give them a clear idea of Finland's position in Europe.

I am looking forward with great interest to my talks with the president of the French Republic, for whom I have great respect because of his personal qualities, his experience and his leading position in international politics. I think that Finland and France have many common interests to defend as European countries. The important thing is that, through this visit, the Finnish people should learn to understand France and the political, economic and cultural importance of this great European nation in the world today.

PRC VICE PREMIER STRESSES OIL COOPERATION AT NEWS CONFERENCE

LD090839 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 4 Jun 80 p 31

[Unattributed report: "Oil Cooperation Important Between Norway and China"]

[Text] There are good prospects for developing cooperation between Norway and China in the fields of industry, science, technology and joint trade, Vice Premier Kang Shien said at a press conference in Oslo on Tuesday. Kang Shien thought that cooperation in the oil sector and in the expansion of hydroelectric power is of special interest.

China is in the process of discussing a 10-year plan from 1981 to 1990. Kang Shien expects that the plan will be completed next year. Energy questions will have a very important place in the plan. China is examining the possibility of finding oil along the coast. Kang Shien stressed that China expects that it will need a large amount of equipment such as drilling rigs, supply ships and shore bases. Joint production has been discussed with a number of Norwegian industrial concerns. China is interested in several different sorts of cooperation agreements. The vice premier is extremely satisfied with the cooperation agreement that has been signed with the Aker group. He finds the group's H-3 rigs extremely interesting. At present it is not possible to say how many rigs will be produced in China, but it could probably amount to about 10, Kang Shien said.

The vice premier had an audience with King Olav. He also called on Prime Minister Odvar Nordli, Oil and Energy Minister Bjartmar Gjerde, Industry Minister Lars Skytoen and Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund. He also met Storting President Guttom Hansen. Kang Shien said that his talks with Norwegian leaders have made a contribution to mutual understanding and that he is extremely satisfied with the exchange of views.

YUGOSLAVIA'S KURTOVIC TALKS WITH NORDLI, FRYDENLUND

LD052256 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1826 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] Oslo, June 5, TANJUG--Yugoslav Socialist Alliance Federal Conference President Todo Kurtovic today had separate talks with Norwegian Premier Odvar Nordli and Norwegian Foreign Minister Frydenlund.

During the meetings, views were exchanged on bilateral relations and the international political and economic situation. On both occasions, the hosts expressed their condolences on the death of Yugoslav President Tito and termed his death a loss not only for Yugoslavia but for the entire world. They stressed that Yugoslavia had under the leadership of President Tito acquired great respect in friendly Norway. Both sides agreed that all countries, and not only the big powers, must invest maximum efforts for overcoming the present aggravated international situation. Knut Frydenland stressed that a constructive dialogue must be established at the European conference Madrid session and all confrontations between the big powers avoided. Both sides agreed that the relations between the two countries are traditionally good.

In a meeting with trade unions President Tor Halvordsen, the guests were informed about the activities of the Norwegian trade union organizations and new ideas on promoting co-determination in enterprises. The trade unions leaders said they are studying Yugoslav self-management and particularly stressed the value of the theoretic thought of Yugoslav statesman and theoretician Edvard Kardelj.

OPINION POLL SHOWS INCREASED SUPPORT FOR NATO MEMBERSHIP

LD090959 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 Jun 80 p 5

[Unattributed report: "More Norwegians Say Yes to NATO; Soviet Union Creates Fear"]

[Text] According to an opinion poll the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan has led to greater support for Norwegian membership in NATO than ever. The market research which was carried out by Markedsdata A/S for "People and Defense" ["Folk og Forsvar"] took place in January and February. The results of the poll had not been published before now.

For supporters of continued NATO membership the growing support among the younger generation must be especially pleasing. Compared with the poll carried out in 1979 at the same time as discussions of the modernization of nuclear weapons in Europe were taking place, the most recent poll shows a dramatic increase in the level of support for continued NATO membership among the women interviewed.

Results broken down by political party show that Labor Party voters have especially shown the biggest change on this question. Since polls began the party's sympathisers have given their support to Norwegian NATO membership in ever greater numbers.

Of the total 1,519 people interviewed, 66 percent answered that NATO membership contributes to national security. This represents an increase of 4 percent over the poll in November last year. Seven percent thought that membership increased the risk of war, a figure that was 3 percent greater last time. There continues to be a relatively large percentage who reply "don't know," or that membership is not important in this respect. Together, the two categories total 27 percent.

There continue to be more men than women who think that NATO membership ensures national security. The reason for this is not that opposition to NATO is greater among women but many more women answer "don't know," in the recent poll almost 25 percent.

Since the Afghanistan crisis the effects of age on attitudes to membership seem to have evened out somewhat. Of those interviewed in the 15-29 age group, 63 percent replied that NATO ensures our security as against 55 percent in the 1979 poll.

Within the 30-59 age group, 70 percent of those interviewed thought that membership ensures national security. Only 6 percent held the opposite view.

EGYPT'S KHALIL COMMENTS ON AUTONOMY, EUROPEAN INITIATIVE

NC062254 Cairo MENA in Arabic 2150 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] London, 6 June--Deputy leader of the Egyptian National Democratic Party, Dr Mustafa Khalil, said at a press conference held at the Egyptian Embassy here this evening that he was in constant contact with the PLO through mediators during the negotiations on autonomy in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. He said the PLO was informed of the developments concerning these negotiations. He also said that messages which these mediators carried to the organization urged the PLO to issue a statement saying it will accept Israel's existence on condition that Israel accepts the right of self-determination for the Palestinians.

Khalil said that had the PLO issued such a statement, this would have helped end the acts of armed violence. But unfortunately, he said, the PLO is not the one which is suffering from Israeli military rule; those who are suffering are the people of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. He further noted that their suffering does not help nor serve the organization's position, while Israel uses the activities of the Palestinians as evidence against the Palestinians themselves. Dr Mustafa Khalil appealed to the PLO to realize the essence of the matter and act in a responsible political manner.

Speaking about the developments of the present situation and the reasons which led to the suspension of the negotiations between Egypt and Israel, Dr Mustafa Khalil said that the reason for suspending these negotiations was the draft resolution which was presented to the Israeli Knesset on Jerusalem. This resolution threatened to create a new reality that would have made it difficult to work for achieving the aim of these negotiations.

He affirmed that the best way is to continue these negotiations without preconditions and without the creation of a new reality that contradicts the aim of the peacemaking process in the area. The final aim is to achieve comprehensive peace. He said that from his experience in the negotiations he can say that of Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin's idea about the autonomy is different from Egypt's idea. There is a big gap between the two positions. Begin wants autonomy without executive or legislative authority and in the form of municipal councils, while Egypt wants the citizens to have executive, administrative and legislative rights.

Dr Mustafa Khalil also explained the issue of security which Israel has raised. He affirmed that the gap existing between Egypt and Israel now is Menahem Begin's responsibility but this gap will not affect the process of normalization of relations between the two countries. Egypt respects its commitments regarding the normalization process out of its belief that peace between Egypt and Israel will help achieve comprehensive peace in the area.

Speaking about his talks with British Foreign Secretary Carrington, Dr Mustafa Khalil said that their purpose was to understand what the EEC intends to do and what the purpose of the European initiative is and what contribution it can make. He added: Carrington gave me a general idea about the British position, and I am satisfied with what he said in this regard. He affirmed the need to carefully study the timing of any decision by the European group. He said that any decision must include the method and means for its implementation.

He said: I also briefed the British foreign secretary on the developments of the situation with regard to the negotiations and the existing (?obstacles) and Egypt's attitude toward these developments.

Asked about the resumption of the dialogue between the European states and the Arab League member states, he said that any dialogue that does not include Egypt will not lead to any results. We have already expressed our opinion in this regard, he said.

Asked about the possibility of rapprochement between Egypt and Saudi Arabia and the resumption of the relations between them, he said that Egypt welcomes the improvement of relations with Saudi Arabia and all Arab states. Egypt did not start the present division of the severance of relations with any Arab state. It always welcomes the resumption of these relations.

He then referred to President as-Sadat's recent decision to stop the information campaigns against the Arab states.

Dr Mustafa Khalil will leave London Sunday for Paris where a date will be fixed for his meeting in Vienna with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky.

Further Details

NC062112 Cairo MENA in Arabic 2018 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] London, 6 June--Deputy leader of the Egyptian National Democratic Party Dr Mustafa Khalil, has affirmed that what has been happening in the occupied Arab territories in the past month confirms that the Palestinians are the ones who need security and not the Israelis alone. He said that this was the reason why the Camp David agreement stated that security is for all the parties and not for Israel alone.

Asked by the BBC about the so-called European initiative, Dr Khalil said in the interview which was broadcast today that Egypt welcomes any kind of initiative that adds something to the achievement of a solution to the Palestinian problem. However, he said that at the same time Egypt would like the Europeans to take a step to contribute toward a settlement, but not by overstepping the Camp David agreements. This is because they are the only commitment which Egypt has secured from Israel.

Asked what would Egypt's reaction be if the European countries negotiated with the PLO on autonomy, he said that he does not think that the Europeans will negotiate with the organization.

Asked whether there is any possible solution to the Palestinian problem without the approval of the PLO, Dr Mustafa Khalil expressed the opinion that this is possible if this solution is just and can be attractive to the Palestinians. He said that the most important Palestinians are those who live under military rule and who are suffering. These are the ones who are concerned with the Palestinian issue.

BANGKOK RADIO REPORTS ON FOREIGN MINISTER SITTHI'S VISIT

BF080814 Bangkok Domestic Service in Thai 1300 GMT 8 Jun 80

[Text] According to a report from London by the Information Office of the Thai Public Relations Department, Foreign Minister Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila arrived in London from Washington D.C. on 5 June at 0900 local time for a 2-day official visit to the United Kingdom as guest of the British secretary of state for foreign affairs. The foreign minister earlier attended the Geneva conference on aid for the Kampuchean refugees and also visited Washington. On the morning of 6 June, the foreign minister met with British Minister of State for Overseas Development Neil Marten, British Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Peter Blaker and secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Lord Carrington at the Foreign Ministry. Foreign Minister Sitthi met British Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Defense Ray Howe and ambassadors of ASEAN countries in London on the afternoon of 6 June.

In an interview with the Thai Information Office's correspondent in London, Air Chief Marshal Sitthi said he was visiting the United Kingdom at the invitation of the British secretary of state for foreign affairs. During his meeting with Lord Carrington and the British minister of state for overseas development, he told them of Thailand's willingness to accept direct assistance from the United Kingdom and other EEC countries for the Indochinese refugees in Thailand, in addition to the assistance given through the United Nations. He believed direct assistance would better benefit the refugees.

He said they also exchanged views on other issues, and he explained to the British officials ASEAN's stand regarding solving the Kampuchean problem. He made the British officials better understand the situation.

Concerning his meeting with the British minister of state for defense, Air Chief Marshal Sitthi said the United Kingdom pledged to assist Thailand in strengthening its defense capability. Assistance will include military training, for example. Air Chief Marshal Sitthi said he invited Lord Carrington to visit Thailand.

Asked about his visit to the United States, the Thai foreign minister said he met U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie and several U.S. congressmen in Washington. He addressed the Council of Foreign Relations in New York, which is a grouping of veteran diplomats, former cabinet ministers, leading economists, bankers and businessmen. The foreign minister said he told the meeting about the problem of the Indochinese refugees, Thailand's burden with regard to the situation in Indochina, and Thailand's relations with other countries in Southeast Asia.

Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila left London for home by a Thai international flight and arrived in Thailand on the morning of 7 June.

BRITISH OLYMPICS ASSOCIATION REJECTS SOVIET AID OFFER

[Roger Heywook report: "Soviet Aid Offer on Games Bill"]

[Text] The British Olympic Association [BOA] has rejected a Russian offer of financial help to send its largest and strongest team to the Moscow Olympics.

The offer was worth well over 200,000 pounds sterling. The Soviet organising committee for the games, determined to attract as many sportsmen as possible to Moscow in July, has made similar offers to other national Olympic committees.

The Russians have told many committees which have defied their governments by deciding to attend the games--often at the risk of great financial loss--that they must not worry about money. The Soviet authorities have offered free flights and free accomodation and food in the Olympic Village.

"Obviously, it was a tempting offer," said a British Olympic Association Committee member. "We need the money to keep the BOA solvent, but if we let the Russians pay all our costs, we would be in their pockets.

"So we had to turn down the Russian offer. You can take it as read that our team will fly out by British Airways. As always and we will pay our own way when we arrive in Moscow--whatever the cost."

The association has officially answered the prime minister's final plea to stop a team going to Moscow. In a letter to Mrs Thatcher, Sir Denis Follows, the chairman, points out that his committee has made its decision and it cannot be changed.

The first meeting was also attended by Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus. After this meeting, Perez de Cuellar met Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas. The president's second meeting with Perez de Cuellar--this meeting lasted 3 hours--was attended by Foreign Minister Rolandhis; Ioannidhis, the Greek Cypriot side's representative to the inter-Cypriot talks; Mr Triandafillidhis and Mrs Souliotis, advisers to the talks; and Gobbi and Gorge. In the meantime, it has been learned that prior to his next meeting with the president of the republic, Perez de Cuellar will have a second meeting with Mr Denktas.

Talks With Denktas

TA061742 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1630 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] President Denktas today received the UN Under Secretary General for Special Political Affairs Perez de Cuellar, who arrived on the island last night for talks with representatives of the two Cypriot communities. In a statement afterwards, Mr Denktas said that the Turkish side had agreed not to put forward any reservations to any part of an opening speech by the UN secretary general and that the intercommunal talks could be resumed if this was also accepted by the Greek Cypriot side.

He stressed the talks could not be resumed so far because the Greek Cypriots wanted to reserve the right to object to any part of Mr Waldheim's opening speech. In reply to a question, the president said he thought there was no disagreement between the two sides on a bizonal settlement but the Greek Cypriots wanted to know what bizonality meant for the Turkish Cypriot community. This, Mr Denktas added, has already been explained to the Greek Cypriots but we shall again explain it to them if necessary. In reply to another question, he said that Mr Perez de Cuellar had not brought any proposals.

Mr Perez de Cuellar said after the meeting that he had had a very interesting discussion with Mr Denktas. He stressed that he could not say he was optimistic about the situation but with the help of the UN special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, he would try to obtain some results before his departure. In reply to a question, he said he may pay a visit to Ankara and Athens before the Security Council meeting on Cyprus, but first he had to consult New York and the governments concerned.

President Denktas had another meeting with Mr Perez de Cuellar this afternoon. In a statement after the meeting, which lasted about an hour, the president said that Mr Perez de Cuellar had been conveying the views of one party to the other. Mr Perez de Cuellar would be seeing him again tomorrow after the UN envoy had a second meeting with Mr Kiprianou and his advisers this afternoon. Mr Perez de Cuellar had his first meeting with the Greek Cypriot leader at noon today. The two meetings between President Denktas and Mr Perez de Cuellar were also attended by the foreign and defense minister, Mr Atakol; the Turkish Cypriot negotiator at the intercommunal talks, Mr Onan; his advisor, Mr Ertekun; the UN special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi; and his deputy, Mr Gorge. Mr Perez de Cuellar also called on Turkish Ambassador Mr Batu this afternoon.

[Report by Correspondent Dhimitris Andreou]

[Excerpt] After his third meeting [with President Kiprianou] Mr Perez de Cuellar stated that he will continue his shuttle. He added: We must go from one side to the other before we can achieve any results. We are continuing the consultations. We asked Mr Perez de Cuellar: Have you not achieved any results thus far? Mr Perez de Cuellar answered: Thus far we have been having only consultations. If there is any result we will tell you. Answering another question, the UN official said he hopes to have another meeting with Mr Denktas tomorrow. He added. The president of the republic will receive me tomorrow as well. Mr Perez de Cuellar extolled the spirit of cooperation being displayed by President Kiprianou during the consultations.

[Begin recording] [Kiprianou] We shall continue the consultations tomorrow; they have not been concluded. It is inadvisable that I should make any statement prior to the conclusion of the consultations, even though others may make statements.

[Question] Are the consultations taking place on the basis of a concrete document or are views being exchanged?

[Kiprianou] They are an exchange of views; various things were discussed with the goal to ascertain whether the resumption of talks is possible. [end recording]

NC070742 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 7 Jun 80 p 8

[Excerpt] The National and Ministerial Councils met yesterday [at 2230] in a joint session under the Chairmanship of President Kiprianou. The chairman of the Democratic Rally Party, Mr Kiridhis, although invited, did not attend the joint session which lasted about 2 hours. The Democratic Party was represented by the parliamentary representative, Mr Ambizas, due to the absence of Vice President Mikhailidhis. Also present at the session were: Papaioannou, AKEL secretary general; Lissaridhis, EDEK president; Ioannidhis, interlocutor; and Triandafillidhis and Souliotis, advisers.

President Kiprianou briefed the National and Ministerial Councils on his three meetings with UN Under Secretary General Perez de Cuellar, the aim of these meetings being the introduction of a formula to resume the talks. The joint session discussed the Turkish side's remarks on the formula, which was carried by Mr Perez de Cuellar to the President.

[Text] Authoritative reports say that during the 6 June joint National-Ministerial Councils session, EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis strongly disagreed with Mr Perez de Cuellar's ideas on the resumption of the talks. As a result the ensuing decision was not unanimous.

Mr Lissaridhis presided over an EDEK meeting at 1000 yesterday. The day before yesterday there was information that the party would issue a statement to make its disagreement known publicly. But as of last night no statement was issued.

Kiprianou on Failure to Agree

NC071128 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 7 Jun 80

[Text] Perez de Cuellar, UN under secretary general for special political affairs, has announced that the Greek Cypriot side has accepted UN Secretary General Waldheim's proposals for resuming the inter-Cypriot talks but that the Turkish Cypriot side has not accepted them. Perez de Cuellar also said that his consultations have been completed and that the day after tomorrow, Monday, he will leave for Ankara via Rome and will then visit Athens. He also said that he would submit a report to the UN secretary general on the outcome of his consultations. Perez de Cuellar made this statement after his fifth meeting with President Kiprianou.

The president of the republic then made the following statement:

I am really very sorry because the efforts of the UN under secretary general--who came as an envoy of the secretary general in order to succeed in resuming the intercommunal talks--have failed. We had excellent cooperation with Perez de Cuellar and his collaborators all of yesterday in a sincere effort to find a way to resume the talks. Various ideas were submitted by Mr Perez de Cuellar and they were accepted by our side.

The president continued: Today, as we were preparing to announce the resumption of the inter-Cypriot talks, we had a new meeting with Mr Perez de Cuellar at which he informed us that Mr Denktas had finally rejected these ideas.

In my opinion, the president said, Mr Denktas does not want to negotiate. He is ridiculing everyone while his latest statement that has just been released constitutes an insult to the United Nations. I have no doubt whatsoever that yesterday Mr Denktas, to say the least, clearly gave the impression that he had accepted the UN secretary general's ideas. Today, he rejected them, and thus this effort has also failed. It is sad. We are unhappy about this result because we sincerely wanted these talks and sincerely worked hard for them. We accepted what the United Nations proposed to us, but nevertheless the outcome is a failure.

I believe, Mr Kiprianou continued, that with this development not much is needed to convince world public opinion about who wants and does not want talks, despite the fact that sometimes they try in vain to put the blame on our side. It is very clear that Mr Denktas and Ankara do not want an intercommunal dialogue.

Mr Kiprianou evaded answering a question on the ideas submitted by Waldheim and on the point in dispute by saying that there must be some sort of understanding with Mr Perez de Cuellar before any statement was made regarding this issue.

In answer as to what the next step would be, Mr Kiprianou said that there was a UN General Assembly resolution pending to introduce a committee to help the secretary general with the issue of the talks and with the implementation of UN resolutions. I believe, he added, that this is one of the next steps to be taken. But, he said, we will study them as a government in the National Council in order to take the correct decisions on the further handling of our problem. The government and I personally, he added, will move in any direction to promote a just solution of the Cyprus issue in accordance with the UN resolutions.

The text of Mr Denktas' statement that President Kiprianou mentioned has not yet been received.

Also present at the Kiprianou-Perez de Cuellar meeting were Foreign Minister Rolandhis; Ioannidhis, the Greek Cypriot side's representative to the talks; Triandafillidhis and Mrs Souliotis, advisers to the talks; Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus; and Gorge, the UN Secretary General's deputy [special] representative.

Prior to his meeting with President Kiprianou, Mr Perez de Cuellar had a new meeting with Turkish Cypriot leader, Mr Denktas.

Denktas After 6 Jun Meeting

TA071206 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 7 Jun 80

[Text] The UN Under Secretary General for Special Political Affairs Mr Perez de Cuellar has been continuing his consultations in Cyprus for the resumption of the intercommunal talks. After two meetings with President Denktas and four meetings with the Greek Cypriot leader, Mr Kiprianou, yesterday, Mr Perez de Cuellar had another meeting with Mr Denktas this morning. The foreign and defense minister, Mr Atakol; the Turkish Cypriot negotiator at the intercommunal talks, Mr Onan; his adviser, Mr Ertekun; and the UN special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, and his deputy, Mr Gorge, were also present at this meeting, which lasted about 45 minutes.

In a statement afterward, President Denktas said that although the Greek Cypriots had earlier rejected the proposals of 4 June they had now adopted a stand pretending they accepted them. Describing the move as a maneuver he said it was still tantamount to a rejection of the proposals and that the Turkish Cypriot side approved of Mr Waldheim's speech provided that no reservations were attached to it. If there was no addition to the opening speech and if the Greek Cypriots agreed to it, then there were prospects for the early resumption of the talks.

In reply to a question, Mr Denktas said: The Greek Cypriot press claims that Mr Waldheim agreed to the Greek Cypriot demand but this is being denied by Mr Perez de Cuellar and his aides.

Mr Perez de Cuellar, also speaking after the meeting, said that the gap had been narrowed a bit, but still there was a lot of work to do. He announced that on Monday he would be leaving the island for visits to Ankara and Athens to continue his consultations.

In reply to a question, he said that there was no such thing as a Waldheim formula and that they were working on some ideas. Mr Perez de Cuellar denied a CBC news report quoting him as saying that he hoped the Turkish Cypriot side would demonstrate the same understanding and good will as shown by the Greek Cypriot side. He said he found understanding on both sides and that they honestly wanted to cooperate with the UN secretary general. Later, Mr Perez de Cuellar called on Turkish Ambassador Mr Batu.

Denktas on Greek Proposal

TA071158 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 7 Jun 80

[Text] President Denktas commented on Greek Cypriot press reports that the Greek Cypriot leadership has accepted Mr Waldheim's formula for a Cyprus settlement. Replying to questions by reporters this morning, the president said that if the Greek Cypriots had accepted anything at all they must have reached this decision after being clever enough to agree to the addition of their reservations to the opening speech to be made by Mr Waldheim when the intercommunal talks are resumed. But he said that this move would not be binding on the Turkish Cypriot side.

Mr Denktas stated that on 30 March this year the Turkish Cypriot side had accepted the contents of Mr Waldheim's opening speech but that the Greek Cypriots had put forward some reservations. In the initial contacts this time the Greek Cypriots had wanted to change the contents of the speech and this was rejected by the Turkish Cypriot side. Mr Denktas added: We were faced with a proposal suggesting that an additional paragraph should be attached to the speech similar to the Greek Cypriot reservations. It was impossible for us to agree to this as we were unable to accept those reservations. If the Greek Cypriots have accepted anything at all, he went on, they must have been clever enough to agree to the addition of their reservations to Mr Waldheim's opening speech.

The president was asked to comment on the Greek Cypriot argument that in this formula neither party would be under any obligation regarding their stand on substantive issues, but on the contrary, views on matters such as bizonality and security would be put forward more freely. In reply Mr Denktas said that there was no doubt that both sides would be free to do so, but the point was that right from the beginning neither side should adopt an attitude aimed at destroying certain principles.

In reply to another question he said that the change proposed by the Greek Cypriot side was a move to commit the United Nations; therefore, it was unacceptable to the Turkish Cypriot side. He stressed that, if no reservations were put forward regarding the opening speech, the resumption of the talks within that framework was possible.

Perez Comments to Press

NC071537 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 7 Jun 80

[From the "Echo of Events" program: Announcer-read newsmen's questions to Perez de Cuellar at end of his 7 June meeting with President Kiprianou, followed by recorded answers in English]

[Text] Answering a question as to how much progress has been made, Mr Perez de Cuellar said:

"Well, I am afraid that I have ended my consultations with no concrete results but, of course, I am in a better position for expressing to the secretary general what is the position of the parties."

Mr Perez de Cuellar was then asked what the position of the parties is and if the Greek Cypriot side has accepted the UN secretary general's ideas. He answered:

"I have been working on the basis of some ideas which were presented to the two sides. I have to say that the Greek Cypriot side accepted these ideas and the Turkish Cypriot side, for reasons which of course I respect, rejected our ideas. Well, as you are Greek Cypriots I must say that I found a very important cooperation from the Greek Cypriot authorities; mainly President Kiprianou was very constructive. At the same time, on the Turkish Cypriot side I found understanding. Of course, as I told you, I respect their position. The United Nations is not here for imposing formulas but we are for checking formulas with the parties."

The following question was then put to Mr Perez de Cuellar: Did the Turkish Cypriot side reject this formula yesterday or today? Do you have the same impression as yesterday? He replied:

"Well, yesterday I had the impression that they had accepted the [Waldheim] idea but my impression proved to be wrong when I met this morning Mr Denktas and his team. But, (Yes I should repeat), you know I have the greatest respect for the position of the Turkish Cypriot side and this is, as I tell you, the end of my round of consultations."

Mr Perez de Cuellar was then asked the following question: Could we clarify the situation concerning the so-called UN formula? What thing are we discussing? Where are the disagreements? We understand there is an opening statement to be made by the secretary general; can you clarify just this for us? He answered:

"Well, I think that, in order not to lose the usefulness of these ideas, I prefer not to dispel [as heard] it to you at this stage."

To a correspondent's remark that this concerns the opening statement and its formulation, Mr Perez de Cuellar said:

"Well, as you know, we are playing more or less with the same ideas that I very much prefer not to go into details because these ideas can be used again."

Answering other questions, Mr Perez de Cuellar stated that he will have contacts with the Turkish Cypriot authorities during a dinner tonight and added that he does not see ground to continue his consultations until he returns to New York and briefs the UN secretary general.

In conclusion, Mr Perez de Cuellar said that from his visits to Ankara and Athens he always expects the same thing: the opening of the road to the resumption of meaningful talks.

Denktas Remarks at Perez Dinner

TA081155 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 8 Jun 80

[Excerpt] President Denktas said that he had the opportunity to hold a very sincere meeting with the UN Under Secretary General for Special Political Affairs Mr Perez de Cuellar at a dinner he gave in honor of Perez de Cuellar last night.

Denktas said: I am happy about these contacts. A phase has now ended. The arrival of honorable Perez de Cuellar was untimely and without a proper basis. The new formula, which does away with the previous formula on which the two sides could have reached an agreement, is strange and unnecessary. As they [presumably UN officials] have also admitted, this new formula, which was submitted with the aim of saving the face of the Greek Cypriots, is useless and meaningless. We hope that efforts to resume the peace talks will soon yield positive results. The Cyprus problem has been continuing because of Greek Cypriot tactics and propaganda. A difficult situation has been created. However, one should not be discouraged. We will continue to be undaunted because we are right. We are safeguarding our rights.

Perez Comments Before Departure

NC091100 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Excerpts] Following his contacts in Nicosia on the question of resumption of the inter-Cypriot talks, UN Under Secretary General for Special Political Affairs Perez de Cuellar left this morning for Ankara via Rome.

Answering questions by newsmen prior to his departure, Mr Perez de Cuellar said that the United Nations will continue efforts for the resumption of the inter-Cypriot talks and that he himself looks at the future with hope. He said: I am going to Ankara and Athens in order to make an appraisal of the situation with the respective governments and I am sure that in the two capitals I shall meet with enough cooperation in order to be able to present a rather more optimistic appraisal of things to the UN secretary general.

Asked if he now feels disappointed, Mr Perez de Cuellar replied that he does not feel happy but he cannot say that he is discouraged. He added: I shall continue my efforts on behalf of the UN secretary general. Referring to the Denktas statement that his visit as UN representative had not been well prepared and this is why it has failed to produce any results, Mr Perez de Cuellar said: If we were to prepare the visit in the way he implied, then we would have remained pinned down in New York. We have the reports from my colleague, Mr Gobbi, we also had all the information which was needed in order to come here and discuss the situation with the two leaders. I do not think, Mr Perez de Cuellar added, that the visit had not been prepared.

Asked why the Cypriot people's hopes have again vanished and what were the obstacles, the UN under secretary general said: I cannot answer. This is a problem with two aspects. I respect the views of your side, but I also respect the other side's views. I have tried to bridge the differences and difficulties. He added: I hope that one day the two sides will realize that mutual understanding is necessary in order to save the country's unity.

O AGON Criticism of Denktas

NC080920 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 8 Jun 80 p 2

[From "Our Positions" column: "Disgust and Shame"]

[Text] The words disgust and shame are not strong enough to describe Denktas and his stand. Yesterday he accepted Waldheim's formula and informed the UN secretary general envoy, Perez de Cuellar, of this: The National and Ministerial councils remained in session until midnight, accepted the formula and informed Mr Perez de Cuellar of their acceptance; then, a few hours later, Denktas comes and retracts his words and states that he does not accept the formula.

His excuse was most ridiculous and groundless. The reasons are invalid and exist only in his imagination.

Mr Denktas cites nonexistent reports in Greek newspapers. None of the newspapers had either written anything on--or given an interpretation of--the content of the discussed formula. Nevertheless, Denktas not only saw the reports but also the recommendations on these reports.

These groundless excuses are an insult not only to the United Nations and all foreign governments but also to every person whose intelligence is being offended.

Who has ever heard before of someone retracting his words because newspapers might have written something--and the newspapers have not. Consultations were being held on a serious problem and Denktas concocted the most ridiculous excuse that any one could possibly come up with to justify the unjustifiable.

He cited nonexistent reports. But why cite nonexistent reports when he had our side's official reply in front of him, the reply which was officially conveyed by Mr Perez de Cuellar? It is evident that he did not mind making the excuse and torpedoing the new effort. However, from now on, a new measure of ridiculousness should be contrived. Denktas with his measure has surpassed all limits.

KIPRIANOU COMMENTS ON VISITS TO CZECHOSLOVAKIA, GDR

NC090745 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0700 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] This morning President Kyprianou left for state visits to Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic at the invitation of the presidents of the two countries, Mr Husak and Mr Honecker.

In a statement, the president said that he attaches special importance to these visits, not only because they concern two friendly countries which have played a very important role in the Cyprus problem--particularly within the UN framework, because both countries have played a leading role in the making of all the UN resolutions on Cyprus--but also because he will have the opportunity to exchange views with the two leaders on the international situation and to examine with them ways to strengthen still further our ties with the two countries and our cooperation in all fields.

Mr Kiprianou added: As is well known, from the first years of the Cyprus crisis both Czechoslovakia, as a Security Council member, and the GDR have adopted a clear stand in favor of the Cyprus problem, that is in favor of the restoration of justice in Cyprus. I have no doubt that they will continue to consistently support an honorable Cyprus solution through the implementation of the UN resolutions.

President Kiprianou also added that his visit to these two countries and the talks he will have become particularly important following the recent efforts which have been exerted for the resumption of the inter-Cypriot dialogue and which have failed exclusively because of the Turkish side. The president said: Mr Denktas is trying, of course, to give various explanations but there is no room for any explanation. It is not only the fact that Mr Denktas and consequently Turkey have rejected the UN secretary general's ideas, but it is also the way that they have rejected these ideas. Although on Friday Mr Denktas accepted the ideas, on Saturday he rejected them. The president stressed: This has been proved not only by the United Nations but also by the various foreign diplomats who had the opportunity to meet Mr Denktas on Friday.

President Kiprianou added: We viewed the question with all good will as always. We accepted the secretary general's proposal because we believed that an honorable dialogue could begin. I wish to responsibly stress that the actions of the government and the Greek Cypriot side have been absolutely correct, and that the acceptance of the secretary general's proposal has been sound. Everyone will be inquiring what the next step will be. The president said: A UN General Assembly resolution has been pending. But in any case, after my return we shall discuss--in bht the government and the National Council--what the next step should be on our part. My meetings in Prague and Berlin will provide me with the opportunity to explore some possibilities.

Answering a question, the president said that acceptance of Mr Waldheim's proposal did not imply acceptance of any unacceptable advance commitments.

Mr Kiprianou's visit to Czechoslovakia will last until Wednesday; his visit to GDR will be from Wednesday to Saturday. The president is accompanied by Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

DENKTAS LEAVES FOR UNESCO MEETING IN PARIS

TA081016 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 8 Jun 80

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has described as a meaningless proposal the formula submitted by the United Nations in Lefkosa [Nicosia] the other day. He said: We are struggling for a just and balanced peace that will ensure our rights, lives and property against the Greek Cypriots. Denktas left the island for Paris by way of Istanbul this morning to attend a conference on disarmament through education to begin in Paris tomorrow. In a statement before his departure, Denktas said that the Greek Cypriot administration, through demagogy, was trying to create the impression that it was in favor of peace and negotiations. He added that the United Nations will continue its efforts to resume the Cyprus peace talks. After his stay in Paris, Denktas will visit Tripoli as the guest of the Government of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah.

BOUTOS ANNOUNCES GOVERNMENT'S PACKAGE OF ECONOMIC MEASURES

AT061124 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 5 Jun 80

[Text] A package of economic and financial measures to fight inflation, encourage the country's economic development and to ease the burden of the Greek people within limits of the country's current potential were announced by Coordination Minister Ioannis Boutos this evening.

These measures are not only aimed at fighting inflation and balancing the foreign payments balance, but also at encouraging productive investments.

Specifically, the measures announced by the coordination minister include the following:

One--Tax levels, which will come into effect with the new budget, are readjusted and lowered. They will apply to incomes to be earned this year.

Two--Proof criterion for rent paid and proof of origin of funds for the purchase of immovable property under a certain value are abolished.

Three--The tax on immovable property is abolished for tax statements to be submitted for 1981.

Four--Telephone and water rates, ticket prices for urban transport and coastal steamer lines as well as ERT, national radio and television, dues are frozen.

Five--No change is authorized for the cost of hospital treatment.

Six--Effective checks are implemented in the development of the prices of basic consumer goods.

Seven--New oil and gasoline prices are fixed in an effort to cover the heavy cost of petroleum fuels. The new prices which come into effect as of midnight tonight will be as follows: high test gasoline--36 drachmas per liter; ordinary gasoline--32 drachmas per liter; diesel oil--17 drachmas per liter; light crude oil--9,050 drachmas per ton; heavy crude oil--8,200 drachmas per ton.

Eight--Interest on savings deposits in foreign exchange are unrestricted.

Coordination Minister Ioannis Boutos will now speak on the importance and value of these measures, on their decisive role in the stabilization and development of the economy:

[Begin Boutos video recording] Good evening. During the last 2 years, as we all know, inflation increased on a worldwide scale. Each of us knows from personal experience that inflation is a serious economic disease. It affects most of us, particularly those of us who are economically weaker and it creates a deficit in the foreign payments balance, leads to decreased productivity and investments and causes depression and unemployment.

Consequently, an inflation problem does exist. At the same time, however, there is also the will to fight it. This fight against inflation, however, is not an easy task, for the following two reasons: one--because no formula has yet to be discovered which would lead to speedy and impressive curative results or economic miracles. Two--because every anti-inflation effort, if it is to succeed, presupposes the mobilization and cooperation of all of us in the implementation of a suitable policy.

These truths apply for all countries. Consequently they also apply to our own country. The second great problem which Greece faces, like other countries do, is the problem with the foreign payments balance. As a result of the recent and latest oil price hikes alone, it is estimated that a revenue of $120 billion moved from oil-importing countries to the oil-producing countries. As you understand, these are vast sums of money.

At the same time, and in an effort to give you another example, economically strong countries such as Germany for the first time in their recent history were turned from countries with a surplus to countries with a deficit balance of payments. Could our country be an exception to the rule? Could this be so when our economy relies on the import of oil to a degree far higher than many other countries? Or should we once again remember that the cost of oil to meet our energy needs has shot up from $900 million in 1978 to $3 billion in 1980? The problems, therefore, most certainly do exist.

However, like every wise family which sees the finances of its home endangered, so we--the people and the government--must face these problems with care and diligence if we want to overcome them and set firm foundations for our future development. This is exactly what the government wants to do through the measures you heard earlier and which you will read at your leisure in tomorrow's newspapers.

In summary I will repeat for you that the government has resolved to cut public sector expenditures down to the essentials to decrease tax scales for incomes of the current year; to abolish the proof criterion for rent paid and proof of origin of funds for the purchase of immovable property; to abolish the tax on immovable property; to freeze the rates for water and telephone, the price of tickets on urban transport and coastal steam lines and the dues for ERT, national radio and television. Consequently the consumer will only be burdened with the increase in fuel prices and electricity.

Naturally, along with the entire world, we are also passing through a phase of economic crisis. In order to be able to control the situation and in order to overcome the crisis and look to the future with optimism, we must cooperate with each other, we must demonstrate understanding and each one of us must make his small sacrifice. If we cut unnecessary expenditures and increase savings, if we cut the imports of expensive products and if we support our own products, if we set a certain limit to the pursuit of our own personal gain, then we will be able to overcome the difficulties and we will avoid greater dangers.

It is true that the suitable prerequisites do exist. If the government and the people all do our duty, then, I think, there will be justification in the confidence we show toward the economic future of our fatherland. I thank you for listening to me and wish you a good night. [end recording]

Criticism From Opposition

AT061528 Athens MESIMURINI in Greek 6 Jun 80 p 1

[Text] PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou made the following statement on the announced government economic measures:

"Real surprise is caused by the fact that the 'new' government of New Democracy, which is continuing the economic policy of its predecessor, took such a long time to announce its measures. The package of announced measures is simply a repetition of measures already in force, the increase in the price of fuels and indefinite promises about the future as the only exception. It is also unbelievable that the government should inform us that 'hasty action and hasty decisions are not permissible and for this reason the announcement of measures of economic policy will be undertaken after careful study and preparation in an effort to avoid unfavorable consequences due to the possible incomplete preparation of such measures.' [paragraph continues]

"The New Democracy governments have already been in authority for 6 whole years. Was this time not sufficient for them to 'carefully study' the problems of Greek economy? We inform them that not much time remains for more careful study. The people will soon remove them from authority. It is only then and under a new policy that it will be possible to solve social and economic problems and to put the country on the course toward social and economic development."

In their statement, EDIK leader I. Zigdhis and KODISO [Party of Democratic Socialism] Chairman I. Pezmazoglou also criticized the announced econmic measures. Zigdhis stated the "new measures are a declaration of good intentions by a government which has lost control over the economic situation."

Pezmazoglou stressed that "dealing with the economic problem is a purely political issue with national repercussions. It requires a total of radical decisions with internal unity and direction. This cannot be found in today's government announcement.

Praise From MESIMURINI

AT061614 Athens MESIMURINI in Greek 6 Jun 80 p 1

[From the "Positions" column]

[Text] It would be supercilious to express opinions on whether the economic measures announced yesterday could effectively correct the imbalance in foreign payments or whether they could bring rising inflation under control. First of all this is because the measures which were announced yesterday are only part of a series which will permit a more secure judgement only when it is fully implemented and because their effectiveness will be predetermined primarily by their acceptance by the productive classes on the one hand and by the general public on the other. Harsh or mild, courageous or timid, any such measures are condemned unless they deal with the prevailing psychological climate or create the climate which is needed.

From this viewpoint one should laud the simplicity and clarity--and consequently the convincing way--with which the minister of coordination made his announcements over the country's television network. He convinced that he presented our problems with sincerity particularly if sincerity is to mean sharing the general concern.

There was also another very important element in yesterday's television message from Boutos--the relevent brevity. It was not just a gesture of politeness toward the daily press when he limited himself to stressing only the main points of economic policy and then referred his listeners to today's newspapers for details and an indepth analysis of the measures. This demonstrated the correct and modern grasp of the different potential of electronic as compared to the printed mass information media. It also stressed the "new style" of communicating with public opinion which was first inaugurated by the new government through its prime minister.

I KATHIMERINI: 'CRISIS' IN FRG RELATIONS DUE TO AID TO TURKEY

AT051238 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 5 Jun 80 p 1

[Article by I KATHIMERINI Paris correspondent Richard Someritis: "Relations Between Greece and West Germany on Eve of Crisis Due to Turkish Defense Aid"]

[Text] Paris--Greek-German relations are on the eve of a crisis over German "defense" aid to Turkey. This was the conclusion of European observers in Paris where the OECD council of ministers met.

The Greek delegation to the OECD conference was headed by Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis (who in a short conversation with his Turkish counterpart, Erkmen, worked out the details of talks they will have in Ankara in a few weeks during the NATO conference).

According to the information made available and which was confirmed during the OECD conference, it is a fact that West Germany has resolved to supply Turkey with considerable amounts in military aid over the next 3 years. According to the same reports Bonn does not intend to apply to this so-called "special aid" (which is to be added to what has already been approved) the rule of "five to three" which has been adopted in respect of Greece in order to guarantee military balance of power between the two countries.

All recent Greek-German talks both in Athens and overseas at different levels were centered on this very problem which is considered very important by Greece. On the occasion of these talks, however, it was established that Bonn not only has no intention of changing its tactics but also that certain, at least, of its representatives use unacceptably pro-Turkish arguments.

Foreign sources have every reason to believe that the probable and virtually certain insistence of West Germany on the plan for special aid to Turkey without the "five to three" rule and the official announcement of the decision will bring forth a severe Greek reaction which will most certainly influence on a broad spectrum the entire climate of relations between the two countries.

GOVERNMENT, OPPOSITION CLASH OVER NATO NUCLEAR PLANNING GROUP

ATO61454 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 6 Jun 80 p 1

[Text] For more general reasons of foreign policy, Greece considers its attendance at NATO's Nuclear Planning Group to be expedient. Greece alternates with Turkey in attending group sessions. This was revealed yesterday in a government spokesman's reply to a statement by PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou in which he criticized the government for our country's participation in the group.

Papandreou made the following statement:

"It is supposed that Greece, like France, is not a member of NATO's military wing. Consequently the government has a duty to furnish explanations to the Greek people why Greece attended (while France did not) the meeting of NATO's Nuclear Planning Group. At the same time the government must furnish an explanation as to why, for the second time in succession, it supported the decision for the installation of Eurostrategic weapons (Pershing-2 and cruise) in West Europe.

"The government should know that this decision is a direct provocation aimed at the Soviet Union--a provocation which falls within the plans of the United States to follow a course leading to a rift with the USSR and to a return to cold war confrontation.

"What is meant by our country's identification with U.S. and NATO cold-war initiatives particularly at a time whey they are arming Turkey so that it will become a permanent and mortal threat against our country's territorial integrity? Into what type of foreign and defense policy do these initiatives of the government fall?"

The Government Reply

Answering the chairman of PASOK, the government spokesman made the following statement:

"1--We have continuously participated in the NATO Nuclear Planning Group and we never withdrew from it. Our participation alternates with that of Turkey.

"2--The above-mentioned group does not fall under the Alliance's military wing. It is a group for study and recommendation which has no decisive authority.

"3--With reference to missiles there is absolutely no intent to provoke the Soviet Union. At all times our country has supported a mutual and controlled balance between the two superpowers at the lowest possible levels. Even when this is not possible, it is, in any case, essential to have such balance of power.

"With reference to missiles it is also added that our country neither shares in the cost of installation of such missiles nor has there ever been any proposal for their installation on our territory."

The KKE

With reference to our country's participation in NATO's Nuclear Planning Group, the KKE also accuses the government of giving ground to Atlantism. A statement by the party's press office issued yesterday argues that through its support of installation of missiles in Europe the government is aligning itself with NATO policy. Had it been truly interested in the preservation of balance at the lowest level it would have opposed such a decision.

About Luns

Referring to press reports about a possible visit to Greece by NATO's Secretary General Luns, the government spokesman described the report as totally inaccurate and added that Luns never asked to visit our country.

FOREIGN INTERESTS BLAMED FOR UNDERMINING WAR INDUSTRY

AT061412 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 5 Jun 80 pp 1, 15

[Text] "Foreigners are attempting to make production of war material unprofitable for Greece and to force the government to cease its efforts to establish its own war industry."

The above was stressed in an exclusive interview granted to a Thessaloniki newspaper by Deputy National Defense Minister Alexandhros Avraamidhis.

"The difficulties which the government is faced with and which I, as the person who carries out its instructions, also face" the deputy minister added, "in the establishment of a proper war industry were and remain numerous and it is natural that they should exist.

"We have faced and continue to face obstacles because, as is known, the armaments of the country cost vast sums of money. Because our country spent vast sums of money even for the production of civilian products which it could not produce by itself, money which went to foreign manufacturing concerns, it is natural that we should meet obstacles at a time when we try to establish our own war industry which will, in the future, meet all our needs.

"Admittedly we meet with reactions from foreigners. Very often we are offered product prices which are far below today's cost of production of these goods by foreign industries producing war materiel.

"The purpose of these foreign offers is to make the production of such products unprofitable for Greece and to force the government to stop its efforts to establish its own war industry.

"Naturally these foreign efforts are not going to succeed because the government is determined to continue its efforts toward completion of the project to establish its own war industry."

In response to a question, Avraamidhis said the government has not had to face the possibility of purchasing raw materials from a Warsaw Pact country.

I AVYI CONDEMNS KKE,(EXTERIOR) STAND ON CYPRUS ISSUE

AT071149 Athens I AVYI in Greek 7 Jun 80 p 9

[From the "I AVYI" column: "The Imprudent Talk of 'Prudence'"]

[Text] In its recent pro-AKEL front-page article, RIZOSPASTIS reached extremes both with its audacity as well as with its irrationality. At the outset we wonder how it is that RIZOSPASTIS suddenly became so well informed about the Kiprianou government and its weaknesses. If memory does not serve us wrong, until only 1 week ago it did not demonstrate even the slightest reservation about the president of Cyprus. If, however, for reasons of "internationalistic solidarity" the newspaper of Florakis feels the need to support the positions of AKEL, does it not think that it tends to become even "more Catholic than the pope" by using irrational statements instead of arguments? AKEL, for example, stated that President Kiprianou proved himself unable to cope with circumstances, that his policy leads Cyprus to calamity and that for this very reason it separated its position and responsibility. What else could this mean except that for AKEL, Kiprianou is unacceptable as the president of Cyprus? Now, however, RIZOSPASTIS, in its effort to defend AKEL, states that this party did not raise the question of Kiprianou's resignation, that this is a slander and so forth. If Florakis' newspaper wanted to maintain even a certain elemental sobriety, if it wanted to demonstrate the "prudence" which it recommends to others, it should have avoided a parrot-like repetition of the arguments of others in the name of this "internationalism." It should have realized that its duty does not consist of pretending to be the "fanatical dervish" everywhere and at all times but that it should take more care about the prudence of its own articles. This is because at this very moment of great tribulation in the Cyprus issue it is the duty of the entire left-wing, of all democratic and patriotic forces in Greece to contribute as much as they can toward restoration of unity, unanimity of spirit of the fighting people of Cyprus and toward cooperation between their patriotic forces, avoiding creation of rifts and crises which only benefit the enemies of the Cypriot cause. RIZOSPASTIS, therefore, should abandon its ravings particularly since it failed to "discover" the presence of Turkish occupation troops on the island for so many years yet it has suddenly discovered the existence of I AVYI and the KKE (Interior) as helpers in the slanderous anti-communist propaganda against AKEL. RIZOSPASTIS should take care lest its fiery "arguments" are exploited in Cyprus by Kliridhis, for example, who also drew his sword against the present Cyprus Government.

DEFENSE MINISTER RETURNS FROM NATO MEETING IN NORWAY

TA071113 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] National Defense Minister Ahmet Ihsan Birincioglu has returned to Turkey after attending the meeting of the NATO Defense Planning Committee's Nuclear Planning Group in Bode, Norway. In a statement to our correspondent at Yesilkoy Airport, Birincioglu said that useful talks were held on Alliance's defense-oriented nuclear power and on the present situation on the European Continent. He said that once again, the Allies observed and established with concern the qualitative and quantitative imbalance created by the medium- and long-range nuclear weapons in certain countries outside NATO. He added that the NATO Alliance favored mutual disarmament rather than an arms race to improve this imbalance.

FINANCE MINISTER COMMENTS UPON RETURN FROM OECD MEETING

TA061948 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin returned to Turkey today after attending the annual OECD meeting in Paris. In a statement on arriving at Yesilkoy Airport, Sezgin said that the OECD countries agreed on pursuing a policy of restrictive budgets in fighting inflation. He noted that the issue of eliminating the economic difficulties created by the oil crisis was discussed at the meeting. He added that the energy problem was also debated at the meeting. Sezgin also said that the participants stressed the importance of taking measures to eliminate unemployment among the younger generations.

According to the finance minister, the OECD countries mainly agreed that free trade and increasing the volume of trade were good ways of saving countries from economic stagnation. They also agreed that oil income should be used in the interest of the world economy and particularly of the developing countries instead of being kept in banks.

Finance Minister Sezgin pointed out that during his stay in Paris he held bilateral talks with the finance ministers of some OECD countries. He noted that the standby [last word in English] agreement between Turkey and the IMF would be concluded on 18 June. In parallel, he added, the agreements for the postponement of Turkey's debts would be concluded in Paris around the same date.

NAP LEGISLATORS ORDERED TO RETURN TO ASSEMBLY

TA071136 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 7 Jun 80

[Text] The Nationalist Action Party [NAP] General Administrative Council has decided that in order to wage the struggle with the help of the people, the party legislators must continue with their duties until a sufficient number of legislators is collected--through cooperation with the other party groups in parliament--to enable the Turkish Grand National Assembly to call for general elections.

NAP leader Alpaslan Turkes held a news conference in Ankara today and announced the decisions of the General Administrative Council as follows: The possibilities of cooperating with the other party groups in parliament must be sought in order to wage the struggle with the help of the nation. The minute a sufficient number of legislators is collected to enable the Turkish Grand National Assembly to call for general elections, then the party must begin the struggle with the help of the nation. Now, our legislators must immediately return to the Turkish Grand National Assembly and resume their honorable duties, which constitute the hope of our nation.

NAP PROVINCIAL LEADERS DISCUSS REACTION TO SAZAK'S DEATH

TA061106 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] Nationalist Action Party [NAP] provincial leaders have met in Ankara to discuss the issue of waging a struggle with the help of the people. In an opening statement, NAP leader Alpaslan Turkes said that the killing of deputy leader Gun Sazak was an important event and added: The reason for the anarchic incidents is that political party administrators are making very provocative statements and acting in a provocative manner.

Recalling that a decision had been made to submit to the party General Administrative Council the proposal by the NAP Assembly Group to wage a struggle with the help of the people, Turkes said that, at this meeting, the views of provincial leaders will be listened to and that the General Administrative Council will discuss the proposal today and tomorrow before reaching a decision on the issue.

NSP SUBMITS DEMANDS TO GOVERNMENT, REQUESTS REPLY

TA071748 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 7 Jun 80

[Text] National Salvation Party [NSP] Secretary General Oguzhan Asilturk has announced that the demands set by his party's General Administrative Council were today submitted to Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel in a letter.

In a written statement issued in Ankara, Asilturk noted that his party is expecting a reply to its demands from Demirel within 1 week. Asilturk said that if Demirel fails to give a positive reply within that time his party's obligation to support the government will cease without any further warning. Pointing out that if the prime minister states that the demands will be met then the NSP will grant him a period of 1 month to implement them. Asilturk said: If nothing is implemented within this 1 month to change this grave state of affairs, then our obligation to support the government will automatically be nullified because we cannot share moral responsibility for the current situation.

Asilturk added that it is out of the question for the NSP to agree to the implementation of measures by the government--on the basis of the NSP's support--to which the nation is opposed.

FORMER DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS JOIN JUSTICE PARTY

TA081809 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 8 Jun 80

[Excerpts] Faruk Sukan, a deputy from Konya and the acting leader of the now defunct Democratic Party--which was dissolved in accordance with a general congress resolution--as well as some members of the party Administrative Council, the party organization in 24 provinces and the party youth branch members joined the Justice Party in a ceremony held today.

Speaking at the ceremony, Justice Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel called for a united stand against threats facing Turkey--without making any concessions on Turkey's unity and solidarity for the sake of political gains.

In his statement at the ceremony, Sukan, the acting leader of the new defunct Democratic Party, who joined the Justice Party with his party's organization, said that in the face of grave and difficult conditions being experienced in the country today, it was imperative for those who cherish the parliamentary system and the survival of the Turkish state to unite. He added that it was with this belief that they had joined the Justice Party. With Sukan joining the Justice Party, that party now holds 187 seats in the National Assembly.

ECEVIT ACCUSES DEMIREL OF TRYING TO DESTROY DEMOCRACY

TA061753 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has said that there is a plot against the state and democracy and that Prime Minister Demirel is implementing a plan that will destroy democracy and change the state's structure and substance. Ecevit added that the Nationalist Action Party [NAP] was Demirel's and the Justice Party government's political collaborator in this respect. Addressing the RPP Joint Senate and National Assembly Group, Ecevit charged that the government was now definitely in a vacuum and that it was at a stage where it could fall immediately after a president was elected.

The RPP leader pointed out that one of the parties supporting the government was doing so unwillingly and that the other seemed to have quit the National Assembly under the pretext of waging the struggle with the help of the people. Ecevit added that Demirel was trying to delay the inevitable end.

Ecevit said: The reason why Mr Demirel is trying to delay it is this: In a way Mr Demirel is waging a class struggle. He is trying to make a certain class the ruling class of the state. That hastily-put-together class is one of high-class profiteers who became fat during the unjust order and have become even fatter during the new model of exploitation. Mr Demirel is implementing a plan whereby his government--whose days are numbered--will be turned into such a class government.

Ecevit said that this plan needed a certain timing and that Demirel would try to remain in power until then, no matter what the cost.

Alleging that the NAP was organizing plots all the time, Ecevit said: On the one hand the NAP started a civil war where it could, on the other hand it quit the Assembly under the pretext of waging the struggle with the help of the people. Obviously, if it quits the Assembly the government will fall earlier than planned. So, it will promise to return to the Assembly under certain conditions. It is already clear that there will be secret bargaining on these conditions; secret bargaining for the complete abandonment of the state to the NAP's militant forces.

Ecevit stressed that during this bargaining, the NAP would force the Demirel government to change the Turkish Armed Forces' and the martial law forces' impartial and democratic stand. He added that, in order to take steps in that direction, the government had to wait until a certain date and that this was why timing was important. He said: It is another question whether the government--if it can remain in power until that time--can obtain the results it expects from its efforts to change the armed forces' structure and the martial law's cadres and functions. As a person who has had the opportunity to know our armed forces quite well, I do not believe that the government will obtain the results it expects in this regard. However, even if they do not yield results, steps taken to gain such aims shake the system and the state even more.

Ecevit said that it was the RPP's duty to stop these plots without wasting time. He added that the main condition for that was to speedily elect a president who would protect the Constitution and democracy.

TURKES CLAIMS ECEVIT TRYING TO INVOLVE ARMY IN POLITICS

TA071801 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 7 Jun 80

[Excerpt] In a news conference in Ankara today, Nationalist Action Party [NAP] leader Alpaslan Turkes reiterated his views that RPP leader Bulent Ecevit is protecting the anarchists and said that Ecevit is both the leader of a party within the democratic system as well as the organizer of those who wish to destroy this system.

Criticizing Ecevit's statement at the RPP parliamentary group meeting yesterday, Turkes said Ecevit is trying to involve the Turkish Army in politics, which has so far remained outside internal political strife. Turkes noted that Ecevit isolated his party from other parties and that the RPP is unable to cooperate with any other party even for the sake of the country's interests.

Expressing the conviction of the NAP that Turkey needs unity, fraternity and love more than ever now, Turkes said: Wherever they are and whatever their beliefs, all Turkish citizens should not forget that they share the same God, the same book and the same nation. We should unite around these sacred values, which have kept us together for thousands of years.

GOVERNMENT REPLIES TO GISCARD PROPOSAL ON EEC

LD062306 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] Here is an official note released a few minutes ago by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs:

The recent statements made by the French president about the current difficulties within the EEC and about a possible delay in the process of enlarging the EEC to include Greece, Portugal and Spain warrant a brief comment on the part of the Portuguese Government.

The EEC and its nine member countries, including France, have approved clearly and without reservations the principle of enlarging the Community, and have thus accepted the idea of Portugal's accession to the EEC. The statements made by the French president do not call this into question.

President Giscard d'Estaing merely came out in favor of the need for a pause in the process of EEC expansion without expressing any opposition to the expansion itself, and he did not define the effects or duration of such a pause. With no formal decision by the EEC to the contrary, the negotiations with Portugal should continue according to the procedure which has been adopted and in keeping with the timetable agreed upon, as was indeed announced today by a EEC spokesman.

If France were to take a position opposing the continuation of negotiations with Portugal or against their conclusion as soon as possible, the Portuguese Government could in no way agree with it, and would act in such a way as to find--for our country and our economy--the solutions likely to best defend the national interest.

The context in which yesterday's statements were made, however, the guarantees which have always been given to us, namely by President Giscard d'Estaing himself, and the awareness which exists in France of the enormous frustration which all Portuguese democrats would feel if the doors to the EEC were shut to us--particularly if that were to happen because of France--are factors which, among others, work in our favor, and which do not justify our fearing the worst.

With regard to all these points, the Portuguese Government is in contact with the French authorities, with whom the matter will be the subject of detailed talks in the course of the visit shortly to be paid to Paris by the prime minister, the deputy prime minister and the secretary of state for European integration at a date which has already been set and which is to be disclosed soon.

TURKISH FINANCE OFFICIAL DISCUSSES AID, DEBT POSTPONEMENTS

TA091748 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] The prime ministry under secretary and deputy under secretary of the State Planning Organization, Turgut Ozal, who left for the FRG after concluding his visit to Switzerland, today met FRG Finance Minister Matthoefer in Essen. Ozal said the aid extended to Turkey within the framework of the OECD and the postponement of Turkey's debts were discussed at the meeting.

Replying to reporters' questions, Ozal said that with the lifting of control over interest rates the financial resources necessary for Turkey's exports will be secured. Noting that the decision was not made upon IMF orders, Ozal added that as a result of this adjustment unnecessary investments will now be channeled toward more useful fields. In reply to a question Ozal said transfers [of foreign currency] are being made in the appropriate manner and that the oil shortage has ended in Turkey. He concluded by saying that the increase in the rate of inflation has been curbed.

[Summary] Bochum/Hannover--The East bloc has notified us of two sports cancellations. The USSR junior canoeists will not compete in the annual international Ruhr regatta in Bochum-Dahlhausen this weekend. No reason for the cancellation was given. The Czechoslovak Rugby Association canceled for "technical reasons" next Sunday's match with a Lower Saxony team in Brno.

SPD CONGRESS ON PRIORITY OF MISSILES TALKS WITH USSR

LD101028 Hamburg DPA in German 0827 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Essen--Three weeks before Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's talks in Moscow, which will also include the subject of nuclear medium-range missiles in Europe, the SPD election congress in Essen today again pressed for East-West negotiations on these weapons and reaffirmed that the aim of negotiations from a Social-Democratic viewpoint should be to tame the deployment of new nuclear weapons in Western Europe as unnecessary as possible [sentence as received].

With only 5 opposing votes, the 400 delegates adopted a section of the SPD election program which stresses the priority of NATO's offer of negotiations to the Soviet Union on limitation of medium-range missiles in the East and West beyond the decision by the Western alliance to deploy these nuclear missiles in Western Europe as a response to the high level of Soviet arms buildup in this sphere.

CHANCELLOR CANDIDATE STRAUSS INTRODUCES ELECTION TEAM

DW091202 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 7 Jun 80 pp 1, 2

[Eghard Moerbitz article: "Strauss Nominates Three Teams"]

[Text] Bonn, 6 June--In Bonn on Friday, the chancellor candidate of the Union parties, Franz Josef Strauss, and the chairman of the CDU, Helmut Kohl, officially announced the names of the election campaign team with which Strauss proposes to wage the struggle against the Bonn government coalition under Helmut Schmidt and Hans-Dietrich Genscher. According to this announcement, Minister President Gerhard Stoltenberg is to become vice chancellor.

Actually, the top opposition team is comprised of three groups. The first is headed by Chancellor Candidate Franz Josef Strauss and includes CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl, who wants to remain floorleader in the Bundestag, and Stoltenberg, who is to become vice chancellor, federal finance minister and chairman of the so-called economic cabinet, a ministerial committee, under Strauss.

The second group is made up of nine candidates eligible for a ministerial office in Bonn. These are CDU Bundestag Deputies Rainer Barzel, Alfred Dregger, Manfred Woerner and Helga Wex, as well as CSU Bundestag Deputies Werner Dollinger and Friedrich Zimmermann, CDU General Secretary General Heiner Geissler, Lower Saxony Finance Minister Walther Leisler Kiep and Bavarian Minister of Cultural Affairs Hans Maier. Apart from Manfred Woerner who, according to Strauss, is a natural choice for the post of federal defense minister, the other candidates are eligible for at least two different portfolios, Strauss having refused to be committed. But each of the nine has given their assent and are prepared to cooperate in the election campaign team "without any ifs and buts."

The third enlarged top team is comprised of 11 members. This includes Minister Presidents Ernst Albrecht, Lothar Spaeth, Bernhard Vogel and Werner Zeyer; CSU Secretary General Edmund Stoiber; North Rhine-Westphalian opposition leader Kurt Biedenkopf; Chairman of the Christian Democratic Employees Association Norbert Bluem; Bundestag Vice President Richard von Weizsaecker; Junge Union Chairman Matthias Wissmann; Deputy Chairman of the CDU/CSU Bundestag Group Burkhard Ritz; and State Secretary in the Rhineland-Palatinate's Social and Environment Ministry Renate Hellwig.

According to the information provided by Strauss, these politicians form a "representative cross section" of competence and expertise within the Union parties, it being an established fact that Minister Presidents Ernst Albrecht (Lower Saxony) and Lothar Spaeth (Baden-Wuerttemberg) as well as North Rhine-Westphalian opposition leader Biedenkopf and CSU Secretary General Stoiber will not take charge of a ministerial post in the ninth legislative period under any circumstances because they are needed more urgently in their present positions even after a CDU/CSU election victory, Strauss stressed.

Incumbent Bundestag President Richard Stuecklen (CSU) is to remain Bundestag president after the 5 October Bundestag elections if the Union remains the strongest Bundestag group. Strauss said that Stuecklen is not mentioned in the top team of the Union parties out of respect for his office as the master of the Bundestag.

The Union's candidate for chancellor expressly confirmed on Friday, in answer to a question, that his cabinet could also contain ministers who have not been named in any of the three groups mentioned on Friday. Strauss wants to keep a free hand in case of an election victory. Instead of Burkhard Ritz, Constantin Baron Heereman von Zuydtwyck, president of the German Farmers' Association, could become federal minister for food, as had been planned once before for a cabinet under Helmut Kohl. According to the CSU chairman, there is no reason why Heereman should not be considered.

Despite his contradictory statements made in past months, Strauss said on Friday that the official list of his top team is exactly in line with what he had planned last fall. Helmut Kohl stressed that he had worked out this list together with Franz Josef Strauss "in very pleasant cooperation." The remaining 120 days until the Bundestag elections will be passed in good personal and friendly agreement. Kohl stressed to the press that he had given "a clear and decisive yes" to his candidacy as faction chairman, which was explained by Strauss by the fact that, to him, the position of faction chairman is the most important position after that of federal chancellor.

Strauss said further that the election campaign commission of the CDU and CSU, which has so far consisted of six members from each element (including deceased Herbert Koeppler), will be increased by those members of the team of nine who have not belonged to the commissions so far. Berzel, Kiep, Helga Wex, Woerner and Hans Maier (CSU) are involved. The commission is supposed to be convoked within the next 14 days to discuss further election campaign strategy.

The fact that Frankfurt Mayor Walter Wallmann still does not belong to the enlarged team was explained by Strauss to the press by pointing out the great number of famous communal CDU/CSU politicians. It is being said in Bonn that Strauss refrained from nominating communal political representatives of the Union because he did not want to have Munich Mayor Erich Kiesl on the team, but did not want to make it obvious and leave him out.

WEST BERLIN'S SEW TROUBLED BY INTERNAL PARTY CONFLICT

DW090947 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 9 Jun 80 p 4

[Article signed Ws.: "SEW Admits Internal Party Quarrel"]

[Text] Berlin, 8 June--Horst Schmitt, chairman of the "Socialist Unity Party of West Berlin" (SEW), has discussed in public for the first time the serious internal party debates on the course of his party and has confirmed the SEW's loyalty to Moscow. The party has about 7,000 members and won 13,744 votes in the last House of Delegates elections in Berlin, which is 1.1 percent of the votes--the party's worst result up to now. Addressing the party executive board, Schmitt, excerpts of whose speech was reprinted by the SEW organ DIE WAHRHEIT, said that some "petit bourgeois elements" had infiltrated the party and tried to "drive" the SEW "off its clear course and split it up through factional activities." But nobody will ever succeed in pushing the SEW off its basic positions. There is no room in the party for either rightwing or leftwing opposition elements.

The internal party conflict started late last year when a competitor to the official party organ DIE WAHRHEIT appeared under the name DIE KLARHEIT. DIE KLARHEIT appeared for the first time late last year and has since then appeared at irregular intervals: Its circulation is between 500 and 700 copies. The paper is published by members and former members of the SEW. In this paper topics are discussed (Afghanistan, internal party democracy, relationship with the CPSU) which are the subject of internal party debates. The official party organ hushed up these debates for the most part. The person responsible for DIE KLARHEIT has been expelled from the SEW in the meantime. The party spoke of an "antiparty sheet" which is being "played up," and at first kept silent with regard to speculations that the SEW might be split up. In late May, however, 30 SEW members including two members of the party executive board, which itself consists of 62 persons, resigned from the party and publicly justified their action by arguing "that this party is no longer capable of developing a policy and strategy containing a proposal for the road toward socialism commensurate with the conditions of West Berlin, a proposal which might find the consensus of the vast majority of the people in West Berlin." A "political declaration" emphasizes as the core of the criticism of the SEW's policy the fact that the party "on its own hardly ever, or not at all, becomes active and takes the initiative whenever new questions are on the agenda, and even seeks to impede or prevent corresponding processes." What this refers to is probably what we can generally call "Eurocommunism" and "the Greens." After all, the "alternative ballot" in the last House of Delegates elections won more than three times as many votes as did the SEW.

DIE WAHRHEIT reacted with a commentary entitled "Strengthen the SEW." The commentary says in part that "some forces" have resigned from the party while "a few other co-producers and/or followers of the antiparty sheet DIE KLARHEIT still want to stay in the party but show solidarity with those who have resigned."

It is the main intention of the oppositionists "not to apply Marxism-Leninism in accordance with conditions in our city in the fight against anti-imperialists for peace, but to call into question basic positions and practices of our party." They want to "drive a wedge" between party members and party leadership in order to make the party "unable to fight." It is not a coincidence that the "clear approach of our party members toward the GDR, the Soviet Union and the other truly socialist countries is being attacked."

SEW Chairman Schmitt said in this regard that senseless efforts are being made by people "who pretend to give good advice to the party by recommending that it dissociate itself from the principles of proletarian internationalism and shift to so-called critical solidarity toward the CPSU, the SED and other fraternal parties of real socialism."

Schmitt linked a statement of loyalty toward Moscow with a rejection of all Eurocommunist ideas: "We were and are Marxists-Leninists and proletarian internationalists and will always remain as such."

Relations with the Soviet Union will always remain the touchstone of "whether somebody is really a communist." Schmitt charged that the oppositionists have wanted for a long time to force an internal party discussion, a social reformist course and a rejection of proletarian internationalism on the party. They have done this through a hostile publication and in other ways, particularly through the open formation of a faction. As regards the factional activities of some forces including three former executive board members, there can be just one answer: Every factional activity is incompatible with SEW membership. Schmitt says there is no doubt that the three former members of the party executive board "have been engaged in double-crossing for a long time." Evidence exists showing that "they have been conspiring for a long time and that they have lied to and cheated the entire party executive board."

However, the deviators have failed in their attempts to undermine the party. It is no coincidence that they have gone on the offensive with their public statement of resignation. The SEW is "much too sound," and the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism are anchored much too firmly, so that "such elements" do not have a chance. The party executive board believes that present events are a necessary purging process which does not weaken the SEW but which will strengthen it in a political-ideological and organizational way. This is considered an obviously incorrect conclusion not only by those who have quit the SEW--people who do not want to establish a new party, but who want to form a working group in order to contribute toward "promoting the discussion among the leftists as a whole"--but by other people as well.

GISCARD VOICES ANXIETIES ABOUT FURTHER EEC EXPANSION

LD091431 Paris LE MONDE in French 7 Jun 80 p 4

[Unattributed report: "President of the Republic Speech to Agriculture Chambers"]

[Excerpts] In the speech he made to 1,000 representatives of agriculture chambers Mr Giscard d'Estaing first justified at length the agreement reached in Brussels on the reduction of the British contribution to the European budget.

"I say clearly: France could not agree to farmers' incomes being put at stake and used as a means of exerting pressure on out country from outside... The French Government's determination and the agriculture minister's calm strength have produced success...."

Mr Giscard d'Estaing then said: "In addition to strictly agricultural questions the discussions which have been going on for several months have clearly shown that the integration of some new members is not yet complete since they are asking to be absolved from some of their Community duties. This attitude on their part has a specific consequence which some people have not yet noticed. I do no think it is possible to add to the problems and uncertainties connected with the results of the first expansion, those which would be posed by new members. That is why, in view of the attitude taken by some of our partners since the beginning of this year, the Community must give priority to completing the first expansion before being in a position to carry out a second."

LE MONDE Criticism

[Editorial: "An Injustice"]

[Text] "Since the British are behaving badly let us punish the Spanish and Portuguese." That is the substance of the strange message which Mr Giscard d'Estaing addressed to his EC partners--present and future--on Thursday. In postponing Madrid's and Lisbon's membership the president of the republic is, moreover, not merely subscribing to an injustice.

The man whose behavior had seemed so "Gaullist" recently is cheerfully moving away--though it is true that he is doing so only following most French political parties including the Rally for the Republic [RPR]--from one of the ideas dear to the founder of the Fifth Republic: the idea that, to escape the invading "Anglo-Saxon" influence, the EC should expand southwards toward Latin and Mediterranean countries which are more open to French influences.

Spain, like Britain, buys a large proportion of its food products outside the EEC: It is very probable that it will wish to preserve access to the less costly world market. Finally, and most importantly, supporting the prices of Mediterranean products, especially olive oil, would involve an increase in Community spending not very compatible with the need felt almost everywhere, including Paris, to control the growth in the resources which the Nine devote to agriculture alone. The British experience has shown that it is difficult to go back on theoretically temporary exemptions when a country wants to defend its interests to the end.

Nonetheless is it fair to place the problems posed by the next two expansions [of the EC] on the same level?

Britain's behavior since it joined the Common Market has essentially confirmed the arguments put forward by those who opposed its membership--above all General de Gaulle--and rejected by those who supported it, including Mr Giscard d'Estaing and his friends. Aside from a short period under Mr Heath's government, London has only respected the European rules when they suited it. When it is not looking "out to sea"--in other words toward the United States--it is turning toward its narrow interests much more than toward continental solidarity as was shown by the Iranian sanctions affair. There is no indication that Spain or Portugal, for whom Community membership symbolized an open door to the Continent and to the Western democracies after decades of authoritarian confinement, will behave in the same way.

"In order to dispel any doubt," Mr Giscard d'Estaing said in Madrid less than 1 year ago, "I repeat here that Spain's entry into the Community corresponds not only to a legitimate aspiration but is in keeping with the nature of things and Europe's interests." It would be nice to believe that the head of state still has this historic vision. For the moment we have been reduced to the more commonplace level of electoral considerations. Mr Giscard d'Estaing is depriving the RPR and PCF of arguments which could have embarrassed him in the coming campaign and has wronged the Socialist Party which, despite numerous preconditions, was in favor of the entry of the two Iberian countries.

However, too much subtlety could lead to new contradictions. This is specially so since by rallying, although still in vague terms, to the idea of reviewing the Common Agricultural Policy the government is giving the impression of going beyond the Brussels concession and justifying the British offensive against this main achievement by the Community's founders.

AUSTRALIA'S PEACOCK VIEWS INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS, CRISES

LD100747 Paris LE MONDE in French 7 Jun 80 p 6

[Patrice de Beer report: "Mr Peacock: We Share France's Aspirations in the South Pacific"]

[Text] "France-Australian relations have made significant progress in the past 2 years.... We attach great value to our conversations with our French interlocutors; we share the same aspirations in the South Pacific, Indochina and Southeast Asia." These satisfied remarks by [Australian Foreign Minister] Peacock--on an official visit to France from 3 through 5 June--contrast to a considerable degree with those made by Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser in Paris 2 years ago. In the present troubled international situation Australia seems to give priority to political questions. That is why the foreign minister told us that economic differences, despite their importance, should be placed in their "correct perspective." It was from this viewpoint that he had talks with Mr Francois-Poncet on Wednesday and with Mr Giscard d'Estaing on Thursday before going to Washington. Australia is satisfied that France and Britain "are working together to establish law and order" in the New Hebrides to "ensure a calm and orderly transition to independence in keeping with the wish expressed by the majority of the population."

Mr Peacock nonetheless expressed his "legitimate anxiety" about the current situation and expressed the hope that "negotiations between the elected government and the dissidents can be opened as quickly as possible." After reaffirming that his country has "no territorial ambition" in the region he expressed his understanding of Paris' policy in the French Pacific territories. "It is a good thing for our two countries to work increasingly closely in the South Pacific and cooperate in that region's development.... This has not always been the case!"

Dialogue With the USSR But Condemnation of the Invasion of Afghanistan

Mr Peacock is in favor of "some form of dialogue" with the Soviet Union on condition that it is accompanied by a "strong condemnation" of the invasion of Afghanistan and that "pressures are exerted on the Kremlin to withdraw" from that country. Australia has taken sanctions against the USSR, refusing to sell it the wheat it needs after the imposition of the U.S. embargo. Other sanctions have been taken against Iran.

Australia is apprehensive about the foreign policy of the USSR "which is trying to extend its influence either directly as in Afghanistan or by supporting Vietnam's invasion of Kampuchea." This invasion in addition to the tragic situation of the Kampuchean population could "destabilize the region." Southeast Asia constitutes a priority in Australian diplomacy; moreover, Mr Peacock chaired the international conference on aid for the Kampuchean population in Geneva on 26 and 27 May. Although he is moderately optimistic about its chances of success he thinks that Vietnam's offer of dialogue to the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Note: Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore and Thailand) "should not be rejected." Nonetheless he still demands a Vietnamese withdrawal from Kampuchea. With a few months to go before the parliamentary elections the diplomacy followed by Mr Peacock--who is thought by some in Canberra to have ambitions of becoming prime minister one day--is aimed both at showing that Australia feels concerned by major world problems and that it hopes to attract the attention of the European countries even more. It does not intend to content itself with dialoguing with the United States and Japan--its two main commercial partners. "We do not want Europe to look only across the Atlantic," he told us.

NEW ZEALAND PREMIER, GISCARD DISCUSS SHEEP MARKET, NEW HEBRIDES

LD091553 Paris LE MONDE in French 7 Jun 80 p 6

[Patrice de Beer report: "Mr Muldoon: We Do Not Want To Become Involved in This Affair"]

[Text] Mr Muldoon was received by Mr Giscard d'Estaing on Wednesday, 4 June, in the afternoon. The New Zealand prime minister, who had come to Paris to attend the OECD meeting and take part in an IMF meeting on the PLO question, had talks with the French president about the entry of New Zealand sheep meat into the Community and, in particular, into Britain--its traditional market.

Mr Muldoon, who had already criticized Community policy on several occasions, seemed more optimistic this time, stating that Mr Giscard d'Estaing "clearly understood New Zealand's fears and difficulties." Mr Muldoon hopes that the discussions which a New Zealand delegation is to have in Brussels in the next few days will help find a solution which is not too damaging to this country, 40 percent of whose exports consist of sheep meat and wool.

The two leaders also discussed the question of the crisis shaking the New Hebrides. "We do not want to become involved in this affair," he said at a press conference in Roissy. "France must see this question in the context of the concerns of the Pacific forum members who, as newly independent countries, regard independence as something very important and want to welcome the New Hebrides into their midst in July." According to him, Mr Stevens' secessionist movement on the island of Espiritu-Santo "wants to obtain concessions and not independence."

ANSA REPORTS REGIONAL ELECTION RESULTS

AU100912 Rome ANSA in English 0858 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Rome, June 10 ANSA--The overall results of regional elections in Italy this week left the nation's intricate balance of political power intact while confirming the holding power of Premier Francesco Cossiga's government coalition. Cossiga's own Christian Democrat Party (DC) suffered a setback with respect to the 1979 general (legislative) elections but picked up points on the local government level in comparison with its showing in the 1975 regional poll.

The Communist Party (PCI), the DC's major rival and the biggest communist party in the West, held on to its previous nationwide standing (1979 legislative elections) but slipped some locally in the south. The "PCI" scored a stunning victory in the 1975 local elections and as a result got a chance at governing in several Italian cities, provinces and regions. That electoral triumph was confirmed the following year (1976) but thereafter withered down in the 1979 political poll for Parliament.

As for the "DC"'s Rome government partners, the Socialist Party (PSI) picked up strength with respect to both the last administrative and legislative elections while the Republican Party (PRI) held on to its overall political standing (1979 general elections) but suffered slight losses on the regional level.

The Proletarian Unity (PDUP) Party gained regional power and held fast to its nationwide political percentage.

Further Details on Turnout

AU091018 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] Rome, June 9 (ANSA)--Voter turnout Sunday in regional and local elections in Italy was down somewhat over the previous administrative elections in 1975 but balloting continues today. Nationwide, the average percentage of voter turnout was 70.8 compared to 74.1 in 1975.

In northern Italy (Piemont, Valdaosta, Lombardy, Trentino, Alto Adige, Veneto Friuli-Venezia Giulia, Liguria, Emilia Romagna), the average percentage of voter turnout was 75.1 (compared to 79.0 in 1975). In central Italy (Tuscany, Umbria, Marche, Lazio) it was 72.9 (77.0 in '75). In southern Italy (Abruzzi, Molise, Campania, Puglia, Basilicata, Calabria) it was 64.1 (64.9 in 1975). In Sicily and Sardinia the average percentage of voter turnout was 63.8 (67.6 in 1975).

It must be noted, however, that in the previous administrative elections the average was particularly high. Last year's political elections were characterized by a large number of blank and cancelled ballots and abstentions which resulted in 5,657,228 votes withheld from the parties.

This Sunday and Monday's balloting is for new councils in fifteen of the nation's twenty regions, for 86 provinces and 6,590 cities. Also in the running are candidates for 143 borough councils. Despite the administrative nature of the runoffs, local issues were all but set aside during the heated and sometimes bitter campaign that closed at midnight Friday. All sides in the contest agreed that the tallies will have immediate repercussions on the balance of political power in Rome, including the survival of the three-party coalition government headed by the Christian Democrat premier, Francesco Cossiga.

POLICE TAKE 'SPECIAL MEASURES' TO PROTECT LIBYANS

AU091620 Rome ANSA in English 1605 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] Rome, June 9 (ANSA)--With the final hours ticking away up to the Wednesday deadline for the return of Libyan expatriates to their country on pain of facing the consequences decided on by the Libyan Jamahiriyah Revolutionary Command Council, no member of the Libyan community in Rome has yet sought police protection, a spokesman for police headquarters in the capital reported today.

He declared that special measures have been set up around the nation to prevent possible criminal acts against Libyan nationals in Italy. The police at frontier check points on the nation's highways and railway system and at the points of entry in airports and ports have been requested to apply special measures for nationals from North African countries seeking to disembark in Italy.

The surveillance comes against a background of the death of four Libyan nationals in Italy since the beginning of the year, all four allegedly slain by gunmen carrying out the threat aired by Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi that enemies of the Tripoli regime abroad will be "liquidated".

The estimated 200 Libyans living in Rome are reportedly uncertain as to what course of action they should follow. Many of them have been strongly intimidated by the four slayings here and have spoken of fears for their lives and the safety of their families. Those who have released statements have said they do not oppose the Libyan regime but that they were planning to seek a more secure refuge, possibly in another country.

A Libyan merchant in downtown Rome, who asked that his name not be disclosed, said that he is afraid that he is on a list of people the Libyan authorities claim they have sent to Italy citing the "enemies of the revolution, those who have fled the country carrying with them goods belonging to the people". Others, however, have presented themselves to the officials at the Libyan Jamahiriyah Embassy to clarify their positions and have been assured that they can continue to work and reside in Italy. These Libyans have said that they are unafraid of the "death squads" reportedly tracking down the "enemies of the Libyan revolution".

Throughout Europe and in the Mideast a total of nine Libyans have been slain by gunmen acting on the will of the Revolutionary Council, the four in Italy, two in London, one in Beirut, one in Athens and one in Bonn.

Police in Rome have thus far arrested six men in connections with the killings here. One man in custody is the alleged gunman. Three are being held as accomplices. One man works for the Libyan Airlines office in Rome and one is a cousin of one of the victims who maintains that he came from Tripoli to convince his relative to return. When the request was refused, the go-ahead for the killing was allegedly given.

BERLINGUER URGES ACTION TO REOPEN U.S.-USSR DIALOGUE

LD091325 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 7 Jun 80 pp 1,17

[Unattributed report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 6 June speech in Rome: "Halt to Christian Democratic Party (DC) Rightwing Plans"]

[Excerpt] Rome--Having restated the reasons for the Communists' opposition to the present government--pointing out that its formation was characterized by two political operations: the "preamble" majority's victory at the DC congress and the acceptance of this line by the Italian Socialist Party, despite having decided at its Central Committee meeting to support a national unity government, "without second choices",--Comrade Berlinguer noted that the rightwing shift indicated by those two political operations has gradually been confirmed by successive events within a few weeks.

Thus the dangerous nature of the present government has emerged not only in its domestic policy but also in foreign policy, in its inability to produce an autonomous initiative equal to an international situation which is in many respects a dramatic one.

Here too, Berlinguer said in this connection, we look at the facts and at things as they take place before our eyes. And looking at these things we see that there have been and still are actions--on the part of both the USSR and the United States--that work against the need for detente. Irrespective of their own wishes, the two major powers have entered a logic, a spiral of actions and reprisals which, unless it is stopped, could drag the world to disaster. What might have happened if the U.S. venture in Iran had not been halted because of technical accidents and had become a military action on a larger scale?

Berlinguer cited the disconcerting case announced yesterday of the alarm sounded in the United States due to a computer fault in the U.S. Strategic Air Command which wrongly "detected" the arrival of Soviet aircraft. This is the second case of its kind in 6 months. What would have happened if the error had not been discovered in time? These are the risks being run and that are being aggravated by international tension.

The fundamental question therefore is this: What must be done to avert such dangers, to promote detente, security and peace for all? It is precisely proceeding from this question--and not on the basis of artif ial prejudices--that the Communists judge the present government's conduct.

They always agree with the U.S. administration in every instance, Berlinguer said, and to try to justify this stance they are trying to make people believe that we are always on the other side. This is a lie, as is shown by all our international stances and initiatives. Even if we look only at the workers movement, in the broadest sense, there are few communist parties in the world which, thanks to their own prestige and independence, can conduct a dialogue with the CPSU, with China and with the European social democrats.

Our position, therefore, is very different from the picture which some of our adversaries are trying to portray it. It is precisely because the opposition between the two superpowers is taking on such acute and dangerous aspects that it is becoming essential for there to be action by those forces which can help to break a dangerous spiral and reopen dialogue between the USSR and the United States, leading them to reduce tensions, pushing the superpowers and all states concerned toward a peaceful solution to the current conflicts in order to guarantee each country's sovereignty and international security. This applies to Afghanistan and Iran and the Persian Gulf, to the Middle East and to Indochina.

Many nonaligned countries, Western Europe and even the countries belonging to the Atlantic Alliance can take action in this direction. The problem, Berlinguer asserted, is in fact not whether to be in the Atlantic Alliance or not but whether we are in it while accepting all decisions taken in the United States or whether we have a minimum of autonomy and initiative and have the courage to tell the United States when it is wrong.

However, our government is in the Atlantic Alliance on the former terms: passively accepting every U.S. decision. Do not come and tell us stories about our alleged machinations against the forthcoming international summits which will be held in our country. Our government must go to those meetings and take a moderate line in favor of detente if it realizes its own duties.

Our appeal to the voters is certainly not directed against these summits. We Communists are offering an invitation, making a heartfelt appeal for people to vote for peace, so that Italy might make the contribution to the cause of peace which it can and must make and which corresponds to our people's feelings and aspirations.

GISCARD STATEMENT AGAINST EEC ENTRY SPARKS REACTION

French Envoy Summoned

LD091552 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Summary] The Spanish minister of foreign affairs, Marcelino Oreja, has conveyed to the Common Market member countries Spain's surprise at the recent statement by the French president in connection with Spain's entry into the EEC. Oreja, according to official sources, stressed our government's intention to continue negotiations with the Community as before.

The French charge d'affaires in Madrid, as acting ambassador, was called to the Spanish Ministry of Foreign Affairs this afternoon to analyze the situation following the recent statement by the French president against Spanish entry into the EEC.

French Trade Minister Comments

LD092036 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] French Prime Minister Raymond Barre has said that it is best to begin to resolve a certain number of problems within the EEC before creating other [words indistinct] the entry of other countries.

But French Minister of Foreign Trade Jean-Francois Deniau, formerly ambassador to Spain, said, after repeating this same argument, that it does not mean "no" to Spain's entry into the EEC. It is not a case of a definite "no," said the French minister, but because the question of the British contribution to the EEC is resolved, serious negotiations with the Spanish cannot begin.

These statements by the French minister of foreign trade in Paris were noticeably toned down in a press conference he held in Barcelona where he arrived today to preside over the France Day at the trade fair. Deniau said that there is no change on the part of the French authorities in their support for Spanish entry into the Common Market. Furthermore, the French minister said, his country is concerned that negotiations for Spain's entry into the EEC not be delayed.

Referring to the recent speech by French President Giscard d'Estaing, he said that it had to be understood in the context of a serious criticism of the British attitude toward reducing its contribution to the EEC budget.

FRG'S BAUM IN MADRID FOR PROTOCOL SIGNING, COMMENTS ON EEC

LD101024 Hamburg DPA in German 0913 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Excerpts] Madrid--Spain and the Federal Republic signed a protocol in Madrid today on closer cooperation in combating terrorism, and drugs and arms trafficking. At the end of his talks with Spanish Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson, Federal Interior Minister Gerhart Baum emphasized to German journalists the already very good cooperation between Bonn and Madrid and the significance of Spain as a transit country for terrorists, narcotics and weapons coming from the Middle East and South America. A computer search system based on the German pattern will go into operation in Spain in October. It will enable the rapid exchange of search data between the two countries.

Baum said that Bonn would try to play a bridging role between Spain and the EC in questions of the area of responsibility of the Interior Ministry.

With regard to France's recent proposals for a "pause" in the expansion of the EC, he stressed that the Federal Republic still supported a speedy continuation of the Spanish entry negotiations. However, the recent Brussels decisions [on Britain's contribution to the EC budget] had brought Bonn to the limits of its possibilities for indebtedness, and this had to be taken into account in future negotiations.

SOMALI FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR TALKS

LD091442 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Excerpt] The Somali minister of foreign affairs, Mr Abdurahman Jama Barre, has arrived on an official visit to Spain. This visit is based on the need for rapprochement and better understanding between Somalia and Spain whose contacts and exchanges have been infrequent up to now. Minister Jama Barre, the brother of the present Somali head of state, said that Spain could play a really important role, an increasingly important role, in Africa and in Somalia. Speaking in Italian, this is what he said:

[Begin Barre recording, followed by announcer-read Spanish translation] As a European country, Spain can play an important role in Africa since it is endowed with a humane cultural and historical tradition which has been linked for centuries with our continent. Spain, he added, can support and serve the needed economic, technical and cultural development of this area. Then the Somali minister said that in his talks in Madrid he will discuss international problems, saying that the world is going through a difficult period, and the possibilities for technical, economic and cultural cooperation between Spain and his country. PDRY ASKED FOR EXPLANATION ON ETA TERRORIST TRAINING

[Unattributed report: "Government Seeks Explanation From South Yemen"]

[Excerpt] Madrid, 5 June--The Spanish Government has sought an official explanation from the South Yemen authorities concerning the training of Basque Fatherland and Liberty [ETA] terrorists on their territory. Although similar occurrences in other states have previously been reported, this is the first time that Spain has sought an explanation from a foreign country.

According to EUROPA PRESS, the Spanish move was made through the Foreign Ministry's diplomatic services, which conveyed to the South Yemen Government extensive documentation concerning the 12 alleged members of ETA's military wing trained in that country of Asia Minor [as published].

According to the same sources, the documentation which has been sent includes a dossier compiled by the State Security Directorate concerning the activities of members of the ETA terrorist organization in Yemen, based on the statements of the four detainees who were handed over by the Dutch police at Barajas Airport. It includes photographs of all the ETA members who have passed through the Yemeni training camps, with information concerning the assumed names which they use, the code numbers which they employ and details of their stay in the training camps.

Before sending the dossier and the official request, Foreign Ministry Secretary of State Robles Piquer summoned several ambassadors of African and Asian countries accredited in Madrid, who supported the Spanish stance and expressed their disagreement with the attitude of South Yemen and that of other countries which have interfered in Spanish affairs.

BASQUE PREMIER INTERVIEWED ON REGIONAL PROBLEMS

LD091457 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 5 Jun 80 p 12

[Unattributed report: "It Is Necessary To Have Historical Perspective"]

[Excerpt] Madrid, 4 June--"It was a very pleasant meeting, as on other previous occasions, since the king's already proverbial affability and sincerity made it possible to discuss in depth the problems affecting the state, and, of course, the Basque Country's specific problems." Basque Country Premier Carlos Garaicoechea summarized in this way the audience lasting over 1 hour granted to him by King Juan Carlos at the Zarzuela Palace this morning.

However, just as Jordi Pujol had done previously, he declined, "out of a duty of elementary politeness," to disclose the specific topics raised, although he said that since the king "is the state's foremost citizen, it is natural that he should care about the existing issues and, among them, it is a secret to nobody that the Basque problem is one of the most important."

"King Needs No Invitation"

When asked whether he had invited his majesty to visit the Basque Country, Mr Garaicoechea stated that "the king needs no invitation to visit the Basque Country, and it would be arrogance on our part for doing so! The opportune time for doing so must also be sought, and this is an aspect which should be decided on by the king himself."

Right there, at the entrance to the Zarzuela Palace and at the subsequent press conference which he gave at the hotel where he was staying (after lunching he returned by road to the Basque Country), the Basque Country premier reviewed the country's overall policy, and, more specifically, the vicissitudes currently surrounding Basque life.

Meeting With Suarez Soon

In this connection, he referred first to possible talks with Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez:

"It was agreed some time ago that we should talk, but the country's latest political events have made it advisable to postpone this. Last week I spoke with Premier Suarez on the telephone and again we agreed on the opportuneness of having a meeting, but there is no specific date."

"We Felt Cheated"

"Frankly I must say that unfortunately since July we have suffered several disappointments. We are worried. We felt cheated following the great effort at mutual understanding that we made when negotiating the Guernica statute; when we discovered that the organic laws totally contravened or conflicted with something negotiated only a few months previously; when after 18 months hardly any powers had been transferred and no steps had been taken to transfer them. Of course, you cannot feel optimistic when the latest debate failed to demonstrate an attitude indicating any advance in the autonomy process. Premier Suarez' speech caused us great concern. Many themes emerged which conflict with our own viewpoints; nevertheless, I am hopeful that they might have been doctrinal formulations that will extend no further than that debate or that certain theses will be neutralized by others subsequently advocated by the government itself. [paragraph continues]

"Even the Spanish Socialist Workers Party failed to provide us with sufficient guarantees regarding a satisfactory interpretation of the autonomy. In short, we have not had too many reasons to be optimistic in recent months. We are worried but hopeful, because we believe that, eventually, dialogues and the attempt to communicate will move forward."

With regard to the return of the Basque Nationalist Party deputies to parliament, the Basque Government leader said that "nothing is further from our intentions than to despise the institutions and specifically parliament. We explained our stance at the time: Last June we came to negotiate a statute, to implement it and to demand its implementation; we have seen organic laws passed which conflicted with the procedure agreed with the government and which the opposition approved. We regarded that as breaking an agreement, but we did not show any contempt for parliament.

"We would like to be in parliament again," he added in this connection, "and we hope that dialogue and reason will enable us to return to parliament to help in the state's tasks."

With regard to possible government contacts with nationalist minorities, Garaicoechea said: "If there were any 'understanding' between the Madrid government and ourselves, it would have to be welcomed, but this is still a long way off. No formal agreements are foreseeable in the short term."

With regard to peace in the Basque Country and negotiations with the Basque Fatherland and Liberty [ETA], Mr Garaicoechea stressed that "an enormous effort of communication must be made to see if peace is possible. I believe it is worth trying."

"However Remote the Possibility, It Must Be Attempted"

"We realize that it is traumatic to talk about this," he added, "because with the barbaric events that occur every day with so many people suffering physical effects from the violence, it seems sarcastic to speak of reconciliation. However, whenever it has been necessary to make peace in any situation throughout our history, obviously this traumatic aspect has existed, and we must adopt a historical viewpoint to focus on these problems and to avoid being motivated solely by the passions of the moment.

"We believe," he continued, "that it would be worth making an effort to communicate. We are not optimistic in this connection, either. However remote or small the possibility, we believe that it is worth trying though we realize that the government must protect its image and dignity when discussing these matters. We must not confuse dialogue with the loss of dignity: Both are perfectly compatible."

"Neither Hypocritical Nor Timid"

"If pacification does not come one way," he explained, "it will come another way. And unfortunately instead of taking 1 year, it might take 10. And it must be asserted as clearly as this. Of course, we will not abdicate the responsibilities which the state places on our shoulders with regard to seeking this pacification, but we do believe that there must be neither hypocritical outrage nor timid attitudes with regard to this issue which is a historical one and which demands a creative and courageous effort."

"We All Know Each Other"

Asked whether he had already had any kind of negotiations with the Basque terrorist organization, he stressed that "in the Basque oasis, whether you like it or not, everybody knows everybody else and if you do not have a friend here you will have a cousin there. Therefore, we know what is being aimed at, but there have been no formal negotiations. Furthermore, ETA is giving no sign of openness to dialogue. The chances really are remote."

With regard to whether the Basque Government is a valid interlocutor for negotiating with the ETA, he said that "we now have the powers that we have--neither more nor less. Therefore, it is central government that holds the key to resolving the majority of the problems now facing us. There is a very different role which we can gradually take on as we are granted these powers. Second, there is a different function that we could possibly perform in a three-way dialogue and in a mediating role."

Autonomous Policy

"This year should see the first parts of the Basque autonomous policy functioning. This is one of our prime objectives," he said. He added that this policy can embrace further powers such as traffic control and the defense of the institutions and later public order in the streets and rural policing, always in accordance with the Guernica statute and embracing the powers enshrined in it in this connection. "It would be an enormous political mistake to postpone this," he said.

KAS [Patriotic Socialist Coordination] Alternative

He pointed out that the KAS alternative advocated by ETA for ending the armed struggle contains three points which are not outrageous and which any democratic party could accept (legalization of the separatist parties, the peoples' right to self-determination or the improvement of workers' living conditions). Premier Garaicoechea ended his conversation with journalists by saying that peace in the Basque Country depends on the following three points:

Evidence and guarantees of thorough self-government in accordance with the Guernica statute;

An end to the use of violence;

The examination of a program of amnesty measures through a gradual, untraumatic, plan.

NORWAY

PORTUGAL'S EANES VIEWS DETENTE, THIRD WORLD TIES IN OSLO SPEECH

LD091201 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Jun 80 pp 3, 6

[Unattributed report on Portuguese President Ramalho Eanes 4 June speech at dinner in Oslo: "Democratic Life Will Enable Europe To Tackle Crisis Without Convulsions"]

[Excerpts] A concern with democratic life "will facilitate the opening and pursuit of the paths enabling Europe to surmount the crisis without revolutionary and uncontrollable convulsions," General Ramalho Eanes said last night during his speech at a dinner given in his honor by the Norwegian prime minister at Akershus Castle.

"Two countries facing the sea," Eanes said, aptly summing up today's discussions in Oslo, "Norway and Portugal--European countries for historical reasons since before Europe had a name, countries of emigration at different times in history, Atlantic countries in the geostrategic and geopolitical sense and countries with universalist aspirations for all these reasons--Norway and Portugal are now extending their relations to new areas and with a new dynamism."

He continued as follows: "To this end they have experience which both peoples--and, if I may say so, all democratic nations--must not fail to value from the viewpoint of freedom and progress in Europe, world peace and frank and strong relations among the continents.

"This is an essential viewpoint at a time when we are witnessing, naturally with great concern, the continuous emergence of armed conflicts in various regions, the growing nuclear threat, the use of the disarmament concept purely as a basis for ideological propaganda, the systematic failure to observe international norms and the continued existence of areas of conflict which, in the Middle East and Far East, constitute a permanent threat to world peace.

"It is with equal concern that we continue to note that relations among the peoples are still marked by profound imbalances and distortions instead of being on the way to being corrected through development, respect for mankind and human dignity and real equality among the nations.

"It is our belief that unless Europe joins the efforts to find answers to these problems it will definitively lose the position which it rightly claims on the world scene.

"But for this to take place, it is also of priority importance that Europe resolve the problems stemming from the disparities existing within Europe itself, quickly surmounting the inequalities which still exist between wealthy and progressive peoples and poor peoples struggling with political, social and economic problems.

"As far as we are concerned, we are determinedly pursuing our integration into the EC, of which we will soon be full members. We therefore understand the Norwegian people's decision, which we fully respect, and welcome the fact that our differing options have not hindered the intensification of mutually advantageous bilateral relations and also the fact that it has proved possible for us to pursue, simultaneously and jointly within the international bodies to which we both belong, cooperation aimed at safeguarding the values of our democratic European substrata.

"As democrats and Europeans, we understand particularly well the specific and particularly delicate problems facing the countries of the extreme north of Europe.

"As we have demonstrated on sufficient occasions, we spare no effort to contribute to a correct understanding of this situation, in the belief that European solidarity, thus strengthened, is the only sure basis for consistently tackling the situation of generalized crisis in which we live, within the context of the Western nations and the integrated defense systems.

"As founder members of the Atlantic Alliance, our two countries are in a favorable position to understand that European defense, correctly understood in its economic, political, cultural and military aspects, cannot be resolved without taking into account events taking place on the other continents and involving peoples with respect to whom we have inalienable responsibilities.

"Indeed, we must add to the traditionally predominant East-West relations the decisive importance of North-South relations, the emergence of new forms of disregard for the peoples' rights, self-determination and the strategic value of economic relations."

Consistent Detente Policy

Having stated that "we cannot envisage detente in Europe as long as threats still exist in other regions," Ramalho Eanes expanded on this concept as follows:

"In the same way, we must always bear in mind the peoples' legitimate aspirations to treatment consistent with our ideals of democracy, freedom and human solidarity.

"This is why we have advocated intensifying relations among all the countries of Europe, within respect for the rules internationally defined and enshrined in the Helsinki Final Act.

"We believe that a consistent detente policy implies not only the continuous quest for negotiated solutions to all conflict situations but also specific steps within the context of a global progressive and balanced disarmament plan.

"But we must not fail to stress the dangers stemming from any policy intended to exacerbate conflicts, particularly in areas liable to influence European stability and security, as well as the dangers of blocking our normal process of developing economic, cultural and social relations among all European countries.

"We are particularly sensitive to efforts aimed at qualitatively changing economic relations between developed countries and countries with inferior technological resources, and the elimination of existing forms of protection on the international market, which are very much to the detriment of the less developed countries."

Eanes continued as follows: "This is why we view with concern the slowness with which countries are adapting to the new conditions of the world economic system, thus jeopardizing the establishment of a new economic order which will guarantee the Southern countries the opportunities for progress to which they are entitled and which are essential to the democratic societies' security.

"We also believe that correct solidarity among the peoples implies that aid for their economic development will take priority over military forms of aid and be free of any linkage with forms of ideological or material subordination.

"The new relations of solidarity between European and Third World peoples, which are pressing and essential, can only be based on fraternal cooperation guided by equality and justice and the elimination of any charitable preconceptions.

"But it is also necessary to transcend the phase of abstract dialogue and to introduce international structures capable of achieving specific results, including in the field of energy resources, through discussions involving countries with differing economic and political systems. This would be a major contribution to creating effective conditions for detente, which is incompatible with the deep structural imbalances that now exist between countries of differing levels of development."

Euro-African Relations

The president of the republic said next that "the Portugal born on 25 April has acquired sufficient prestige to call for respect for the sovereignty of states which take decisive steps to strengthen their independence and the integrity of their borders.

"As a Southern European country and with its long experience and historical tradition of coexistence with Africa, Portugal is aware that the establishment of open political relations and just economic relations between the nations of the two continents is of decisive importance to the security and harmonious development of the African and European countries. The establishment of this new kind of relations can usefully be pursued by medium powers capable of summoning the efforts, means and intentions needed to create satisfactory and just ways of promoting rapprochement among the peoples and progress in all regions.

"As you know, Portugal has developed with the Portuguese-speaking African countries mutually advantageous cooperation based on real human, historical and cultural bonds and with a close understanding of the mutual interests of peoples which have known each other for a long time. We regard the future with a perfect awareness that it is in our peoples' shared interests that we continue close cooperation, constantly seeking forms of mutual assistance which will guarantee the independence and full sovereignty of our states.

"There is no lack of the political will needed to realize this fraternal plan. Portugal's stance adopted during the post-decolonization period is not dictated by temporary situations or chance occurrences, but is the natural outcome of a historical process and a realistic understanding of the international situation.

"We perhaps will lack the technical means and financial resources needed to carry out all the projects which we should jointly undertake. It is our belief that within this framework Norway can help us a great deal in securing the technical and human resources needed for us to jointly carry out actions of real cooperation with developing countries.

"We believe that this effort must be correctly interpreted and supported by the European states so as to permit new advances which will strengthen solidarity among the peoples." Ramalho Eanes also said that "Portugal has been pleased to observe the continuous development of our bilateral relations."

Visit Considered 'Extremely Successful'

LD091403 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 7 Jun 80 p 6

[Unattributed report: "Eanes Visit Ended; Portugal Will Enter EEC Despite Giscard View"]

[Text] "The stability of Southern Europe is important for the security of the rest of Europe. Through negotiations with the EEC Portugal will enter European cooperation," Portuguese President Antonio Ramalho Eanes said on Friday in his comments on French President Giscard d'Estaing's statement on Thursday.

President Giscard said that the EEC ought not to be expanded until all the problems following the 1973 expansion have been solved, and this could mean that Portugal must wait, together with Spain and Greece.

President and Mrs Eanes left Fornebu Airport Friday morning after a 3-day state visit which ended Thursday evening with a dinner at the Grand Hotel. During his stay the president has had talks with government representatives led by Prime Minister Odvar Nordli.

President Eanes did not want to comment on the tense internal political situation in Portugal and the fact that the foreign and industry ministers did not accompany him on the visit to Norway as was originally planned. Nevertheless the president took the opportunity to stress that the political situation in Portugal is worrying, something which can be interpreted as a clear dig at Prime Minister Francisc Sa Carneiro. The strained relations between the president and the rightist government overshadows everything else in Portuguese politics at the moment.

President Eanes described his Norway visit as extremely successful and said that the meeting with Norwegian representatives has laid the foundations for continued close cooperation between Norway and Portugal, even though Portugal is entering the EEC. The talks did not deal with concrete questions. The most burning topics--such as Portugal's wish to increase textile export quotas to Norway--must wait until the joint Norwegian-Portuguese economic commission meets in Alesund at the end of June.

NATIONWIDE NATO CONTINGENCY STOCKPILING STUDIED

LD091305 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 Jun 80 p 8

[Olav Tryggve Storvik report: "Contingency Stockpiles Not Only in North Norway?"]

[Text] Bodo, 4 June--"There has been an increase in Soviet forces in several areas on the northern flank in the course of the last few years, even though I do not think that there has been such a great increase in land forces," American Defense Secretary Harold Brown said at the press conference following the NATO Nuclear Planning Group meeting in Bodo on Wednesday. In the Baltic the Soviet Union has stationed submarines with cruise missiles with nuclear warheads, and there has been an increase in the number of Soviet "Bear" class reconnaissance planes which fly from their bases on the Kola Peninsula around the North Cape and over the sea areas off Greenland, Iceland and Britain, the so-called "Giup Gap". There has also been a considerable increase in the number of Soviet naval exercises in the Norwegian Sea, Brown claimed. But he was not sure what proportion of Soviet forces have nuclear weapons at their disposal at any one time.

Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg supported Brown's views and said that there has been a marked increase in Soviet military activity in Norway's vicinity in the last 10 years. The Soviet Union has increased its capability for striking at larger parts of the country than before, even though this has not led Norway to make a new evaluation of the degree of threat that this represents. It is, however, a trend that is being followed with great interest, Stoltenberg said.

It is against this background that one must look at the plan for contingency stockpiling of heavier Allied equipment in Norway, the defense minister said. The Defense Ministry is now working on a study on contingency stockpiling which embraces the whole country. This study is being done as a complement to the earlier study for north Norway, Stoltenberg said. The study will deal with the questions of where in the country the heavier Allied equipment ought to be stockpiled, the size of the stockpiles and what sort of equipment the stockpiles ought to contain.

MPS DEBATE FALSE U.S. NUCLEAR ALERTS

ID091606 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1526 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text]--Defence Secretary Mr Francis Pym assured MPs today there was no chance of a mistake triggering a nuclear war. His assurance came in the Commons in reply to an emergency question from Labor's Mr Tam Dalyell (West Lothian), following the two latest false alarms in the United States of a Soviet nuclear invasion. Mr Pym said that in both cases the computer errors which had caused the alerts had been detected rapidly by the normal exhaustive checking procedure. But he said he shared the concern about the mistakes and he took a "most serious view" of them.

Mr Stan Newens, left-wing Labour MP for Harlow, claimed that the breakdown of a computer at a time of high tension, when an attack was presumed to be possible, meant "there is a very real danger that a decision might be taken that could lead to war through accident."

But Mr Pym replied: "There is not the slightest danger, nor should anyone suggest it, of triggering-off some kind of war by mistake." He stressed there was a checking procedure which worked very well in the latest cases. The alert system was "purely defensive." Fears of a war starting by mistake were not well founded. MPs should be reassured that the procedure led to the immediate alerting of the U.S. forces. And he told Mr Dalyell that no action was taken by U.S. strategic forces based in Britain as a result of the false alarms.

Labour leftwinger Mr Frank Allaun (Salford E) warned such errors could lead to British cities being "wiped out" when cruise missiles were stationed here. On a previous occasion when a similar error had occurred U.S. bombers had already taken off and could have appeared on the Russian radar screens. "Therefore an American mistake could lead to a Russian mistake and all of us could go up", he said. Mr Pym said this was a "a grotesque picture", but pointed out that the alert procedure was nothing more than defensive to place forces at the ready and did not at that stage involve firing missiles.

Shadow Defence Secretary Mr William Rodgers (Stockton) said the events caused "very deep concern" among those who supported NATO and the need for some nuclear armoury. He demanded to know that if a situation arose where missiles based in Britain were to be deployed that this would be a joint decision by the United States and Britain. Mr Pym confirmed this would be so but added he shared the concern about the incident. Nothing he had said indicated that he took "anything but the most serious view" of what had occurred. Later the speaker Mr George Thomas rejected a request from Mr Allaun for an emergency debate on the issue:

PARLIAMENT APPROVES BILL ON IRAN TRADE SANCTIONS

ID100954 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0330 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] Britain's sanctions policy against Iran cleared its final parliamentary hurdle last night when the two sanctions orders were approved by the House of Lords without a vote. Government spokesman Lord Trefgarne conceded that the government did not expect sanctions to "bring Iran to its knees," but they would demonstrate Britain's and Europe's feelings about the detention of the American hostages. Exporters wishing to continue trade with Iran would have to show that they qualified for exemption under the orders, he added. Former Labour Foreign Office Minister Lord Goronwy-Roberts condemned the sanctions as "a dangerous charade." They were being used as a "hypocritical bagatelle" when they should be developed as an "effective alternative" to the arms race.

THATCHER HOLDS TALKS WITH PRC LEADER ON OIL DEVELOPMENT

LD091650 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1403 GMT 9 Jun 80

[By David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher today assured China that Britain is ready to play a big part in the huge Chinese programme to exploit coal and oil. The prime minister had a meeting at Downing Street with Chinese Vice-Premier Kang Shien, who has responsibility for short-term economic planning and energy.

Vice-Premier Kang is in Britain until Saturday inspecting Britain's coal and North Sea oil installations. China is embarking on a huge programme to exploit off-shore oil and its coal mines. Britain is hoping for orders in both fields from the Chinese Government. Mrs Thatcher has a standing invitation--extended by Chairman Hua Guofeng--to visit China but it is unlikely that she will do so this year.

LABOR PARTY'S JENKINS MAY LEAD NEW RADICAL CENTER PARTY

[James Wightman report: "Labour Link 'Cut' by Jenkins"]

[Excerpt] Mr Roy Jenkins, former deputy Labour leader, practically dissociated himself from his old party yesterday and deliberately gave further strength to the prospect that he will help to form and lead a new radical centre party. Mr Jenkins, who retires as president of the EEC Commission in January, told a press gallery lunch at Westminister that the politics of left and centre had become "frozen in an out-of-date mould." This was "bad for the political and economic health of Britain and increasingly inhibiting for those who live within the mould," he said. But he stopped noticeably short of a firm declaration of intent. His speech may well have been another testing of political and public opinion in the manner of a BBC lecture which he gave last year.

The initial reaction at Westminister was muted--apart from expressed pleasure from Mr Steel, Liberal leader--and the indications are that support for a new political grouping at this stage would be fractional. Mr Healy, shadow chancellor and an old Cabinet colleague of Mr Jenkins, last night described the idea of a third party as "absolute bunk." He also claimed in a BBC Panorama interview that Mr Jenkins had sounded "very much less firm in his commitment" to setting up a party than he had done in his BBC lecture.

Mr Jenkins invoked the imagery of an experimental aircraft as he talked--with calculated imprecision--about the future political face of British politics. He said: "I do not doubt the difficulty in this as in other fields of endeavour of doing anything new. The likelihood before the start of most adventures is that of failure. The experimental plane may well finish up a few fields from the end of the runway. If that is so, the voluntary occupants will have only inflicted the bruises or worse upon themselves. But the reverse could occur and the experimental plane soar in the sky. If that is so, it could go further and more quickly than few now imagine, for it would carry with it great and now untapped reserves of political energy and commitment."

Mr Jenkins criticised his old Labour colleagues for the way the party has swung to the left. He also picked on the dismissive response by Mr Callaghan--no love is lost between the two men--to the prospect of a new alignment.

And he said of the Labour Party that it had shown no amity at its recent special conference at Wembley "and there has been no amity since."

Although allies of Mr Jenkins are already discussing plans for a new party and have funds available, they were saying last night that there would probably be no more open moves until after the Labour Party conference in October. If the conference is again dominated by the left--which Mr Jenkins denounced yesterday--moves towards a new party would increase. On the other hand, if Mr Callaghan led the centre-right to victory over the left, the plans of Mr Jenkins and his allies might be undermined.

Mr Jenkins, a former chancellor and home secretary, who was disappointed when Mr Callaghan did not make him foreign secretary, is 59, and believes that he can still have a leading future in British politics. But there is only minimal enthusiasm among Labour MPs for him to return to his old party and try to succeed Mr Callaghan. For one thing, the party is now much more hostile to the EEC than when this strong pro-Marketeer went off to Brussels. If a new party is formed, there is little doubt that he would be its leader.

Mr Jenkins's vagueness about his future is partly of deference to the fact that he still has six months to serve in Europe, but is also, it seems, a tactical decision to keep his options open. He said just enough yesterday to maintain the momentum of dialogue in the country about a new party but not to the extent which would look ridiculous if his experimental aircraft gained little height. Mr Jenkins also stressed--despite reports to the contrary-- that he would not return prematurely to Britain "like a moth to a candle before the end of that mandate." But he also stated that he would not remain in Brussels, despite offers after his term finishes on Jan. 6.

There was some surprise among MPs present at the lunch when Mr Jenkins said that, although he had argued for proportional representation in his BBC lecture last year it was not a prior commitment of realignment of the radical centre. A breakthrough (by a new alignment) should be used to make sure that proportional representation followed. MPs present thought that lack of a prior commitment on proportional representation might minimise some of the enthusiasm of Mr Steel, for M. Jenkins's plans. But Mr Steel said later that he had been pleased by the speech.

A new alliance involving the Liberals and Social Democrats led by Mr Jenkins is still very unlikely. There could, however, be some "arrangements" between the Leberals and a centre party where candidates from each group would not challenge each other in a general election. Going beyond that stage, there could be an informal alliance in Parliament. It is also possible that Mr Jenkins might yet join the Liberals.

But he and his allies are mainly looking for defectors from the other parties. The main hope lies in centre-right Labour MPs despairing of a party led by Mr Wedgwood Benn and the left. "Dissidents" on the left wing of the Tory Party would also be encouraged to join a new centre party.

The biggest captures from Labour would be Mrs Shirley Williams, Dr David Owen and Mr William Rodgers, who have threatened to leave the party if it becomes committed, as some leftwingers want to withdrawing from the EEC. But all three have said that they are interested in a third party.

EDEK LEADER OBJECTS TO BIZONALITY, NEW CONCESSIONS

NC090648 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 9 Jun 80 p 1

[Excerpts] EDEK Secretary General Takis Khatzidhimitriou has declared that no concession is considered to be enough by the stooges of the occupation army. He also stressed that if the press reports on the Waldheim document truly says that in Waldheim's opinion there is a common acceptance of federation for the constitutional aspect and bizonality for the territorial aspect, this means yet another fresh concession of the part of the Greek Cypriot side.

Any subsequent possibile interpretation of these terms would not be of any help, Mr Khatzidhimitriou said. He added: Bizonality as a solution will remain, while the Cyprus problem--instead of a question of invasion and occupation--is turned into a question of technical terms and percentages. There will be one more change in terms and we shall move from biregionality to bizonality.

Speaking the other day at a gathering at Pallouriotissa, Mr Khatzidhimitriou stressed that the fresh pressure applied by Mr Waldheim during recent days cannot be unrelated to domestic developments or to pressure on the president by AKEL and the Democratic Rally to accept bizonality.

Mr Khatzidhimitriou added: It will be argued by some that our side, by accepting the proposals which have been rejected by Denktas, will be winning the battle of impressions. This could be correct within a short-term framework. However, we must be sincere enough to admit that by objecting to the talks Denktas is again the winner because now he has bizonality in his grasp--provided that the pertinent press reports are correct.

Denktas' insistence on a stronger commitment on our part again shows the policy and the tactics of Ankara, the occupation army and of their men to grasp whatever we give and to demand even more. For this reason, at every fresh round of talks we set off from a lower point. If we let this course continue, then we are definitely being led toward the acceptance and legalization of the fait accompli.

The new developments of the UN secretary general's proposals, our new concession and the new confirmation of Turkish intransigence, necessitate a review of our policy and tactics.

The socialist party EDEK considers the new terms as a fresh concession and the danger of adopting the term bizonality to be a new painful step that goes beyond the 1977 proposals.

If we let things run undisturbed along their course, the situation we shall have to face will be the charting of borders and preventing the refugees' return to their homes.

It is argued by some quarters--such as AKEL--that by making concessions to Denktas and by ascribing responsibilities to the Greek Cypriot side, we come closer to the Turkish Cypriots and double enosis is prevented. But this stand has been proved wrong. The stooges of the occupation army are not satisfied with any concession. Such a policy does not so much help the Turkish Cypriot masses as it helps Denktas and those around him to vindicate his policy.

KHARAVYI SUPPORTS TALKS UNDER UN AUSPICES

NC100912 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 10 Jun 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Developments That Vindicate Us"]

[Excerpt] It is regrettable that the recent UN efforts for the resumption of the inter-Cypriot talks have reached a deadlock. The government has rightly decided to accept Dr Waldheim's "ideas" that were conveyed to the two sides by Mr Perez de Cuellar. Although the official text of the "ideas" has not been officially released, one can understand that they do not differ substantively from those which the UN secretary general submitted during August 1979 and the first part of 1980.

It was unacceptable for us at that time, when President Kiprianou and his government rejected the secretary general's formula. At this moment, however, we can say that the Denktas leadership is vulnerable because of its transgression during the meetings with the UN under secretary general. There is no doubt that the chauvinistic circles of Denktas and Turkey would have been in a much more difficult position if the Waldheim proposals--those submitted by his envoy on 23 August 1979 and during the first months of 1980--had not stumbled on the opposition of the president and the government.

Even though--in a negative manner--recent developments vindicate those who favor the holding of inter-Cypriot talks and not those who, under various pretexts, have been impeding the talks and have been playing the game of both the Denktas chauvinists and the expansionist circles in Turkey. It is our duty to knock more persistently on the door in an effort to seek a resumption of a substantive dialogue under the auspices and guidance of the UN secretary general, with the goal of arriving at an acceptable and agreed settlement of the internal aspects of the problem. Along with this, in the international field we must insist on the implementation of the appropriate processes which will resolve the international aspects of our problem, based on UN resolutions. There is no room to choose other ways for the peaceful solution of the Cyprus problem. In our case, there is nothing more correct than the line and tactics of the National-Ministerial Council as charted under Makarios' chairmanship in 1977. These are consistent with the four guidelines and our proposals together with a "draft map" on the territorial issue. It is imperative that we work consistently toward holding the inter-Cypriot talks under UN auspices. At the same time we must work for intercommunal rapprochement by implementing all possible measures. Insistence on and consistency with the opening and the holding of substantive talks will lead to a situation in which the chauvinists of Denktas and Turkey will find themselves in a very difficult position, because the great force of the Turkish Cypriot community will more actively walk with us.

ROLANDHIS COMMENTS ON NEGOTIATIONS IN KUWAITI PAPER

LD091332 Kuwait KUNA in English 1127 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] Kuwait, June 9 (KUNA)--Cypriot Foreign Minister Nikos Rolandhis reiterated government's opposition to the Camp David agreements on the Middle East "because they provide only a partial settlement for the problem." He said the agreements will not lead to durable peace because they were concluded in the absence of the Palestinian people and the PLO, their legal and sole representative.

The minister disclosed that certain parties were trying to impose another Camp David agreement on Cyprus and to legalise "the Turkish invasion of the island which took place in 1974." He accused the leader of the Turkish community Rauf Denktas "of doing his best during the past years to consolidate the island's occupation and partition."

Rolandhis reaffirmed that the government of President Spiros Kiprianou is working for implementation of the UN resolutions on the island and agreements concluded between the leaders of the Greek and Turkish communities. He added that his government still supports creation of a federal state comprising the two sectors and expressed hope that negotiations, initiated by the UN Secretary General Dr. Kurt Waldheim last January, would be resumed soon.

In an interview published [in] AR-RA'-Y AL-'AMM Monday, the foreign minister said that foreign military bases on the island were never used against the neighboring Arab countries since the independence of the island in 1960. Reports said that these bases were used against the Arabs and Iran during the Arab-Israeli wars of 1956, 1967 and 1973. But he refrained from answering a question as to why his government does not close these bases down. He said that his government is mainly concerned at present with reunifying the country and ending the Turkish occupation of 40 percent of its territories.

ACTING INTERIOR MINISTER EREN DISCUSSES IRAQI BORDER, CORUM

TA071348 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 7 Jun 80

[Excerpt] State Minister and Acting Interior Minister Orhan Eren said that Corum is now calm, that there are no barricades in the city and that the night curfew will be lifted soon. In a news conference he held in Ankara, Orhan Eren said that the security forces had taken control of the situation immediately after the incidents began in Corum and that mass terrorism had been prevented. He explained that 247 persons had been detained in connection with the incidents and that 120 of those had been arrested by the judiciary. He added that the security forces were continuing to check all parts of the city. Referring to the incidents that had occurred in Amasya's Merzifon and Suluova districts, Orhan Eren noted that following the measures taken by the authorities calm was now reigning in these districts. He said that 60 persons had been detained in connection with the incidents in Merzifon and that 7 of them had been arrested. He added that 6 of the 50 detained in Suluova were arrested as well.

In his news conference the acting interior minister also talked about his visits to Van, Hakkari, Mardin, Urfa and Gaziantep as well as certain districts and border police stations. Pointing out that he had close contacts with the citizens of Van, Makkari, Mardin and Urfa, Eren stressed that the terrorists and divisive forces that had been bothering the region for some time had lost their power to a great extent and that the citizens had great peace of mind now that they felt the state was beside them with all its might. He added that he had observed that the citizens who had left the region earlier were now getting ready to return to their homes and jobs following the harsh struggle the government was waging to ensure security and destroy illegal organizations.

Referring to the incident in which Iraqi helicopters had killed 10 Turks and wounded three Turks, Orhan Eren stressed that this act by the Iraqi Armed Forces was incompatible both with the historical friendship and brotherhood between the two countries as well as with the agreements between the two. Eren said: This act was inhuman. Eren pointed out that the government was seriously dealing with the issue. He added that today the governor of Hakkari and the governor of (Duhuk) in Iraq would hold a meeting on the issue.

RPP CRITICIZES JP GOVERNMENT DURING MINICONGRESS

Ecevit on Economy

TA081118 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 8 Jun 80

[Text] The RPP minicongress has begun in Ankara. Speaking at the congress, RPP leader Bulent Ecevit said that Turkey's domestic problems cannot be taken up independently from developments in other countries in the region and in the world.

Noting that domestic problems should be assessed in the light of foreign developments, Ecevit said: Although domestic and foreign problems are closely related, the policy currently being pursued in Turkey contradicts this fact. He noted that those who criticized the RPP government for making concessions to the West are now making concessions of Turkey's dignity. Commenting on the government's economic decisions, Ecevit said that unemployment, poverty and inflation are increasing each passing day. Pointing out that the lifting of control over interest rates constituted another step in the implementation of the South American model in Turkey, Ecevit said that his readjustment will be to the detriment of small- and medium-level industrialists. He added that the government was also introducing regulations aimed at discouraging and limiting exports to socialist countries. Noting that the vacuum created in this field will be filled by Western countries, Ecevit said: This is a very undignified concession being made by the Justice Party to Western countries.

Ecevit Call for Coalition

TA081901 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 8 Jun 80

[Excerpt] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit reiterated his call for the establishment of a coalition government with the participation of his party, the Justice Party [JP] and the National Salvation Party [NSP] for a transitional period and with the goal of saving the state and the democratic system. Ecevit was speaking at the RPP minicongress in Ankara. Noting that problems can only be solved by an efficient government, Ecevit said such a government could be established with the participation of certain political parties. Noting that the nature of parliament did not permit the establishment of an efficient government by only one party, Ecevit said that his proposal was not the result of personal ambition and that he did not contemplate becoming the prime minister of the government to be established.

Ecevit expressed his belief that with a united stand, a coalition government would be able to consolidate the shaken national unity, combat divisiveness and increase the state's effectiveness against terror. Ecevit said a coalition government which could be established by the RPP, the JP and the NSP would create an atmosphere for rapid police work without recourse to antidemocratic means. Ecevit added that issues on which no agreement could be reached could be postponed with common consent. Ecevit said each [coalition] member could continue to defend his programs and democratically exert efforts to present to the public his party's plans for the period after the coalition government. Ecevit continued: At the end of a certain period, such a government could relieve the Turkish Armed Forces of their obligation to maintain martial law and could realize the changes to be agreed upon in legislation concerning political parties and elections. He continued: Steps to be taken toward these objectives could be determined in a definite agenda to be prepared as the government was being formed, including a date for elections. If such a government could be formed, the objectives to be included in the protocol could be smoothly realized by the three parties forming the government. Ecevit said such a coalition government could create a peaceful working atmosphere between the employers and the workers through an agreement to be reached without curtailing any existing rights. This would help resolve the economic crisis, Ecevit said and added: The state, the nation and the democratic system cannot wait any longer. That is why I hope that a positive answer will be given as soon as possible to the detailed call I made in your presence. If such a reply does not come, then we shall have to make changes in the government through our own means.

Statement on Status of Nation

TA091731 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] A statement issued today following the RPP minicongress says: It is a national necessity for the present minority government to be changed as soon as possible. The statement was issued following the RPP minicongress which convened yesterday. [paragraph continues]

Pointing out that terrorist incidents had reached the dimensions of a civil war in places, the statement says certain administrative and security officials encourage and provoke terrorism. It adds that during terrorist incidents certain militants planted within the police force ignore the terrorists and attack the citizens being shot by the terrorists.

The statement says: In certain places citizens cannot go to police stations to ask for state protection. On the contrary, they think about ways in which they can protect themselves from the slander and torture of biased policemen assigned to those police stations. Responsible policemen of good will are also complaining about this situation. The murders which have been committed during the terrorist incidents--which have been escalating as a result of the government's biased attitude--increased fourfold or fivefold last month. The statement says that some districts and even provinces have been turned into the rightist militants' "liberated areas" and that in many places citizens cannot even read the newspaper they want but only the newspaper which the militants allow them to read. The RPP minicongress statement stresses that several public offices, including the National Education Ministry, have been turned into "liberated offices."

The statement says: The prosecutors, judges and policemen who want to discharge their duties honestly within the state mechanism--parts of which are under the control of rightist militants--are being threatened, pressured, even beaten up and incapacitated for performing their duties, as in the case of the Merzifon prosecutor, or are being trapped and murdered, as in the case of the Niksar prosecutor. The fact that certain circles have realized that the exploitive group which was dominant in this country for many years can no longer remain within a democratic system is the basis for the fascist oppression developing throughout the country which, at times, assumes the form of state terrorism.

Criticizing the economic model being implemented by the government, the statement points out that this model deprives the people from meeting even their most vital needs and threatens the small shopkeepers and artisans with bankruptcy. The statement says that on top of everything the government has paralyzed the legislative branch, thus preventing it from enacting social laws. It adds that it has become a national necessity that the government be changed as soon as possible. The statement says: Meeting this necessity is not only a duty of the opposition parties but also the Justice Party members themselves. The RPP minicongress statement also says that it is impossible to hold safe elections with the present government.

Justice Party Official's Response

TA091732 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] Justice Party deputy leader Yigit Koker has said that the only way to save Turkey from the economic, political and social crises created by the RPP and its leader Bulent Ecevit is to consult the national will and go to the polls. Commenting on the RPP minicongress statement in a written statement he issued in Ankara, Koker said: If, as he claims, Ecevit believes that the Turkish nation has lost its trust in the Justice Party and if he is not afraid of the Turkish nation, then he must agree to early elections without wasting time and without imposing any preconditions. The national will that will emerge from the early election results will show in whom our dear nation has lost its trust. Pointing out that the elections would be held under the supervision of the independent judiciary, Koker said: Has the RPP leader lost his trust in the independent judiciary as he has in the nation? Koker alleged that Ecevit and certain RPP legislators were provoking sectarianism. He also said that, when it was in power, the RPP turned the country into a nation of shortages.

GOVERNMENT, PAPANDREOU REACT TO REVELATION OF U.S. DOCUMENT

ATO91511 Athens TA NEA in Greek 9 Jun 80 p 16

[Excerpts] PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou describes as nationally and politically unacceptable the connections of the national security services with foreign services which, as was revealed yesterday in an article in a morning newspaper, aim at the gathering of information ("opening of dossiers") against parties, political organizations, trade unions and youth organizations.

Referring to the report, government circles stated the following:

"We do not know about it. We are not sure of the authenticity of the text. If it is genuine, it concerns an internal document regarding political services which was addressed to a U.S. service and it concerns 19 nations."

The government statement adds that: "Political observers have noted that no one knows which and how many more secret services of other states deal with the same or similar issues."

The full text of last night's statement by A. Papandreou is the following:

"The revelation by KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA of the gigantic and multitentacled information network of the U.S. Pentagon in a number of European countries, including Greece, is most significant. Of course it concerns a network of political and trade unionist intelligence and counterintelligence. With their infallible perception the Greek people have noted the activities of U.S. services in our country since the era of the Truman Doctrine as well as backstage intervention in the country's political life (violence and falsification in 1961, the royal coup in 1965, military coup in 1967, the 'colonels' coup against Makarios and Attila I and II and 1974).

"Direction 6 is of special significance. It concerns the connections of the Pentagon network with the security services and the police of the 'host country.' These connections constitute a direct alliance of national services with foreign services at the expense of popular sovereignty and democratic expression in the 'host countries' and for this reason they are nationally and politically unacceptable. This is precisely what we have in mind when we call on the government to proceed with the Hellenization of our state machine. The government's duty is not only to prevent the connection of our state services with foreign services--whichever they may be--but to actively protect the unimpeded exercise of all rights of our sovereign people without exception."

KREISKY COMMENTS ON QOTBZADEH'S UPCOMING OSLO VISIT

AU110850 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 11 Jun 80 p 3

[SK report. "Kreisky on Oslo Trip of Iranian Foreign Minister; Qotbzadeh Informs SI Leaders".

[Text] Vienna (SK)--The Iranian foreign minister's visit to Oslo this week at the time of the Socialist International [SI] bureau meeting is, so to speak, the follow-up meeting of the Tehran talks during which this visit was already arranged, since the intention is to stay in contact.

Sadeq Qotbzadeh cannot participate in the SI bureau session, but he is going to Oslo in order to give the SI bureau members more detailed information about developments in Iran as well as on the problem of the hostages. This was stated by Socialist Party [SPOe] Chairman Chancellor Kreisky [at a press conference] on Tuesday after the Cabinet session. Asked about further initiatives, Kreisky said that he would use any opportunity that might arise in the natural course of events, but that it was not possible to do anything beyond that.

Commenting on the Middle East situation, the SPOe chairman declared that what he had always feared had now come true: Israel's lack of readiness to talk with the Palestinians, the U.S. lack of readiness to come to the view that the PLO represents the Palestinians. Europe's hesitant attitude regarding this issue has led to a situation where the radical groups within the PLO were able to say that the peace efforts by the moderates had failed to produce any results. This attitude played into the hands of the more radical groups, he said.

However, it is necessary to make further efforts--not for the sake of the PLO but for the sake of the Palestinian people. For us, the PLO is the representative of the Palestinian people, Kreisky said, adding that he had no intention of censuring the PLO's policy.

NIGER'S FOREIGN MINISTER PAYS 4-DAY VISIT

AU091242 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 8 Jun 80 p 2

[Text] Daouda Diallo, minister of foreign affairs and cooperation of the Republic of Niger, will arrive in Austria today [8 June] for a 4-day official visit. He will have working talks with his host, Foreign Minister Pahr, will be received by President Kirchschlaeger and by Chancellor Kreisky, and meet with other government members. The program of the visit indicates that questions of economic and scientific cooperation will be in the forefront of Minister Diallo's Vienna talks.

Meets With Staribacher, Pahr

AU101331 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 10 Jun 80 p 2

[Summary] Daouda Diallo, minister of foreign affairs and cooperation of the Republic of Niger who arrived in Austria on Sunday, 8 June, for a 4-day visit, had a talk with Trade Minister Staribacher on Monday morning. At noon, he attended a luncheon given for him by Foreign Minister Pahr at the Vienna Bristol Hotel, and subsequently had working talks with Pahr at the Foreign Ministry. In his toast Diallo stressed that his government, like Austria's, was seeking to diversify its relations and to contribute toward equilibrium in the world.

Interest in Niger Railroad Project

AU101332 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 10 Jun 80 p 2

[Summary] Foreign Minister Pahr will pay an official visit to the Netherlands today, 10 June, which will primarily be devoted to Austrian problems with the European Community--discrimination against Austria in connection with Greece's joining the EC, and with the EC agricultural policy, as well as the Austrian wish for an EC participation in the financing of transit roads through Austria.

On Monday, 9 June, Pahr received an official visitor in Vienna: the foreign minister of the Republic of Niger. Austria is particularly interested in participating in the gigantic project of a 400 kilometer railroad line through Benin to the sea, at a total cost of 40 billion schillings.

After his return from the Netherlands, Pahr will receive another official visitor: Bangladesh Foreign Minister Shamsul Haq. In view of Bangladesh's good contacts with Pakistan, Pahr intends to discuss with his guest particularly the Afghanistan problem.

BALANCE OF TRADE DEFICIT RAPIDLY GROWING

AU101334 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 10 Jun 80 p 7

[Special report by Erich Hoorn]

[Summary] Vienna--In the first 4 months of this year Austria's foreign trade situation has drastically deteriorated. The balance of trade deficit has increased more in this period than during the entire year of 1979. In contrast to original estimates of a trade deficit of 77.1 billion schillings this year, the actual deficit might reach nearly 90 billion schillings this year, should the current trend continue. For the first time, even trade with CEMA countries shows deficits this year.

This negative development in the first 4 months of this year was due to a 28 percent imports increase, while exports went up 18 percent. The main burden came from the higher energy and raw material prices, but imports of consumer goods have also substantially increased.

Trade with the CEMA countries, which in the past was always marked by substantial Austrian surpluses, showed an Austrian deficit of 1.5 billion schillings in the first 4 months of this year: Exports went up 8.9 percent to 7.9 billion schillings while imports soared by 60.4 percent to 9.4 billion schillings. The East bloc countries profited from the mounting energy and raw materials prices and, at the same time, they took advantage of the open market.

BRIEFS

LARGE GDR ORDER--The "Industrieanlagen-Import" GDR foreign trade enterprise has placed an order worth 1.5 billion schillings with the Austrian Voest-Alpine Corporation. It provides for the planning and delivery of a "visebreaker" [English term used] plant, a distilling plant and loading equipment by the Voest-Alpine Chemieanlagenbau to the VEB [state-owned enterprise] Leuna chemical combine, within a period of 2 years. The new plants are to serve the refinement of oil products and their economically more efficient utilization. The new order has raised the volume of orders placed by the GDR with the Austrian company this year to 4 billion schillings. [Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 5 Jun 80 p 2 AU]

GENSCHER TALKS WITH PAKISTAN'S AGHA SHAHI ON AFGHANISTAN

LD101808 Hamburg DPA in German 1728 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher had a thorough exchange of views this evening with Pakistani Foreign Minister Agha Shahi, on the development of the Afghanistan conflict. The Pakistani minister, according to the Foreign Ministry, reported in this respect on the outcome of the recent conference of Islamic states in Islamabad and on the tasks set the three-member committee formed at that time.

Genscher, in his turn, underlined the Federal Government's view that the Afghanistan question could only be settled by political means leading to a withdrawal of Soviet troops. The Federal Government attributed great importance in this respect to the role of the states in this region and the work of the three-member committee formed in Islamabad, stressed the minister. Agha Shahi is a member of this three-member committee on Afghanistan.

GENSCHER MEETS WITH UN ANTI-APARTHEID CHAIRMAN

LD101904 Hamburg DPA in German 1758 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--According to UN Anti-Apartheid Chairman Akporode Clark (Nigeria), the Federal Republic is acting correctly in carrying out the UN resolutions on trade sanctions against South Africa. After talks with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Clark told journalists in Bonn today that there were still many loopholes in the conditions regulating the arms embargo. The UN delegate stated that South Africa was now at a crossroads which could lead neither to a peaceful settlement nor to armed conflict. All the signs pointed to the ruling white minority steering the country toward a bloody civil war. Clark described the recent "brutal action" toward demonstrating black schoolchildren as particularly reprehensible.

According to Clark, the subject of Namibia had also been broached during the meeting with Genscher, whereby the UN delegate stressed the German efforts to date to ensure for Southwest Africa a peaceful road to independence. However, if a solution to the Namibia problem is not found by next year at the latest, a "disaster" would result, Clark said. Genscher and Clark concurred during their meeting that the transfer of power in Zimbabwe could serve as a model for Namibia. According to a Foreign Ministry statement, the federal foreign minister made it clear that Bonn's policy, aimed at finding a peaceful solution to southern Africa, was also meant to help overcome racial barriers.

STRAUSS ASKS SCHMIDT TO NEGOTIATE SOVIET ARMS REDUCTION

LD091632 Hamburg DPA in German 1351 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Munich--CSU Chairman Franz Josef Strauss has again called on Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to negotiate, during his visit to Moscow, on the reduction of Soviet medium-range missiles which have already been deployed. If the chancellor returned from Moscow with the Kremlin's readiness to reduce the number of missiles already deployed, "that would be a respectable result for which we would not grudge our appreciation," he told journalists in Munich today after a meeting of the CSU Presidium.

In the light of current plans for the chancellor's visit the only result would be, he suggested, that both sides will agree not to deploy more missiles for 3 years. That would threaten to perpetuate the large Eastern superiority because the Soviets have already deployed 200 missiles armed with multiple warheads and a range of 5,000 kms. "Helmut Schmidt should take care not to become the Chamberlain of 1980." In 1938 British Prime Minister Chamberlain allowed Hitler a "tremendous triumph."

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG ON MBFR 'BOOKKEEPING' CONTROL

DW110816 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 11 Jun 80 p 4

[Commentary signed Ty.: "Control Would Build Confidence"]

[Text] The fluctuation of the Soviet Armed Forces in Eastern Europe has been the subject of confusing news reports for weeks. On the one hand, Western experts after some tug of war had agreed that the Soviet Union, complying with the Brezhnev initiative of last October, has withdrawn about 10,000 men--an armored division--from the GDR. On the other hand, news from U.S. intelligence sources is making the rounds according to which the troops of the Red Army are supposed to be reorganized and reinforced--by a total of 30,000 soldiers. Since Brezhnev had announced the pullout of 20,000 men, what remains would be an increase in divisional strength.

Viewed against the background of the general situation, it is possible to extensively speculate about this action, to the extent that it has been correctly recognized anyway. It also becomes clear, however, how important it would be to first have definite knowledge about troop movements. What continues to be lacking is a contractually ensured inspection and control procedure in Central Europe. A sort of "troop bookkeepers" would not be completely utopian. They have been under discussion since the mid-fifties as a sort of confidence-building measure. Just now, retired Bundeswehr Gen Christian Krause has described the continuity and chances of this diplomatic idea in a study of the Friedrich Ebert Foundation. The seven-point package of the Western MBFR delegation dated last December, too, contains a corresponding suggestion.

The troop bookkeepers would have to work according to the principle of balanced accounting, that is to say, keeping taps on the additions and reductions in the reduction area on the basis of negotiated figures. They would have to be allowed to carry out inspections and to exercise control at key points. All this is still a dream, but it also is tangible material for concrete East-West contacts prior to the European security conference in Madrid.

PCF, ISRAELI CP ISSUE JOINT STATEMENT

LD101011 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 6 Jun 80 p 10

[Unattributed report: "Recognition of the Palestinian People's Rights: Just Peace in the Middle East"]

[Text] A Communist Party of Israel delegation visited France from 28 May through 4 June 1980 at the PCF's invitation. It had important political discussions (Note: The following took part in the discussions: for the Communist Party of Israel--Politburo member Emile Touma and Central Control Commission Chairman Wolf Ehrlich; for the PCF--Politburo member and Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz; Central Committee member David Wizemberg and foreign policy section member Alain Gresh) after which the following joint statement was adopted:

The time period for negotiations on the Palestinian people's "autonomy" ended on 26 May 1980 and none of the problems behind the tension in the Middle East has yet been solved. The Palestinian question, which remains the key to any lasting settlement, has not even begun to be solved. As we predicted, none of the Palestinian people's fundamental rights has begun to be implemented almost 2 years after the Camp David agreements were signed.

Quite the reverse: The Israeli leaders have confirmed their annexation policy. The increase in places colonized, the installation of colonies within Palestinian cities, the expropriation of land, curfews, arrests, expulsions (like the illegal expulsion of three leading Hebron figures) form the daily lot of the populations on the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip. Oppression in the occupied territories has now reached an unequaled and intolerable level. The murderous and criminal attacks on the mayors of Nabulus, Ramallah and Al-Birah reflect this dangerous state of affairs.

The Israeli occupation is also continuing in southern Lebanon; daily bombings are continuing against the Palestinian and Lebanese populations and hundreds of thousands of people have been displaced. These actions, which are aimed at breaking the Palestinian people's resistance to the Camp David agreements, are doomed to failure.

In the framework of its offensive against detente and since the Camp David agreements served to strengthen its alliances and military presence in the region, the United States is giving Mr Begin's government the means of pursuing this policy. At the same time it is developing its relations with reactionary forces in Egypt and other Arab countries. The creation of a quick reaction force in the region, the increased number of military bases, the U.S. leadership's adventurism, which was once more confirmed in the abortive operation against Iran, are creating a grave situation and could lead to a generalized conflict.

This policy disregards the interests of the peoples in the region, including the Israeli people. The Israeli people--thanks to the continuation of the policy of war and annexation--are facing a regular attack on their standard of living, rights, achievements and freedoms. Israel is sinking into a serious economic, social, political and moral crisis for which the workers are paying. One aspect of the developing situation is, moreover, the emergence of a movement which is gradually gaining strength, calling the government's policy in question, opposing the settlements and advocating peace.

Only the application of the UN resolutions can establish a just, all-embracing and lasting peace. In specific terms this means Israel's withdrawal from all the territories occupied since 1967, recognition of the Palestinian people's inalienable rights, including their right to build an independent state and participation by the PLO--the Palestinian people's one legitimate representative--in all phases of negotiations. Only such a solution will guarantee peace and security for all states in the region including Israel.

Thanks to the PCF's struggle, a vast movement supporting a just peace in the region and recognition of the Palestinian people's rights has grown up in France. After President Giscard d'Estaing's statements on the Palestinians' right to self-determination the PCF has been pursuing its efforts to force the French Government to independently take all the initiatives which would enable real peace to be restored in the Middle East.

The Communist Party of Israel will further intensify its struggle to achieve a change of government and policy, to defend the working people's interests, to end oppression and discrimination against the Arab national minority and to open the way to a just and lasting peace.

The two parties call on men and women in their respective countries who love peace and freedom to give active support to a just solution. All those who are attached to the principle of self-determination, who refuse to see Palestinian national rights flouted and denied, who want Israel to be able to live in peace, should unite their efforts. Peace in the region largely depends on the broadest common action.

In conclusion the two delegations expressed satisfaction at the relations of friendship and cooperation which exist between the two parties. The September 1979 meeting--and the joint communique adopted--and today's meeting are tangible signs of their common will to extend and strengthen their ties.

CANADIAN MINISTER ENDS VISIT, ASSERTS 'INDEPENDENT' POLICY

LD091009 Paris LE MONDE in French 8-9 Jun 80 p 3

[Unattributed report: "Deputy Prime Minister Affirms That His Country Has 'an Independent Foreign Policy'"]

[Text] Canadian Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister Allan MacEachen left Paris on Thursday, 5 June, at the end of a 4-day official visit during which he met with Mr Raymond Barre and with Mr Francois-Poncet, Mr Monory and Mr Giraud. In addition Mr MacEachen attended the OECD council of ministers' meeting on 3 and 4 June.

Mr MacEachen, who in 1977 was co-president of the conference on international economic cooperation (more commonly known as North-South dialogue), recalled that he is still faithful to this organization's basic idea of restricting itself to a number of representative countries avoiding the snares connected with setting up a universal forum. "I believe that President Giscard d'Estaing was right to seek a structure other than the United Nations and I do not think this path is completely closed," he explained.

Mr MacEachen refused to comment on the recent Giscard d'Estaing-Brezhnev meeting in Warsaw but told us that Canada "while being very close to the United States has an independent foreign policy which Europe sometimes seems not to realize."

LE FIGARO CHIDES EUROPE FOR WEAKENING ATLANTIC ALLIANCE

LD101451 Paris LE FIGARO in French 6 Jun 80 pp 1, 4

[Patrick Wajsman article: "Our Friend, Our Ally"]

[Text] The Europeans are playing with fire. In fact, hardly a week goes by without these enfants terribles criticizing their American ally, sententiously listing his blunders and challenging the little credibility which he retains, thus contributing to the weakening of the Atlantic Alliance.

Exactly 36 years after the landing in Normandy, this situation makes me think and worries me. I do not mean that gratitude should be reveled in for all time because, as we know, politics hardly tolerate this kind of mawkishness. It is rather a question of logics.

I would like the reader to understand me. I am in no way a supporter of systematic alignment with Washington nor has my name ever appeared on the CIA or State Department payroll. Nor do I believe that Jimmy Carter is a good president. I merely observe that we have no choice. That until 4 November 1980, at any rate, it will be he who--baring an accident--will preside over the fortunes of the United States; only he will be able to help us to withstand the cold winds blowing from the East; only he will have sufficient resources to make any possible enemies of the West realize that they have gone too far.

And this is why I regret that instead of helping America to overcome its own weaknesses, the Europeans are inclined to take the view that solidarity has become a useless and embarrassing luxury.

Do you want an example of this? A few days ago, Jean Francois-Poncet announced that because of the "insufficiency" of the progress achieved in Israeli-Egyptian negotiations, the Nine were preparing to take a new initiative with respect to the Near East. Meaning, an initiative more favorable to the Palestinians and, consequently, the PLO.

Whether such an effect is desired or not, this kind of profession of faith is bound to embarrass the United States at the very moment when it is desperately trying to free the mechanism set up at Camp David. Hence my question: Was it absolutely necessary for Europe to challenge publicly its American ally's ability to mediate, in defiance of Washington's sensitivity Cairo's skepticism and Jerusalem's irritation? For there are only two possibilities here:

Either the EC nine really feel sure that their "plan" will make it possible to extricate the negotiations from the morass. And in this case why did they not simply make America benefit from their brilliant idea? After all, peace is well worth a modicum of self-sacrifice and modesty....

Or, by courting the PLO and its Arab supporters, the Europeans are merely seeking to protect the EEC's oil supplies. But in that case let them not be unduly surprised if the White House is unwilling to believe in the highly altruistic nature of their initiative!

Let me add, in passing, that Europe is hardly in a position to impose time limits and deadlines on the As-Sadat-Begin-Carter team and pass judgement on the "insufficiency" of its progress. [paragraph continues]

In fact, in the name of what revealed truth? Could it tell these men--who have managed to do in 30 months what it has been unable to do in 30 years--how they should behave? If the leaders of the old continent genuinely wish, as they assert to "prevent the destabilization of the Near East," they should perhaps begin by asking Yasir 'Arafat what is the precise meaning of the communique just published by the office of which he is the head in which the following fine example of pacifist literature can be read: "Our aim is to liberate all Palestine and liquidate the Zionist enemy."

Such an effort at clarification would be salutary and would at least have the merit of not hindering the courageous conciliation action taken by Washington....

However, the Israeli-Arab conflict is, unfortunately, not the only beef against which transatlantic solidarity now breaks. And I do not believe that I will be guilty of exaggeration if I recall that the Europeans are equally reluctant to join up with the United States over the Afghan and Iranian affairs. Nor do I feel that I will be at variance with truth if I write that the governments of the Old World--from Bonn to Paris--have evolved a whole gamut of arguments made to measure to justify "rationally" their reservations or their passiveness. The only trouble is that these arguments are perfectly reversible. Judge for yourself.

First, Iran. You can say: Let us do nothing; let us not punish Tehran because if we do we will drive Khomeyni into the Russian's arms. But you can also say the opposite: Let us act; let us penalize captors of the hostages because passiveness on our part would give the Russians the impression that they could seize Iran without risking our wrath.

Similarly, you can say: Sanctions against Tehran are useless and ineffective; this has been made obvious by the fact that hostages are still in prison. The answer to this is that quiet diplomacy and persuasion have so far failed to achieve better results....

And, second, Afghanistan. You can say: Let us be satisfied with criticizing the Soviets verbally and calling the Kabul coup "unacceptable" because by penalizing Moscow we would forsake any possibility of a political solution.

But you can also say the opposite, namely: Let us make clear to the Kremlin our determination because history has shown that every time a united West has offered resistance, the Soviets have retreated.

Similarly, you can say: Let us just be persuasive because by appearing excessively intransigent we would play into the hands of Politburo "hawks" and deprive "doves" of any opportunity. To which the answer is that by offering no resistance to the "hawks" we prove to them in black and white that their attitude pays and, at the same time, deprive the "doves" of their highest trumps.

Let the reader set his mind at rest--let me repeat this--to remind him that it is always possible to find bogus good reasons for withdrawing support from America. That imperfect, excessive and often insufferable America which we have nonetheless always found on the right side of the barricade at decisive moments when destiny was in balance. I wish that the leaders of the old continent did not forget this too quickly and had the courage to understand:

First, that it is not by opposing their best ally, especially at a time of peril, that they will increase their strength and independence. With all due deference to certain people, the enemy is in Moscow, not in Washington. And a mediocre U.S. president is better than a good Soviet head of state.

And, second, that it is absurd to hope that the Americans will forever assume the burden of the free world's defense...while letting us calmly profit from the benefits of detente in Europe.

The Atlantic ship is leaking all over. Let us at last decide to stop its gates instead of stupidly playing at emptying the ocean!

BOURGES CITED ON ROLE OF RESERVISTS, MEDITERRANEAN SECURITY

LD110735 Paris LE MONDE in French 10 Jun 80 p 11

[Unattributed report on French Defense Minister Yvon Bourges 8 June speech in Nice: "New Mobilization Plan Envisages Entrusting Peacetime Officering Duties to 130,000 Reserve and Noncommissioned Officers"]

[Text] Defense Minister Yvon Bourges confirmed Sunday in Nice the need to maintain a drafted army and to strengthen the contribution of reserve personnel, "who would enable our forces to mobilze quickly in the event of a threat to our country's security." Speaking at the 49th Congress of the National Union of Reserve Officers, which ended Sunday evening presided over by Mr Bourges himself, the minister said that "the draft is the best means of maintaining the spirit of the nation's defense, and it strengthens detente, the basis of our military policy, by showing a potential attacker that the will to resist him will extend as far and as long as necessary.

With regard to the army, Mr Bourges announced that "several thousand assignments for reserve officers will be announced within the framework of the present mobilization plan and the setting up of all units corresponding to regular army units." Indeed, every regular army unit can mobilize a reserve unit.

In the navy a larger number of reserve officers will be recruited to protect sensitive installations, to monitor defense activities in port or coastal areas and for naval monitoring and to strengthen the general staff of the port admirals. In the air force 240 officers will be assigned supplementary mobilization assignments.

In the gendarmerie starting next year the mobilized officer corps will be strengthened by 75 reserve officers from this force and another 140 from the army. At the same time there will be more "individual assignments for setting up and mobilizing the civil defense corps, the supply service and certain state services," the minister said; these plans should "affect over 20,000 reserve cadres."

"Indeed," Mr Bourges concluded, "it is important to provide officers for the reserve units in peacetime...with almost 40,000 reserve officers and over 90,000 reserve noncommissioned officers from the three forces and the gendarmerie."

In Toulon

The previous day the defense minister attended a conference organized in Toulon by university circles on the subject of Mediterranean security. The defense minister emphasized the strengthening of the fleet based in Toulon and the deployment of the aircraft carriers Foch and Clemenceau, to which have been added a missile-launching cruiser and two antiaircraft frigates.

"Nevertheless," Mr Bourges concluded, "the security of national territory is still based on deterrence and over the past 5 years, almost one-third of our military budget, which has more than doubled, has been devoted to nuclear weapons.

ANSA Analysis

AU102030 Rome ANSA in English 1945 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] Rome, June 10 (ANSA)--The government led by Christian Democrat Premier Francesco Cossiga emerged strengthened from the administrative elections held in Italy Sunday and Monday. Political observers did not see any broadening of the present parliamentary majority in one direction or another, at least for the short-term.

The ruling alliance of Christian Democrats (DC), Socialists (PSI) and Republicans (PRI) saw itself come under fire from the right and the left during the electoral campaign. The Communists (PCI), Italy's second largest party and the chief opposition force, called on the electorate to repudiate the tripartite formula, considered by them to be too far to the right. The Social Democrats (PSDI) and Liberals (PLI) also asked voters to deprive the government of support, claiming that it leaned too far left with a view to future agreements with the Communists.

The results of the Sunday-Monday balloting, although for regional, provincial and communal council seats, nevertheless, took on nationwide political significance, indicating that the majority would stay the way it is and that the government, as DC Secretary Flaminio Piccoli put it, "is not a bridge to anyone".

Political analysts noted, however, that while the Social Democrats and the Liberals made gains over the 1979 political elections, the Communists did not, indicating that in the future any eventual enlargement of the majority would be more likely in the direction of the former than that of the latter.

Within the government parties, the factions in favor of the present coalition have been strengthened, while the leftwing factions within the DC and the PSI have seen prospects dimmed for any resumption of the so-called "national unity" policy (that is, cooperation with the PCI).

The election results have also strengthened the Cossiga government on an international plane on the eve of U.S. President Jimmy Carter's trip to Italy. (Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo is currently in Washington). Important international meetings are also soon to be held in Venice.

The chief architect of the consolidation of the majority is the PSI, given the fact that voters apparently responded to Socialist Secretary Bettino Craxi's call to ensure the governability of the nation (after the PSI return to the government along with the DC) by supporting an executive formula that holds a majority in the Parliament for the first time in six years. The success of the Socialists was accompanied by a DC advance over the regional elections of 1975 (up 1.5 percent) although the DC suffered a drop compared to last year's political elections (down 1.3). The Republican Party managed to hold its own in the latest administrative balloting.

The Communists lost votes compared to the previous administrative elections and to a much lesser degree, compared to the political elections in 1979. Nevertheless, the strong downward trend noted after big PCI gains in 1975 and 1976 seems to have been halted. It remains to be seen what effect the results will have on regional provincial and communal power centers. Attention is riveted particularly on the regions where the Communists won stunning victories in 1975, wresting power from the DC in Piedmont, Liguria and Lazio. The balance of power may now change in these three regions.

The PSI can tip the scales of future coalitions. Since it is in the central government with the DC, it could transfer this formula to the regional level by allying itself with this party instead of with the Communists. The Social Democrats and Republicans could also figure into the picture by backing one front or another.

One important characteristic of these latest elections was the high percentage of Italians who obtained or who cast blank or void ballots. More than 17 percent of the electorate withheld their vote from any party in this way. This was what the Radical Party had asked the electorate to do. However, it was noted that around 10 percent of eligible Italian voters normally do not take part in elections. This would mean that only around 7-8 percent of the electorate followed the suggestion of the Radicals to abstain or cast an invalid ballot, a figure that was significant but not earthshaking.

MINISTER FOR EC COMMENTS ON GISCARD STATEMENT

LD101405 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 7 Jun 80 p 11

[Unattributed report: "Spanish Government Denies That There Are Grounds for Interrupting Negotiations With EEC"]

[Excerpt] The Spanish Government yesterday made known its stance in response to French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's statements on postponing the entry of new members into the EEC. In an official note approved by the Cabinet, the government denies that there are grounds for interrupting the negotiations or affecting the political commitment "so frequently reiterated to Spain by the governments of the Nine and, very notably, by the president of the French Republic himself." For his part, Minister for Relations With the EC Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo described Giscard's statements as the "gravest incident" in the history of the negotiations between Spain and the EEC. Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo began his statement to journalists at the press conference which followed the Cabinet meeting by reading out the following official note from the government on French President Giscard d'Estaing's statements:

"The government has examined the president of the French Republic's statements to the conference of the chambers of agriculture on the EC's internal problems and the consequences which they could have with respect to the entry of new members.

"Before formally expressing its opinion on the matter, the government believes that it should wait for the EC to determine its own stance and for the French Government to specify the significance of the president's new stance, which seems to attribute to the applicants difficulties created in other member countries.

"However, the government wishes to express its conviction that neither the internal measures which the EC should adopt to tackle its own problems nor its economic or other circumstances need interrupt the course of the negotiations or affect the political commitment so frequently reiterated to Spain by the governments of the Nine and, very notably, by the president of the French Republic himself. Nor do they affect Spain's European vocation, unanimously affirmed in the Cortes, or the Spanish people's right to join the EC in accordance with the timetable and the reasonable terms resulting from the negotiations themselves."

The minister for relations with the EC commented on the official note and announced that work will be continued until the EC adopts some stance on this matter; only yesterday a further negotiatory meeting, attended by Ambassador Esteban Bassols, took place in Brussels. He denied that Giscard's grave statements had any connection with the alleged clash between Calvo Sotelo himself and [EC Commission] Vice President Natali. He referred to the incongruity of the French stance, which, in any case, does not represent a veto.

Calvo Sotelo stated that Spain's stance is opposed to renegotiating the 1970 agreement, because Spain believes that it is not imbalanced in its favor, whereas the EEC believes that it underestimated Spain's industrial potential. He added that the problems which Britain and Spain may pose for the EEC are not homologous, and so it cannot be held that Giscard's stance stems from the EC's concessions to Mrs Thatcher.

The minister for relations with the EC did not share a journalist's assessment about the "feebleness" of the Spanish official protest, and stated that the government should not act rashly, since after the 1981 French elections "many things will be different in France, including, possibly, the official stance on Spain's entry into the EEC." Answering a question put by another journalist, he stated that he had no knowledge of any contact between King Juan Carlos and President Giscard.

SALVADORAN OPPOSITION MEETS SWISS, INTERNATIONAL FIGURES

PA100143 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1333 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] Geneva, 9 June (EFE)--A Revolutionary Democratic Front [FDR] delegation from El Salvador met today in Geneva with Swiss political personalities and representatives of international organizations. The delegation, composed of Mauricio Silva, former planning deputy minister for the first Salvadoran junta; Ruben Zamora, former presidential minister; and architect Cesar Marti, is visiting several European countries. Today they met with representatives of the International Red Cross, the high commissioner for refugees and leaders of the main leftist Swiss parties.

According to press statements the FDR delegation's visit "is to inform the international public on the Salvadoran situation which is not a civil war, but a military junta pitted against the people." Another purpose of the tour through Europe of the Salvadoran opposition delegation is to emphasize that all the democratic forces fighting the military junta have united into the GDR which currently represents "the only political alternative open to save the country from a situation of conflict and fratricidal struggles."

The FDR delegation will leave tomorrow for Italy where it will meet with Italian political and labor leaders within its "public opinion crusade," which is the main purpose of the trip.

DECISION AGAINST SEPARATE TANK DEVELOPMENT STANDS FIRM

[Article signed Zy.: "An Epilogue to the Tank Decision"]

[Excerpt] Berne 5 June--Three motions and one interpellation of the Federal Council's waiver of further domestic development of a new Swiss combat tank once again elicited an extensive tank debate in the National Assembly. However, the motions did not prevail with their crucial demand that the Federal Council reconsider the decision or to present concrete applications for continued domestic development directly. With clear majorities the Council dismissed these motions to the noncommittal stage of postulates, to the extent that the backers of the motions themselves had not already shifted to that course of action.

Federal President Chevallaz, in his report on the decision of the Federal Council, voiced understanding for the objections brought up by the backers of the motions. The renunciation of a combat tank developed and manufactured in Switzerland, a renunciation which is being criticized primarily under the aspect of enhanced dependency on foreign countries and of a threatening loss of know-how by our industry in this sector, was obvious, however, because the risk and the costs of this venture were too high and the potential period before the delivery of the new tank to the armed forces was too long. Low estimates of costs amounting to 500 million Swiss francs for development alone had been envisaged, which would have been lost in the event of a failure. The replacement of the counterattack tank with a new model which would measure up to foreign tanks is to begin in the mid-eighties. This will be possible only if we decide on a foreign tank that has already been tested. It is planned that this tank will be built in Switzerland under license so that our industry will gain maximum employment and the know-how will be retained, thus keeping open the option of subsequently developing a domestic tank. This initially vague promise of future domestic developments may well gain in weight if it is fitted into arms planning with concrete measures. Considering the long periods of time required by such projects, decisions will have to be made in the near future.

GISCARD STAND ON EXPANDED EEC MEMBERSHIP REJECTED

LD110025 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 8 Jun 80 pt 1 p 32

[RITZAUS Bureau report: "Danish No to French Halt to New EEC Countries"]

[Text] Denmark will not agree to any change in the timetable for Spanish and Portuguese admission to the EEC, which French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing wants postponed.

Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen said that it is "the Danish Government's unequivocal view that the EEC ought to be enlarged to include Greece, Spain and Portugal, and that Denmark has always emphasized that the EEC must not be thought of as the rich nations' exclusive club."

It is a long time since the Folketing ratified the admission of Greece with effect from January 1981. On the subject of Spanish and Portuguese membership the Danish foreign minister said that "these negotiations are progressing according to plan, with a view to admission in 1983."

Kjeld Olesen admits that there are considerable practical problems and that areas such as wine and olives will prove difficult in the negotiations because the new member nations will mean greater competition for the French farmers.

Giscard d'Estaing made his announcement at a meeting with French farmers the other day. Political observers are of the opinion that this change in French policy must be seen in the light of next year's presidential election. The French Government has up to now supported the admission of the three new countries to an enlarged EEC.

SHAMIR: EEC WILL LOSE CREDIBILITY FOR ISRAEL IF PLO RECOGNIZED

LD110903 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 7 Jun 80 pt 2 p 1

[Report on Anders Jerichow interview with Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir: "Begin's Man in Europe"--date, place not given]

[Text] "How many more settlements will Israel build in Judaea and Samaria?--I do not know; I do not know the plan; Perhaps it was adopted before I became a minister."

So said none other than Israel's own foreign minister, who has just been a guest in Denmark during a round trip to a number of European countries.

His name is Yitzaq Shamir, a little shriveled man with bushy eyebrows who traveled to Europe to warn the EEC against recognizing the PLO--a mission that proved successful for him in Denmark, where Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen assured the Israeli after talks that Denmark does not think that the time is right for recognition of the PLO.

Success or no success, the talks do not seem to have made much of an impression on Yitzhaq Shamir who is obviously tired of receiving "good advice" and critical questions on his trip about the West Bank, to which he refers by the biblical names of Judaea and Samaria, about the occupation of the area, which he calls "liberation," and about the settlements, "whose importance is exaggerated by the West."

The taciturn foreign minister did not know of the plan for the establishment of further Israeli settlements, but he was able to say that "the Israeli population in the settlements only amounts to a few thousand people. They cannot alter the character of the area."

"It is our right to build these settlements," Shamir said, and he emphasized this at his meeting with Kjeld Olesen. "But we have to live with the fact that our European friends do not agree with us on this point. The settlements are a defense for Israel's security, and they have come to stay. We do not build settlements to pull them down again. This is why we will not negotiate on their removal," the Israeli foreign minister said.

"People think that Israel is a great imperialist power while, in reality, it is quite a small country which feels threatened by much larger forces.

"You must understand that we are not interested in ruling over another people, over the Palestinian Arabs. And right now we are trying to negotiate how they can come to make decisions about their own lives," the foreign minister continued. After his meeting with Kjeld Olesen he is not prepared to say whether he thinks that the EEC will now refrain from "meddling" in the talks between Egypt, Israel and the United States.

"If it happens that the EEC recognizes the PLO as the only spokesman for the Palestinian Arabs, it will lose all credibility in Israel's eyes," Yitzhaq Shamir said. "It cannot claim to be making a contribution to a peaceful solution to the conflict if it accepts the PLO, which is the most extremist party in the conflict and which has just repeated its resolve to devastate Israel.

"I do not know what their motives would be in considering such a change in policy that would benefit the PLO. Pressure applied through the oil weapon could be part of the explanation. But we in Israel are directly threatened by the whole of the Arab bloc, by oil and by the terrorist movements which have Soviet support. And we must ask ourselves: Is it this bloc that Europe wants to follow?"

If Shamir did come to Europe to warn the EEC against recognizing the PLO, he admits the dilemma in the present--for the moment interrupted--negotiations: that Israel and Egypt are negotiating autonomy for the Palestinian Arabs without the participation of the Palestinians themselves.

"What can we do? There are today no Palestinian leaders willing to enter negotiations, chiefly because of pressure from the PLO. It is not a pleasant situation. But we must continue negotiations nevertheless, for in the Middle East things can change quickly again. The Egyptians showed this when they took no time at all to recognize us and enter into peace negotiations."

Yitzhaq Shamir admits that developments on the West Bank are not promising at the moment with the latest violent actions against Jewish settlers and Arab mayors. "But it will die down again. The country is so small that we--Arabs and Jews--are forced to live together. And because of this we will find a solution that is acceptable to all of us."

[Question] And do you believe this yourself?

[Answer] Of course. I have to.

STORTING BACKS JAN MAYEN ACCORD WITH ICELAND

LD110835 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 7 Jun 80 p 8

[Unattributed report: "Jan Mayen Agreement Accepted: Best for Fishing in Long Term"]

[Excerpt] The Storting has given its approval to the Jan Mayen agreement between Norway and Iceland by 122 votes to 8. In yesterday's debate it was clearly emphasized that the agreement's weak point is the short-term consequences for fishing, and one speaker after another voiced his understanding of the dissatisfaction among fishing circles. But at the same time it was asserted that, in the long term and in a broader perspective, it is to the fishing industry's advantage that the agreement was signed.

PROTEST MADE TO DENMARK OVER NEW GREENLAND FISHING ZONE

LD110831 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 6 Jun 80 p 9

[Morten Fyhn report: "Denmark's East Greenland Zone: Norwegian Protest to Coopenhagen"]

[Text] Norway and Denmark are on a clear collision course over the question of where the demarcation line between the Jan Mayen fishing zone and the new zone off east Greenland should be drawn. On Wednesday the Norwegian Government sent a protest note to Denmark dismissing the Danish demand that the Greenland zone be fully effective to a distance of 200 nautical miles from the coast.

The distance between the two coasts is less than 400 nautical miles and Norway therefore accuses Denmark of violating the general principles of international law by allowing the zone to remain in force beyond the median line, without having entered an agreement with Norway about this. The note states that Norway will uphold the Jan Mayen zone regulations right up to the median line, and at the same time expresses the hope that Norway and Denmark can reach agreement through negotiation as soon as possible on a final demarcation line.

But there is little danger that there will be conflict in the area since the importance of fishing in the area is only small. Denmark has also made it clear that its jurisdiction will not be upheld beyond the median line. In other words, with a view to the coming negotiations Norway has voiced its reservations about accepting the Danish claim that the east Greenland zone applies to its full extent.

Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund did not attempt to conceal the fact that the negotiations will be difficult when he spoke to AFTENPOSTEN. He emphasized that the median line must serve as a basis for the negotiations.

In its reasoning on the matter, Denmark voices exactly the same views on Jan Mayen as Iceland did in its conflict with Norway, namely, that Norway does not have a right to its own zone here and to the continental shelf. Then Norway accepted that the Icelandic zone would remain in force to its full 200 miles in the direction of Jan Mayen. Norway maintains that Iceland was a special case because of the country's great dependence on fishing.

In the Norwegian view, the case is very different with Denmark and the east Greenland zone, both because the Greenlanders themselves hardly do any fishing in the waters and because the zone will in reality be an EEC zone.

Norway is careful not to show the EEC's fishermen the same leniency that it showed Iceland's.

The area of the overlap between the Jan Mayen zone and the east Greenland zone totals 80,000 square kilometers--over three times the size of the disputed area between Jan Mayen and Iceland.

Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen was in Oslo on 31 May, the day before Denmark set up the Greenland zone, to try to reach agreement on the demarcation line with Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund. The talks between the two did not lead to a solution, and Denmark established a full 200-mile zone. So Norway responded with the note. Negotiations between the two countries are planned for September. The Greenland authorities maintain that the fishing zone around Greenland must be one of 200 nautical miles, chairman of the Greenland Government (Prime Minister) Jonathan Motzfeldt said in a comment on the Norwegian note, the NORWEGIAN NEWS AGENCY reports.

Motzfeldt stressed that the Greenland fishing fleet does not want to resort to means that will lead to an open fishery conflict between Norway, Greenland and Denmark, but it will have to be the Norwegians who make the concessions.

VISITING PRC FOREIGN MINISTER WARNS OF SOVIET THREAT

LD101112 Stockholm International Service in Swedish to Europe and the Middle East 1000 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua will meet this afternoon with Prime Minister Torbjorn Falldin, with whom he will have talks which are expected to deal with increased trade between China and Sweden.

Following yesterday's talks with Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten, Huang Hua said that China and Sweden in many respects share the same views on world peace and threats against it. The Chinese foreign minister warned Sweden and the Nordic countries that the Soviet Union's expansionist foreign policy might threaten them as well. He was of the opinion that the invasion of Afghanistan has to be viewed as yet further proof of Soviet aspirations for world domination.

AKEL LEADER BLAMES U.S., NATO FOR RECENT TALKS FAILURE

NC102021 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] A tumultous gathering was held by AKEL tonight at Elevtheria Square in Nicosia where AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou spoke. Among other things, Mr Papaioannou said that the main ones responsible for the UN secretary general's unsuccessful attempts to resume and positively continue the intercommunal talks were U.S. imperialism and NATO, which want to impose their solution for the Cyprus issue. He also said that the Ankara government in particular, the chauvinistic circles of Turkey in general, the Turkish Cypriot leader, Mr Denktas, and the rest of the reactionary Turkish Cypriot leadership were also greatly responsible for the failure.

Mr Papaioannou stressed that neither President Kiprianou nor the Greek Cypriot side were responsible for the failure of UN Under Secretary General Perez de Cuellar's latest efforts to resume the intercommunal talks. Nevertheless, he said, the Perez de Cuellar formula that President Kiprianou and the Greek Cypriot side have accepted is almost the same as the previous formulas that AKEL criticized the president and his government for not handling correctly.

He continued: If the August 1979 formula and the other formulas that were almost identical to the latest one--which we accepted--were handled correctly, Denktas would have been more exposed and the UN secretary general would not have been able to blame our side as well in his report.

The AKEL secretary general elucidated that he had nothing personal against the president of the republic and accused him of disagreeing with the four guidelines of the Makarios-Denktas agreement and the line that Makarios developed in the National and Ministerial Councils in February and March of 1977. Papaioannou said that the president conformed to this line after he issued a relevant statement. He added: In the 3-year period of his presidency it has taken him a long time to start talking about biregional federation after speaking about the alleged federation for quite awhile.

Mr Papaioannou also criticized the president of the republic and the government for not adopting political decisions based on the four guidelines and for not preparing a draft constitution for a biregional federation. He also criticized them on the issues of the rapprochment of Greek and Turkish Cypriots, the purges, the economic problems and taxes, saying that for these reasons AKEL was compelled to separate its responsibilities from that of the president and his government and that he had given them credit for nearly 3 years.

Mr Papaioannou denied that AKEL's decision came after advice from Moscow and precluded cooperation with the Democratic Rally as well as with EDEK.

Finally, he said that AKEL believed that a radical and substantive change was needed in the entire situation and called on the people's patriotic democratic forces, which, he said, agreed with the line on the Cyprus solution as it was decided by the National and Ministerial Councils under Makarios' presidency in 1977, to unite and cooperate with AKEL in order to realize this change.

GOVERNMENT SOURCE RESPONDS TO ERKMEN COMMENT ON DEFENSE

AT101839 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1800 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] Referring to Turkish Foreign Minister Erkmen's interview which was published in a Turkish newspaper, a competent government source observed that the Greek Government does not dispute any state's competency to organize its defense according to its own judgement. It is self-evident, however, that the Greek Government is also interested in Greece's defense. For precisely this reason it hopes that the balance of forces will not be disturbed in its area because it guarantees a level of defense which corresponds to the circumstances.

FOREIGN MINISTER MITSOTAKIS CONDEMNS WEST BANK VIOLENCE

AT101852 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1800 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] In reply to questions by journalists connected with recent events in the occupied Arab lands, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis made the following statement: Consistent with its principles the Greek Government condemns the use of violence in the West Bank and specifically the arbitrary persecution of the elected mayors of that land. The fact that the Security Council has recently repeatedly condemned these acts of violence demonstrates the seriousness of the issue and the danger that similar acts may cause further deterioration of the situation in the area.

KKE (INTERIOR) SECRETARY REACTS TO DOCUMENT REVELATION

AT101511 Athens I AVYI in Greek 10 Jun 80 p 1

[Text] The KKE (Interior) Central Committee secretary, Comrade S. Dhrakopoulos, made the following statement:

"The documents which were published in KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA prove--not for the first time--that the activity of the U.S. services constitute not only a cynical trampling upon our country's national independence but also a direct danger to the freedoms and lives of Greek citizens through the erosion of the national services and of the armed forces. Finally, they constitute a danger to our country's national security.

"This activity of the U.S. services is inconceivable without the existence of connections in our country which are linked with our participation in NATO and the more general relations between the United States and Greece on the basis of the well-known agreements.

"The revelation stresses the importance of the duty of withdrawal from NATO and the restructuring of relations with the United States on a basis that will protect our independence and state sovereignty as well as our national security."

KKE (INTERIOR) RESOLUTION URGES STRUGGLE AGAINST RIGHT

AT101459 Athens I AVYI in Greek 10 Jun 80 p 6

[Political resolution by the KKE (Interior) Central Committee issued in Athens on 7 June 1980]

[Text] Certain significant changes in the country's public life have occurred in the past month. Karamanlis became president of the republic and G. Rallis was elected to replace him as chairman of the party and prime minister of the New Democracy government.

The changes at the top in the government party mark the beginning of a new phase in the country's political life. For this reason they do not leave the people and the democratic political forces without some opinion. It is necessary to assess them correctly so that the struggle can be organized more effectively to end the power of the right, defeat its policy and open the road toward change which is demanded by the people.

1. Karamanlis' elevation to the presidency of the republic, which the Constitution of 1975 has endowed with superpowers, has, in practice, converted this institution into a basic power center which the new ruler will use to strengthen the authority of the right at a time when it is declining and, more generally, in order to create, every time, the necessary balances to allow the perpetuation of the conservative forces' authority and to guarantee the basic supports for the sovereignty of the ruling class and the existing sociopolitical regime. This basic center will tend to identify itself with the other center constituted by the government as long as it belongs to New Democracy and to differentiate itself to the extent that governments of a democratic-progressive nature are elected.

We believe that if the proposal of the KKE (Interior) had been agreed upon by the parties of the democratic opposition and if negotiations had been started with the government for a common candidate for the presidency on the basis of certain prerequisites, the issue of the presidency would not have been left in the hands of the right alone and more favorable conditions would have been formed in the struggle of the democratic forces.

2. The succession to the chairmanship of the New Democracy party brought into the limelight the dispute between the two basic tendencies and factions among its ranks--the moderate right which wants to remain faithful to the "radical liberalism" line of Karamanlis and the traditional right which is closely linked to the extreme right--both of which, although generally expressing the same class interest, nevertheless differ principally with regard to the means and methods for the exercise of power and on issues of foreign policy--always within the framework of the more general Atlantic orientation of government policy.

The dispute between these two factions also expresses special interests and tendencies--within the framework of their basic common interests and aims--which are closely linked with differences between the United States and Western Europe, differences and conflicts which are deteriorating as the structural crisis of the international capitalist system is being prolonged.

With G. Rallis' election to the chairmanship of the party and to the Office of Prime Minister a new order and balance has been formed in the leading echelons of New Democracy currently in support of those forces which seek a policy aiming at offsetting New Democracy's erosion with more flexible methods and adjustments to new facts together with those facts that are being created by accession to the EEC.

However, this balance is rather unstable, as was proved by the small majority which Rallis' candidacy secured and the continuation of the dispute after the compromise that was achieved. Also, the retention of Averof in the National Defense Ministry strongly supports the retention of the existing compartmentalization of the armed forces as another active power center which is parallel to but not within the existing constitutional framework, and will tend to influence the country's policy in certain directions.

The experience from the long period of anomaly which led to the strangulation of constitutional freedoms on 21 April 1967 has shown how dangerous it is to tolerate uncontrolled power centers outside the Constitution and how vigilant the pressure for their neutralization should be.

3. As has become clearly apparent from its policy statement, its composition and its handling of problems thus far, the policy of New Democracy's new government will basically follow the lives and directions which the previous government charted and followed.

New more than ever before, in order to confront the formidable economic, social and national problems which were left unsolved and even aggravated by previous New Democracy government, a radical change in policy is needed which no government of the right is in a position to implement because of its nature.

4. In its new effort to maintain itself in power the right is not denying with simplifications, one way or another, its internal differences and disputes. However, the removal of the right from power cannot be merely the result of some electoral duel with it by another party, whichever one it may be.

A clear and steady political direction is needed now which will organize popular resistance to the policy of one-sided austerity, Atlanticism and autocracy on a broad unifying base and along the line of a different policy of a democratic-progressive nature, will utilize for the benefit of progress differences and disputes in the ranks of the right, will isolate its most extremist reactionary factions, will erect barriers on the road of those who long for anomaly, will promote popular conquests and will push forward the entire front of democracy.

It is now imperative to steadily build on this base a broad alliance of social and political democratic forces which will guarantee a decisive superiority over the forces of the reactionary establishment within the course of the struggle and be able to achieve the great defeat of the right and elect a government of democratic cooperation based on the broadest spectrum of democratic forces. Only such a government, which will enjoy the active support of a multilateral and unifying mass popular movement, will be in a position to break the resistance of the reactionary forces and promote the necessary democratic changes in all sectors of national life which have matured in the conscience of the great majority of the people. Currently, because of the deteriorating international situation and the increasing internal difficulties, such a solution is necessary now more than ever. However, concurrent with the erosion of the right among the people and its reflection on the basic sectors of the state machine, more favorable objective prerequisites are being created for the implementation of this solution.

This is the meaning of the program for a democratic way out of the deep and multilateral crisis of the Greek society, for the change which constitutes the political basis from which we confront the new situation in the country, that is, the meaning of the basic political proposal which the KKE (Interior) addresses to the labor class, to the entire people and to the democratic political forces.

Regarding elections, currently the main problem is not the timing but the prerequisites for holding them which, if fulfilled, will constitute at the same time the steps for the further democratization of political life. Such prerequisites are: the adoption of the simple proportional system, the vote at age 18, the equal participation of parties in the mass information media, the possibility for seamen and emigrants to exercise their electoral right and so forth. These are demands for which all democratic forces should organize a coordinated struggle together with the struggle against the antidemocratic, antilabor, antitrade unionist laws, for the democratization of the state and of institutions (OTA [Organization of Local Self-Government] and so forth), the revision of the antidemocratic articles of the Constitution and more generally its democratization.

5. The economic policy announced by the new government does not differ basically from the policy which the previous governments, especially the last one of the right, have thus far implemented. The government's first act in this area was to adopt essentially the proposals of the Greek Industrialists' Association for the further reduction of control over prices and profits, for new "incentives" and tax reductions on large capital in the name of additional "liberalization."

Essentially it concerns a policy which, under the pretext of the accumulation of profits for necessary investment, is aimed at the satisfaction of the goal of large capital, especially monopolistic capital, local and foreign, for greater profits at the expense of the emoluments of the working people and of social expenses (education, health, communication, environmental protection and so forth) as the basic road for overcoming the crisis. This policy will exacerbate all the aspects of the economic crisis: the very dangerous expansion of the deficit in the balance of payments, the greater dependence of the country on continuous foreign loans, the drop in production, galloping inflation which this year will reach and surpass last year's and the increase in unemployment.

One should add to the above the shocks from the implementation of the agreement for accession to the EEC, because the previous New Democracy government not only allowed the deadlines to expire without any substantial preparation of the country but even proceeded into new arrangements and agreements at the expense of the country's economy and the working people.

In this connection the KKE (Interior) notes the responsibilities of the doctrinaire KKE [Exterior] and PASOK, which during this period exhausted their attacks against the EEC monopolies with aphorisms thus distracting the workers and people from mass action for specific goals and left the government to implement its policy unimpeded. It is necessary to work persistently on a program of struggle with specific goals toward the mass action of the working people on EEC problems.

So that the struggle to resist the government policy of one-sided austerity can be effective it should be based on charting a different strategy for economic and social development which will lead to a positive and democratic way out of the economic crisis--to the benefit of the country's working people the general directions of which were charted by the recent special resolution of the party's Central Committee Executive Office.

The development of strong mass movements which will unite in their ranks all the working people, regardless of ideological and political affiliations, constitutes the only way for the working people to defend effectively and improve their conquests. However, the development of such movements first and principally clashes with the reactions of the factors of government trade unionism and is made difficult by the practice of those trade unionist factions of the left which demand the transformation of mass and trade unionist organizations into organs and appurtenances for party policy and arenas for factional antagonism. This situation, which has a disintegrating effect on the mass movement, must be dealt with through the decisive intervention of the working people themselves.

The working people, members and followers of the KKE (Interior) and of Rigas Feraios [a KKE (Interior) youth organization] should strengthen their contribution to the defeat of this situation. They must work persistently to build, as broadly as possible, militant trade unionist rallies and for autonomy, for debureaucratization, democratization and a mass base for trade unionist organizations and for the organization on a broad unifying base of the movements and struggles of the working people.

The struggle of the workers and employees against the increasing cost of living, which by the end of May had completely absorbed nominal increases in emoluments, and against mass dismissals in addition to the struggle for the creation of new employment opportunities--especially for the young people--for the signing of new collective national agreements and for the democratization and the mass base of their unions currently acquires primary significance. At the same time, the struggles of the farmers must be intensified for satisfactory support prices for their produce, for subsidies and income supplements, for execution of land improvement projects and other basic works and for the strengthening and expansion of the activity and democratization of agricultural cooperatives.

The cold war and adventurist aggressive activity of U.S. imperialism--which was facilitated by the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan--is encountering the increasing resistance of the people, especially in Europe, and the governments of many European states--despite their concessions to U.S. pressures--are showing their increasing displeasure and their refusal to fully follow the frenzied road along which the Carter administration is pushing them. This constitutes a very significant and useful fact for international developments.

The fact that the epicenter of a possible conflagration lies in our neighborhood, the intensification of imperialist pressures for Greece's alignment with the aggressive policy of the United States and NATO and for the use of their bases for aggressive operations against other countries, for concessions to Turkey at the expense of our country's national sovereign rights and territorial integrity so that the southeast wing of NATO can again be operative, the increase in the chauvinistic Turkish aggressiveness against our national sovereignty, which is directly related to the new U.S.-Turkish agreement, the political-military and economic overstrengthening of Turkey by the United States and NATO and the way in which the Rallis government is reacting by covering up this policy toward Turkey and the pressures on our country necessitate the undertaking of initiatives by democratic and peace-loving forces to chart a common line and develop coordinated action on Greece's common goals: A permanent position outside military NATO, a refusal to sign the new agreement on the bases and their eventual abolition with ultimate withdrawal from political NATO, a refusal of any concessions at the expense of the country's sovereign rights, a refusal of the use of our nation as a springboard against other countries and an open commitment by the government to the people to this effect, zones of peace in the Balkans and the Mediterranean and denuclearized zones in Europe.

In such an effort our country must work for the success of the Madrid conference and at the same time must support every positive initiative manifested by other European countries in the direction of detente and peace.

As mentioned in the special resolution of the executive office on the problems of the struggle for peace, multilateral and autonomous mass movements should be developed around the above mentioned and other relevant goals which must be independent of one-sided attachments to parties or alliances.

Our party must contribute with all its forces to the development of such movements. In this spirit the Central Committee has decided that in this year's Avyi-Thourion festival [KKE (Interior) observance] one of the principal issues will be international problems and the struggle for detente and peace.

The KKE (Interior) specifically notes the dangers to the Cyprus cause resulting from the differences recently manifested among the political forces of the Megalonisos and it stresses that at a period when the machinations of the U.S.-NATO imperialists and the Turkish chauvinists against the state unity, territorial integrity and independence of the republic of Cyprus are being intensified, it is necessary, more than ever before, to maintain and strengthen national unity so that President Kiprianou can guide with full prestige negotiations with the Turkish Cypriot side on the basis of a common national line elaborated by all patriotic forces and avoid slipping into unacceptable concessions that would seriously impair the Cyprus cause.

7. Internal and international developments constantly offer new elements which vindicate the assessments and the policy of the KKE (Interior) and force even those parties that held contrary positions on certain problems to adopt the assessments and positions of our party, even after a delay of years, as for instance on the role of Western Europe and its relations with the United States and so forth.

In this new phase, the voice and presence of the KKE (Interior) becomes even more necessary. For this reason the duty becomes more imperative of guiding organs, members and cadres of the party and Rigas [Feraios] to work with greater inspiration, militant passion and practical organizational spirit for the further multilateral building of their organizations, for the closer attachment to the masses of the working people and youth and their more active intervention in the social and political life of their area, for the strengthening of the ideological front of corresponding mass movements always in conjuction with preparation for the next elections so that our organizations can find themselves in full battle deployment for the next elections from which our party should emerge stronger among the people and the parliament.

Once again, the KKE (Interior) addresses itself to all renewal communists, to all leftists who look forward to the Eurocommunist prospect, to all communists who are interested in a new course for the communist movement in our country, to all democrats, to all working people who ask for a better future and for their own manifold contributions so that it may respond to the difficult historic task it has shouldered with even greater adequacy and effectiveness.

STATEMENT NOTES SATISFACTION WITH NEW IRAQI STAND ON INCIDENT

TA101437 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen made the following statement on developments after Turkey sent a note to the Iraqi Government on the killing of 10 Turks near Hakkari:

[Begin Erkmen recording] Both through its representation in Ankara and through our embassy in Baghdad, the Iraqi Government has expressed its regret over the incident, pointing out that it was not directed against Turkey, that Turkish citizens were not killed on purpose and that an early investigation had not been possible since the incident occurred in an area which was off limits.

In accordance with our request, the Iraqi Government agreed to conduct a joint investigation of the incident. This new approach by the Iraqi Government toward the incident has convinced us that it would be right for us to deal with this matter in a friendly and peaceful manner. Now a joint investigation will be conducted. We expect necessary measures and steps to be taken against those found responsible as a result of this joint investigation. We will try to reach a joint agreement on measures to compensate our citizens who have been harmed and to prevent the recurrence of similar incidents.

I would like to point out that the initial indifference expressed by the Iraqi Government has now changed and an agreement has been reached, in accordance with our request, for a joint investigation to clear up the incident. We will await the results of this joint investigation and if any disagreements arise over the results reached in the joint investigation, we will try to settle them within the framework of international law. FOREIGN MINISTER ERKMEN BRIEFS UN OFFICIAL ON CYPRUS ISSUE

[Text] UN Under Secretary General for Special Political Affairs Perez de Cuellar arrived in Ankara yesterday on the second leg of his tour to achieve the resumption of the Cypriot intercommunal talks. Perez de Cuellar had visited Cyprus, where he held talks with the leaders of the Turkish and Greek communities.

Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen received Perez de Cuellar today at 1030. The Foreign Ministry Secretary General's Deputy for Political Affairs Ayhan Kamel as well as the Secretary General's Deputy for Joint Security Affairs Ambassador Faruk Sahinbas and Cypriot and Greek Affairs Department Director Bedrettin Tunabas participated in the meeting, which was held at the Foreign Ministry. The UN Secretary General's Special Representative in Cyprus Hugo Juan Gobbi was also at the meeting. Both Erkmen and Perez de Cuellar made statements following the hour-long meeting.

In his statement, Erkmen recalled that the solution to the Cyprus problem must be based on the two fundamental principles of bizonality and of ensuring the security of the Turkish side. Erkmen added that it was impossible to establish a lasting relationship between the two Cypriot communities or coexistence between them until these principles--which were agreed upon in the Denktas-Makarios talks--were achieved. Pointing out that whenever and wherever there was talk of resuming the intercommunal talks, the Greek Cypriot side always came up with the idea of holding talks without any preconditions, Erkmen said: These two principles are not preconditions. They are two fundamental conditions on which agreement has been reached. It is out of the question for talks that do not recognize and include these conditions to be successful.

Erkmen recalled that the proposal for the UN secretary general to include these two fundamental principles in his opening speech at the resumption of the proposed intercommunal talks was rejected by the Greek Cypriots on 28 March. Erkmen said that the Turkish Cypriot side was unjustly blamed without revealing what was rejected by the Turkish side. Erkmen added that the Turkish side could not agree to negotiations on the two fundamental principles.

In his statement, Perez de Cuellar said that his objective was not to impose solutions on the interested sides but to come up with new ideas and to exert efforts with good will for the continuation of the dialogue. Perez de Cuellar said that his statement on the rejection of his new proposals on the resumption of the intercommunal talks by the Turkish side was made following the declaration by Turkish Federated State of Cyprus President Rauf Denktas on the subject.

Replying to a question on whether a new proposal would be formulated under the present circumstances, Perez de Cuellar said: We have come up with new ideas so far. Some of these were rejected by the Greek Cypriot side and others by the Turkish Cypriot side. This is the right of the concerned sides. We will pursue our work; new ideas and proposals will be formulated.

After his meeting with Foreign Minister Erkmen, Perez de Cuellar left for Istanbul by air. Perez de Cuellar will leave Istanbul tomorrow for Athens to continue his talks.

ERBAKAN REVEALS CONTENTS OF WARNING LETTER TO GOVERNMENT

TA101712 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] The contents of the letter of warning submitted by the National Salvation Party [NSP] to the government on Saturday were disclosed by NSP leader Necmettin Erbakan today. In a news conference at the parliament, Erbakan said that the letter of warning contained 16 requests to the government with the condition that a positive reply to these requests be made within a week.

On the topic of violence, Erbakan said that they had asked that no support be given to any of the groups and the replacement of partisan administrators by unpartial and efficient ones. Erbakan said that for the prevention of economic destruction they had asked the government to renounce the 3-year agreement with the IMF and to stop devaluations for good. Erbakan added that the decree lifting control over interest rates should be annuled. Erbakan said that the letter contained requests to enact the bills to deduct the minimum cost of living from the income tax and to eliminate all obstacles to the development of heavy industry and defense industries. On the issue of education, the letter asked that the necessary serious measures be taken to base learning on moral and spiritual values; that the racial influences on the religious schools be lifted and that the teachers who make such pressures be dismissed. Erbakan said that the letter warned the government to stop oppressing the believers. He added that films on TRT that were aimed at destroying family life should not be shown anymore. Erbakan said that the letter asked the government to renounce efforts to join the EEC and to avoid allowing relations with the EEC to take a political turn.

Erbakan said that the NSP letter also warned the government not to hinder the further promotion of relations with the Muslim countries and added that definite measures should be taken to prevent the use of foreign bases in Turkey against Islamic countries.

Recalling that the government was given a week to send a letter promising to meet these demands, Erbakan said that if such a letter was not received during this time or if the demands were rejected, his party would renounce support for the government in the National Assembly. Erbakan said that if the government agreed with these demands, then his party would give the government 1 month to implement them.

ECEVIT MEETS ERBAKAN, SENATE GROUPS ON PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

TA101818 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Excerpts] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit has held meetings with National Salvation Party [NSP] leader Necmettin Erbakan and the representatives of the Senate National Unity Group and of the presidentially appointed senators in connection with the presidential elections. Addressing the RPP Joint Senate and National Assembly Group this morning, Ecevit said that the party must nominate a new presidential candidate as soon as possible because the elections have reached a new stage. He said that he thought it would be necessary, before nominating a new candidate, to hold talks with the party and group leaders with whom they could establish a dialogue that would be of practical use. He added: I even believe it would be useful to expand such a dialogue to include the discussion of the present problems facing Turkey.

The RPP leader held his first meeting with Erbakan. Following the 50-minute meeting that began at 1300, Ecevit said: We will concentrate our efforts on the presidential elections this week and next week. Ecevit stressed that both parties agreed that the government was dragging Turkey toward a catastrophe. He recalled that the NSP was waiting for the prime minister's answers to its letter of warning. Asked whether he would consult Demirel on the issue, Ecevit said: Our dialogue with Mr Demirel on the presidential elections did not yield any results. If there are any signs that something might come out of it, a dialogue can be reestablished, of course. At this point I do not see any such sign. However, we always leave the doors for a dialogue open.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

JAPAN CALLED ON TO INCREASE EC IMPORTS

OW110109 Tokyo KYODO in English 0101 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Text] Brussels June 10 KYODO--The European Community (EC) Tuesday called on Japan to increase imports of industrial and agricultural products from EC members. The request was made in an EC report released for discussion at the Venice summit June 12-13.

Noting that the EC's trade deficit with Japan is growing, the report said Japan should increase imports from the EC to promote a healthier relationship.

The report also noted that Japan has protectionist regulations on imports of some agricultural products and footwear, and there also remain some technical and procedural difficulties on exports to Japan.

NATO

MINISTERS APPEAL TO USSR ON MISSILE TALKS, U.S. ON SALT

LD091257 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 Jun 80 p 8

[Olav Tryggve Storvik report: "NATO: Firm Appeal to Soviet Union on Missile Talks"]

[Text] Bodo, 4 June--NATO defense ministers taking part in the Nuclear Planning Group adopted in Bodo on Wednesday a firm appeal to the Soviet Union for talks aimed at limiting long-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

In the communique following the meeting the defense ministers expressed regret that the Soviet Union has twice rejected the offer of talks with the United States on serious discussions of nuclear arms limitations in Europe, and instead put forward unacceptable preconditions for such negotiations. In their statement the defense ministers state that the Soviet preconditions would only perpetuate the imbalance in strength to the advantage of the Soviet Union. This refers to the Soviet demand that modernization of NATO nuclear weapons not be carried out in accordance with the decision made at the ministers' meeting in Brussels in December. The Nuclear Planning Group repeats its call to Moscow for a swift positive reply to NATO's offer of talks and urges the United States at the same time to ratify the SALT II agreement as soon as possible.

Defense Secretary Harold Brown said at the press conference after the meeting that the chances of ratification of the SALT II agreement have been described most accurately by Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, who has said that it is not realistic to count on the necessary Senate majority for ratification of the agreement since the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

"But what I am saying now is not a prediction covering an indefinite period," Brown told AFTENPOSTEN. "It only means that the situation in the coming months is extremely difficult for ratification. The American Government is, however, intent on pressing for ratification of the agreement when this is politically possible," he stated, adding that in the meantime both the United States and the Soviet Union ought to refrain from actions that might make ratification more difficult. [paragraph continues]

The arms limitations in the agreement ought to be respected by both governments, Brown said, asserting that this was in the security interests of both countries. In the longer term Brown said that he thought the chances for the SALT agreement, and the arms limitations it covers are good.

Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg admitted after the meeting on Wednesday that it is somewhat unusual to include an appeal to another country on as controversial a question of internal policy as the SALT II agreement has become, but stated that the appeal to the United States to ratify the agreement was included in the communique to emphasize the importance that the defense ministers attach to ratification of the agreement and the central significance it has for future work on arms limitations. He clearly rejected the suggestion that the defense ministers regard ratification of SALT II as a prerequisite for further negotiations with the Soviet Union on the limitation of long-range nuclear missiles in Europe, but admitted that some of them see it this way while others do not. His own opinion is that there is no connection between the two questions.

At the Wednesday meeting the defense ministers also expressed their concern that the Soviet Union has not withdrawn the launching ramps for the old SS-4 and SS-5 nuclear missiles, as they had originally expected to happen. At the same time Soviet production and deployment of the new long-range and more precise SS-20 nuclear missiles and the "Backfire" bomber has continued unabated, something that the NATO defense ministers think will lead to greater differences in the mid-eighties in the balance of forces between East and West to the advantage of the Soviet Union. This is a new and unexpected feature of the situation.

Defense Secretary Harold Brown explained that it is obvious that if NATO does not carry out its modernization program for nuclear arms, the Soviet Union will have no reason to negotiate on arms limitations. Moscow would then be convinced that it is fully possible to rearm without NATO doing the same, Brown said.

ISRAEL'S SHAMIR MEETS WITH BELGIAN LEADERS

TA092029 Jerusalem Domestic Service in Hebrew 2000 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] Israel is demanding that Greece and Spain commit themselves to establishing diplomatic relations with Israel as a condition for their membership in the EEC. Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir put the request forward at a talk in Brussels today with the person in charge of the EEC's Middle East affairs, Claude (Chison). At a news conference this evening, Shamir repeated the position that the PLO cannot be a partner in the Middle East negotiations because it is a terrorist organization that exists in order to destroy Israel. Tomorrow the foreign minister will consult with the Belgian prime minister and the chairman of the Market Commission. In talks with his counterpart in Brussels, Minister Shamir realized that Belgium is not retracting its pro-Arab position and, in this context, support for the repartitioning of Jerusalem.

CANADA

TRUDEAU CALLS FOR CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

WA102243 London REUTER in English 2149 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] Ottawa, June 10, REUTER--Canada faces disaster and catastrophe if its leaders do not make substantial progress towards constitutional reform later this year, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau said today.

He was reporting to Parliament on an accord yesterday between himself and the 10 provincial premiers to "finalize agreement" on reform to Canada's century-old British Constitution at a conference from September 8 to 12. "If we fail to reach substantial agreement in September, we are courting disaster from Canada....There would be catastrophic consequences...," Mr Trudeau said.

At stake is redrafting Canada's federal system and the sharing of powers between Ottawa and the provinces, some of which want more autonomy.

Mr Trudeau said that if the September talks failed, the federal Parliament would have to take action. But he did not specify what this might be and sidestepped questions about a possible national referendum. Ministers and top officials will prepare for the conference throughout the summer.

On resuming work, the prime minister said that, subject to the parliament approving a government proposal on the matter, 5 October is the date set for legislative elections.

The prime minister said that he would be going to Paris early in July for a meeting with President Giscard d'Estaing of France. Although negotiations with Giscard, he said, could be somewhat difficult, in his view the undertaking given to Portugal would be fulfilled. Sa Carneiro will be going to The Hague on 18 June and on the following day he will go to Brussels.

LD101448 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1200 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] At a meeting which ended in the early hours of this morning, the Socialist Party, the Independent Social Democratic Association [ASDI] and the Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy [VEDS] agreed to form an electoral front of socialists and social democrats to be known as the Republican and Socialist Front [FRS]. Among those attending the meeting were Mario Soares, Magalhaes Mota and Lopes Cardoso.

The final communique subsequently released says that the formation of this front represents the response of the forces which stand for democratic socialism and for social democracy to the grave problems confronting the nation which are being further aggravated by the aggressive policies of the Democratic Alliance government.

The formal establishment of the Republican Socialist Front will take place at a public ceremony on the 25th of this month, on which date the documents now agreed by the three organizations will be published. The agreement on forming the FRS has come in the wake of some 2 months of negotiations. By the 25th of this month ASDI should have completed at the Supreme Court the formalities pertaining to its becoming a political party.

SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL DELEGATES ARRIVE FOR MEETING IN OSLO

Kreisky, Qotbzadeh Arrival Statements

AU111915 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1600 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Ferdinand Hennerbichler recorded report from Oslo]

[Text] Defusing the Iran crisis in general and solving the Tehran hostage affair in particular--these are the two topics at the onset of deliberations of the Socialist International here in Oslo, which will continue in individual committees up to this Saturday. The protagonist is Federal Chancellor Kreisky: He is just now reporting at the Folkethus, that is, Oslo's trade union house, to the Presidium of the Socialist International on the Iran mission which he undertook on assignment from the Socialist International some 14 days ago together with former Swedish Premier Olof Palme and Spanish socialist party chief Felipe Gonzalez. In addition, Iran Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh is a guest of the Socialist International here in Norway.

Kreisky arrived here in Oslo at about 1610 local time, Qotbzadeh about half an hour later. The federal chancellor made a short statement upon his arrival at the airport. He said among other things that he was optimistic that the crisis in Iran could be solved and that the U.S. hostages could be released. He had no separate plan of his own for the liberation of the hostages, however. Kreisky said he was mainly concerned with establishing contacts. One must now wait for what Iranian Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh will have to say here in Oslo. There existed motives and realistic hopes for the liberation of the hostages, the chancellor went on to say, but, after all, Iran was now involved in a revolution and, hence, unforeseen things could happen again.

[Begin Kreisky recording in English] Of course I hope that this crisis will finally be solved and the hostages will be released, but we have to wait and see what he is telling us. Yes, I think that we succeeded until now in our efforts to open the way for our friends in Iran to contact the leading socialists and social democrats in Europe. [end recording]

The Iranian foreign minister arrived after the federal chancellor; he also made a very short statement. Qotbzadeh said that he hoped for more understanding and better relations and answered several of my questions by saying that his visit to Oslo had nothing to do with the hostages affair and the hostages problem. [passage indistinct]

So much about these statements. Here is additional information: Tomorrow, on Thursday [12 June], the federal chancellor will travel to Stockholm for one day to attend the EFTA economic community's 20th anniversary festivities. But he will again participate in the deliberations of the Socialist International here in Oslo on Friday and will attend the final press conference that has been planned for Friday, 1330 local time. Qotbzadeh is expected to leave Oslo tomorrow.

In conclusion, here is a first short evaluation: Politically, the social democrats are continuing what they started with the recent Iran initiative, that is, by means of a new dialogue to try to contribute to defusing the Iran crisis and to solving the hostages affair. The arguments of their political opponents have not changed either: A stiff attitude vis-a-vis Iran and isolation are more effective than understanding, arrangement and compromise; this is what they maintain.

What is new in the entire affair is the fact that for the first time Iranian Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh seems to be coming to a significant international forum with the decisive support of the religious leaders of Iran on the hostage problem. This could be some sort of a response by Iran to the recent initiative of the Socialist International or, in other words, what Qotbzadeh is going to say here in Oslo could stick because it is evidently also being backed by the mullahs in Iran. This would imply, in the best of cases, a greater chance for the hostages and less chance of an explosion in Iran.

Qotbzadeh Contacts

NC121153 Paris AFP in English 1146 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Text] Oslo, June 12 (AFP)--Iranian Foreign Minister Sadeq Qotbzadeh, who arrived here yesterday to be an observer at meetings of the Socialist International, has had private talks with several socialist leaders, reliable sources said today. His main aim is to pull Iran out of its diplomatic isolation and obtain the organization's support for Iran's neutrality. He has told socialist leaders Iran condemns the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Iranian representatives may take part in the Socialist International congress in Madrid in November.

According to the sources, Mr Qotbzadeh has had talks here with Socialist International President Willy Brandt, Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, Spanish socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez and Senegalese President Leopold Sedar Senghor.

He described the situation in Iran and pointed out areas of agreement with Socialist International policy, particularly Iran's intention to remain politically neutral, the sources said.

On the American hostages held in Iran since November 4, Mr. Qotbzadeh has said frequently the problem is only part of a larger one that must be settled at an overall level.

COUNCIL OF EUROPE POLITICAL COMMITTEE MEETS IN ANTALYA

TA111156 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Text] The Political Committee of the Council of Europe parliamentary assembly has met in Antalya. In an opening statement, committee member and Adana Deputy Sevdet Akcali said that Turkey is one of the exceptional countries which can carry out development efforts and exercise democracy simultaneously.

Committee Chairman (Thomas Irwing), in a statement to reporters before the meeting, said that the implementation of the final document adopted at the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and North-South cooperation in Europe will be discussed at the meeting. Noting that there was an increase in acts of terror against democracies in Europe, (Irwing) added that this issue will be extensively discussed at the meeting. Replying to reporters' questions (Irwing) said that the Afghan and Cypriot problems will be discussed at a meeting to be held in Madrid in 3 weeks.

Twenty-five parliamentarians from 21 countries are participating in the meeting. Decisions to be made at the meeting will be issued in a communique following the 3-day meeting.

Turkish Foreign Minister Comments

TA121105 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen has asked for closer international cooperation in a bid to shed light on the attacks and murders of Turkish diplomats and their families abroad and to punish the culprits.

Erkmen, who attended the Political Committee meeting of the Council of Europe parliamentary assembly in Antalya, made a statement to journalists after the meeting which was held in camera. In his statement Erkmen said that he briefed the committee members on the views of the Turkish Government regarding the work conducted during the 11th Islamic foreign ministers' conference and regarding the conference's decisions on Afghanistan as well as other international issues.

Erkmen said that a just and lasting solution to the Middle East problem cannot be reached without the contribution of concerned parties.

Reiterating that the Cyprus problem can be solved through a settlement which will enable the two communities to live in harmony and security, Erkmen said: Such a solution can be attained through serious negotiations between the two communities. Attempts to internationalize the problem will only serve to delay the solution.

Erkmen noted that relations between Turkey and Greece are currently at an undesired stage and that the problems connected with the Aegean Sea and airspace have not yet been solved. Reiterating that the problems between Turkey and Greece can be solved through bilateral negotiations, Erkmen said: Turkey has on various occasions expressed its good will on this matter and has lifted the NOTAM over the Aegean Sea 3 months ago as an expression of this good will.

ILO CONFERENCE ADDRESSED BY CUBAN TRADE UNION DELEGATE

U.S. Actions Denounced

FL070034 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] Cuban union leader Jesus Escandel has demanded the solidarity of all workers in the world with our people's struggle for the return of the Guantanamo territory as well as an end to the U.S. blockade and spy flights. In a speech at the 66th conference of the International Labor Organization [ILO], Escandel stressed that those measures of the U.S. Government violate Cuba's sovereignty and threaten peace in the Caribbean and the world.

The secretary for international relations of the Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions stated that for nearly 2 decades Cuba has been the target of aggressions and provocations conducted by Yankee imperialism and added that these have intensified in the past few months to the point of threat ending with Marine landings at the illegally occupied territory of Guantanamo.

Salvadoran Regime Condemned

FL061024 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 6 Jun 80

[Text] Cuba has denounced at the 66th International Labor Organization (ILO) conference the crimes committed by the Salvadoran regime and the U.S. Government's responsibility for the crimes.

Jesus Escandel, international relations secretary of the Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions and its representative to the ILO, whose headquarters are in Geneva, introduced the condemnation to the resolutions committee of the annual ILO conference.

The conference opened Wednesday in the Swiss capital with the participation of 1,200 delegates representing governments, management institutions and labor organizations of 143 member countries. It will end 24 June.

KREISKY PREDICTS DOWNFALL OF BEGIN GOVERNMENT

AU111250 [Editorial Report] Vienna Domestic Service in German at 1032 GMT on 11 June 1980 carries a 4-minute Barbara Coudenhove-Kalergi telephone report on Chancellor Kreisky's press conference at the Vienna Concordia Press Club on 11 June, with recorded excerpts of Kreisky answers. Vienna Domestic Television Service at 1730 GMT carries a similar report.

In reply to a question about his forthcoming meeting with Iranian Foreign Minister Gotbzadeh in Oslo tonight, Kreisky says: [begin Kreisky recording] The way I see the hostage problem in Iran is that very divided views exist about the issue in the decisive power centers. There are divided opinions about everything. It cannot be foreseen who makes the final decision, but those things have been achieved which we wanted to achieve, that is that there is a "followup"--that much you can gather from Gotbzadeh's visit to Oslo. And I am convinced that he will tell us something about the state of the hostages case. I expect that he--who is a very outspoken man--will give us more information in addition to what we have already learned on the occasion of our stay in Iran. This is a process that has been started. It may be broken off some day, but at the moment it is functioning. He will tell us what their ideas are. Of course he will have to tell us what their ideas are regarding the hostages--that is the premise from which I am proceeding." [end recording] Coudenhove-Kalergi notes that Kreisky in this context emphatically warned against any further U.S. attempt to solve the problem of the hostages through military means, attempts that in his opinion were bound to fail.

According to the television report, Kreisky voiced criticism concerning the outcome of the past Middle East negotiations between the United States, Israel and Egypt. [begin Kreisky recording] So what has been the outcome to date? A separate peace, and that is a word that nobody wants to use; nothing else, nothing for the Palestinians, nothing but an exacerbation of the situation for the Palestinians of the West Bank, and that in a way which I must term disgraceful--that is, that freely elected mayors are driven out of the country and the Western world keeps silent. I consider this so indescribable and we would not accept this anywhere else in the world. Yes, indescribable that freely elected mayors are expelled under cover of night. We have only experienced this at the time of the Austrian dictatorship when freely elected mayors were expelled from their offices. This happened in Israel and it is a disgrace. [end recording]

According to the Coudenhove-Kalergi report, Kreisky welcomed the forthcoming European Community declaration on the Palestinians' rights. The report goes on to say: "Progress in the Middle East problem is expected by the Austrian chancellor primarily from the forthcoming downfall of the Begin government--a regime that is sinking, Kreisky says, a regime that in his opinion will soon be replaced by a social democratic government which will better understand the signs of the time."

PAKISTAN'S AGHA SHAHI PAYS "SURPRISE VISIT"

LD112004 Hamburg DPA in German 1920 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Text] Vienna--Pakistan's Foreign Minister Agha Shahi today paid a surprise visit to Vienna. He is thought to have discussed with Federal Chancellor Bruno Kreisky an offer by Nicolae Ceausescu, the Romanian head of party and state, to mediate with a view to resolving the Afghanistan crisis. This was learned from informed sources. The 1-hour talk took place shortly before Kreisky's departure for a Socialist International meeting in Oslo. Shahi had an extended conversation with Ceausescu in Bucharest on Tuesday. Details of his talk with Kreisky were not available. Ceausescu conferred on Afghanistan with Bulgarian party and state chief Zhivkov.

FOREIGN MINISTER TELLS SHAMIR OF GOVERNMENT VIEW ON MIDEAST

LD120927 Brussels LE SOIR in French 11 Jun 80 p 3

[Unattributed report on 10 June Brussels meeting between Israeli and Belgian foreign ministers Yitzhaq Shamir and Francois Nothomb: "Europe's Only Desire To Contribute to Mideast Peace"]

[Text] Foreign Minister Mr Nothomb has had a conversation with his Israeli counterpart, Mr Shamir.

Mr Shamir expressed the Israeli authorities' hopes regarding the European countries' attitude toward the PLO and the prospects of a European initiative.

Mr Nothomb pointed out that Belgium has always subscribed to the principle that there cannot be a settlement in the Middle East without establishing that Israel can count on secure and recognized borders, and stressed that Belgium has made this position known to the Arab authorities and PLO representatives with which Belgian ministers have been in contact.

"Belgium welcomed the Camp David talks and agreements as a positive step--a first step in an all-embracing Middle East peace settlement," Mr Nothomb also pointed out, adding, nonetheless, that in seeking an all-embracing settlement it is desirable that the Palestinians be associated in some way and that all sections of public opinion--including the PLO which expresses public opinion--be able to express their views.

The Belgian foreign minister also stated that a positive settlement rules out any acts of violence. "We condemn both Fatah's recent statement at the Damascus congress concerning the use of violence as a means of settling the Middle East problem and Mr Begin's stance on the withdrawal from the occupied territories, expressed in particular this Sunday."

For the Return of the Expelled Mayors

"Our main concern is to see the peace negotiation process continue, but there is evidence of a degree of deadlock in these negotiations and, in this more difficult period, Europe could play a role in keeping the paths of dialogue open and creating an atmosphere favorable to its continuation," he stated.

In addition, Mr Nothomb regretted the attitude adopted by Israel with regard to the mayors of Hebron and Halhul (occupied territories) and he pleaded for them to be able to return to their respective municipalities.

"Europe's only concern," he stressed, "is to contribute to peace and we are in close contact with the United States on this subject and are anxious not to disturb the current process."

Furthermore, Mr Shamir invited Mr Nothomb to visit Israel. The latter thanked him but no definite promise has yet been given.

SCHMIDT WARNS AGAINST 'EXAGGERATED HOPES' FOR MOSCOW VISIT

LD112034 Hamburg DPA in German 2011 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Berlin--In Berlin tonight Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt cautioned against exaggerated hopes regarding his visit to Moscow at the end of this month. We wants to ensure mutual understanding. Major agreements are not to be expected, Schmidt told an SPD meeting in connection with the ninth congress of the public and transport workers union.

In Moscow he will make it clear that "we will not go soft" and that we "stand by the European Community and the Atlantic Alliance." The chancellor stressed that he would play "with open cards" in the Soviet Union and use "no tricks." He will speak for "our nation" and "for the interests of all Germans."

KNESSET SPEAKER TELLS SCHMIDT OF 'MISGIVINGS' ON EC STATEMENT

LD111628 Hamburg DPA in German 1515 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Text] Bonn--The speaker of the Israeli parliament, Yitzhaq Berman, today told Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of his country's grave misgivings about the proposed statement on the Middle East by the European Community. At a meeting between the Israeli parliamentary delegation of seven deputies and the chancellor, Berman said that the Israeli-Egyptian peace process should not be disturbed by a European declaration on the Middle East.

The EC declaration, which is to be published at the 2-day EC summit meeting in Venice starting tomorrow, was the main topic of the Israeli parliamentarians' talks. No details about the form and substance of the declaration were available tonight.

At the start of the 2-day visit to Bonn by the Knesset delegation, Berman told German deputies that the European states should take care not to exert too much pressure on Israel and not to upgrade the PLO which still sought the "extermination" of Israel. In reply to criticism by German deputies of Israel's policy on settlements, the Knesset parliamentarians said that Israel was basically entitled to pursue this policy.

Today's program includes a reception for the Israeli delegation by Federal President Karl Carstens and a meeting with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. Tomorrow the delegation is to meet the chairman of the parliamentary parties and members of the Bundestag Foreign Affairs Committee.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG LAMENTS ATLANTIC DIFFERENCES

DW091130 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 7/8 Jun 80 p 4

[Josef Riedmiller editorial: "The Atlantic Discord"]

[Text] It can no longer be ruled out that the U.S. President might use the veto in the UN Security Council to negate the policy of his West European allies. The idea is grotesque but not unrealistic. Jimmy Carter has made it absolutely clear that he will resist an initiative by the EC states aimed at changing the political and legal bases for a solution of the Middle East conflict. As far as the President is concerned, the Camp David agreement remains his only foreign policy success and, contrary to appearances, he regards it as an expedient instrument for at least continuing the peace process between Israel and Egypt. But just a few months prior to the presidential elections, in which his showing will essentially depend on the behavior of the Jewish voters, Carter is not even capable of doing anything else but bridging this period by means of steering a middle course.

Rebuff to the Europeans

It is France in particular which has developed the idea that the Community should seize the initiative in the Middle East policy at the EC summit meeting next week since--and this was the justification advanced by French Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet to his U.S. colleague Muskie--the Camp David agreement has failed. On the one hand, most EC states resist the expansion of their responsibilities--for instance, within the framework of NATO--while, on the other hand, they seem now to want to tackle one of the most ticklish problems. Meanwhile, some West European governments are apparently not disturbed by this contradiction and, were it not for Carter's threat to use a veto, they would probably continue the process of linguistic improvement in the Middle East resolution, a process initiated after the Yom Kipper war in 1973. What had been envisaged was to concede to the Palestinians the right to self-determination and thus to the founding of a state of their own, as well as to concede the right to the PLO to participate in the negotiations. But presumably the EC summit conference will now come up with more cautious formulations, and this would be attributable not only to Carter, but also to the rejection of West European mediation by both Israel and Egypt.

The harsh rebuff given the Europeans by Carter has made the undiminished interest of the United States in this dangerous region visible. This is a warning signal to friend and foe alike. Still, the President's threat to use the veto cannot be viewed solely in connection with the Middle East policy and the attempts by the EC states to curry favor with the Arab world in general and the oil owners in particular--it must also be judged as the eruption of a long pent-up displeasure on the part of the Americans with their allies. This displeasure is older than Carter's irritation about the hesitation of the West Europeans to impose trade restrictions on Iran to force the latter to release the U.S. hostages, or to contribute something toward the "punishment" of the Soviet Union for its military intervention in Afghanistan.

Egotism on Both Sides

It seems as though the Americans attribute a feeling of being hemmed in and of having to make allowances, which they sense in their global ventures and which had been unfamiliar to them before, not only to the antagonism of enemies but also to the hesitation and even disloyalty of friends. What has been routinely dragging on as an alliance for decades--the haggling over influence, money, abilities, the assumption or evasion of burdens--is insufficient now, in this critical phase of world politics. [paragraph continues]

What is new is that the emergence of danger has not rallied the Alliance members as it formerly did, but is driving them apart because each country believes that it could find a better solution for itself even if this solution "only" consisted of a safer oil supply.

Egotism, after all, is not quite alien to the Americans, but the egotism of others seems to cause them consternation. They feel deserted because most NATO states will be sending athletes to the Olympic games in Moscow after all, the EC countries are implementing economic sanctions against Iran only reluctantly, Giscard d'Estaing and Schmidt are talking with Brezhnev and thus crashing the contact barrier (which Muskie, however, has also passed) and the Federal Republic, the most obedient ally since it is most dependent on U.S. protection, does not shrink from expanding trade with the East and concluding a new cooperation agreement with Moscow.

This is how the Americans see it, and their exasperation over the ungrateful Europeans has obviously already gone further than the latter could imagine. In Great Britain any foreign lamentation is ignored, and the French react to such lamentation with complaints of their own. Paris has not forgotten the pressure brought to bear by Washington to forestall France's nuclear armament, to keep it in NATO militarily, to negate its Ostpolitik [phrase as published]. The French are coming up with innumerable examples showing that it was the Americans who pursued quite egotistical objectives in dealing with the Russians, be it Nixon's nuclear pact, be it the disarmament negotiations, or be it the preparations for the CSCE conference. And in this connection, Frenchmen recollect that, as Alexis de Tocqueville wrote: "Our laws controlled the three biggest rivers of North America."

Carter's Erraticism

But, unlike the United States, in Europe the displeasure with its partner did not spring from doubts about the latter's reliability but from doubts about his proficiency, rationality, purposeful reaction in foreign policy. With a discussion having emerged in the United States today, for example, on whether U.S. Gen Robert Huyser was supposed to instigate or prevent a military putsch in Tehran in the fall of 1978, then the question concerning the leadership quality of the Alliance executive board can no longer be suppressed leaving the traditional and seasonal anti-American trends in Western Europe out of consideration. It was primarily the erraticism in Carter's foreign policy that forced many citizens of our continent to think and that caused many people to prefer not to be affected by any decision from Washington.

It cannot be ruled out that Carter's policy, which is incoherent all too often, has veritably encouraged his antagonist in Moscow to risk more, to seize advantages, to exploit the weakness or the indecision of the other. The tone Moscow uses in talking about "Afghanistan," about arms limitations--without readiness to make concessions--allows such an assumption. Carter's cardinal mistake obviously was that he gave up Kissinger's policy of equidistance from Moscow and Beijing, replacing it with an alliance-like relationship with China which, however, does not cover much ground in the conflict with Moscow because of China's weakness. On the contrary, the Soviets feel both prodded and justified in smashing the encirclement ring.

Instead of complaining the United States should recognize that it is a great power only if it can get along without the assistance of Luxembourg and the Federal Republic. If it is no longer such a great power, even the support of small- and medium-size countries will do much good.

GISCARD TO REITERATE STANCE ON NEW EC MEMBERS

LD111743 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Text] The French Ministry of Foreign Affairs today confirmed to EFE that President Valery Giscard d'Estaing will reiterate his view that new members should not be allowed to join a club whose rules are still being decided, at tomorrow's summit meeting of EEC countries in Venice. The spokesman for the French ministry also clearly said that France never gave its agreement to the plan for Spanish admission into the Community on 1 January 1983.

The press and information service of the French Embassy in Madrid has distributed to the Spanish media the whole text of the speech by the French president to the assembly of French chambers of agriculture, in which he says he is in favor of delaying Spanish entry into the Common Market.

IRAQI FOREIGN MINISTER HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

JN111535 Baghdad INA in English 1445 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Text] Paris, (INA)--Iraqi Foreign Minister Dr. Sa'dun Hammadi held a press conference here today in which he spoke about Iraqi-French relations, means for their development and a number of current Arab and international developments.

Dr Hammadi said that Iraq pays special attention to its relations with Western European states, particularly France. He added that Iraq's relations with France and other European states specially developed in the recent period. He added that Iraq looks with satisfaction and appreciation to the growth of Europe's independent character, with France playing an important role. He pointed out to the positive development of the European position, particularly France's position towards the Arab causes.

Speaking about his talks with French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet, Dr. Hammadi said that Mr. Poncet spoke in detail about the French Government's position towards the European initiative on the Arab-Zionist conflict. He also said that he explained Iraq's position towards this initiative. He added that he discussed with Mr. Francois-Poncet political problems of the Arab region, amongst them the new situation in the Arab Gulf and the questions related to the situation in North Africa and the Arab-European dialogue. As regards to the Arab-European dialogue, the minister expressed satisfaction to the French Government's understanding of fact that the dialogue be collective, "something that Iraq always demanded".

Dr. Hammadi affirmed Iraq's preparedness to develop its relations with France farther than its current level, particularly in the field of energy and oil. He said that Iraq always wishes to develop relations in the technical field, "because France can play a significant role in the Iraqi development process". He added that no major obstacles stand before the development of Iraqi-French relations. He also called for further development of relations among Arab and European countries.

Dr. Hammadi spoke about the European initiative, saying that Iraq knows little about this initiative, though it looks much close to principles and resolutions of the United Nations. He pointed out that the Arab countries can't accept any attitude that undermines the genuine interests of the Palestinian and Arab people.

As for his expectations on the future issuance of a statement or press release by the EEC summit, scheduled to be held in Venice, Italy, Dr. Hammadi said that he presumes that the summit may issue a document, the basis of which can be discussed after its publicity.

Dr. Hammadi then spoke about Iraqi-Iranian relations and called upon the Iranian regime to refrain from intervention in the internal affairs of the neighbouring Arab countries. He described Iranian Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh's statement on the 3 Arab islands occupied by Iran as reflecting the imperialist-expansionist face of the Iranian regime.

The Iraqi foreign minister said that these islands are part of the United Arab Emirates, and when Britain withdrew from them it paved the way to the former shah to occupy them.

As regards rumours of an Iraqi-Iranian mediation, Dr. Hammadi said that Iraq will accept no mediation in this respect because "the Iranian regime's policy will prove to be wrong".

MARCHAIS INTERVIEWED ON AFGHANISTAN, BALANCE OF FORCES

ID112254 Paris Domestic Service in French 1710 GMT 11 Jun 80

["Face the Public" interview with Georges Marchais, by journalists Thierry Pfister, LE NOUVEL OBSERVATEUR; Patrice Duhamel, Television TF-1; Andrew Manon, SUD-OUEST; Thierry Desjardins, LE FIGARO; Joseph Plateou, Paris Radio; Claude Guillaumin, moderating--live]

[Excerpts] [Guillaumin] Let us begin with Afghanistan. Soviet troops have been in Kabul 6 months, and, as far as we know, things are not going easily. Many Afghans do not accept the state of affairs and are showing it, it seems, with force. What do you think of this situation, which apparently the Russians did not foresee?

[Answer] What I think and what we hope is that a political solution may be found as soon as possible for the situation in Afghanistan. I think the Afghan Government has made constructive proposals, that is, that there should be a commitment from the neighboring countries--on the basis of talks naturally--Pakistan first and then Iran, of noninterference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan. There should be a commitment to good relations, good neighborliness. And the Afghan Government even made the proposal that such an agreement could be guaranteed by the great powers.

On this basis the Afghan Government is saying: Well, we can discuss, plan the withdrawal of Soviet troops. Thus the solution to the problem posed in Afghanistan is a political solution. This is the direction in which we must go.

If I need to repeat our position, that of our party, I will do so. First, the Afghan Government concluded very long ago a mutual assistance agreement with the Soviet Government. This was its right, the right of the Afghan Government, as it was the right of the Soviet Government. I do not see why there should be two sorts of states in the world, those which have the right to conclude defense or mutual assistance agreements, and why should the socialist countries not have the right to do so?

Such an agreement existed since 1921; it was renewed several times, the last time in 1978. The Afghan Government called for aid from the Soviet Union due to intervention coming from abroad, in particular from Pakistan. I note, moreover, that daily we hear on the radio and see on the television how no one denies that foreign arms are supplied to--what you call--the Afghan rebels, to continue their fight. It was in this situation that the Government of Afghanistan asked for aid from the Soviet Union and the Soviet Union intervened.

The Soviet Government has always supported the idea that it was only there to prevent intervention from abroad. These are the political factors of the problem. I would add that the Soviet Government always said that it could not allow foreign military bases to be systematically established on its frontiers. I would point out that the Americans have 2,500 military bases around the world.

[Unidentified journalist] They never had any in Afghanistan.

[Answer] I understand that the Soviet Union is also anxious about its defense. Thus, it was both to respond to an agreement concluded between two states and at the same time to protect itself against intervention on its frontiers, from threats on its frontiers, that the Soviet Union intervened. Today, the Babrak Karmal government is making political proposals for a political solution. I think that all those who are concerned to see the Soviet troops withdraw as soon as possible should want the conclusion of such an agreement.

[Unidentified journalist] Mr Marchais, the Communist Party has always been in favor of self-determination for the peoples, so are you in favor of self-determination for the Afghan people?

[Answer] For imperialism, it is basically a question of preventing the peoples from freely exercising self-determination. And in this situation we, the French Communist Party, are resolutely beside the peoples who are fighting for their independence, their freedom to adopt the social system of their choice. And we recognize the right of these peoples to call for solidarity from other peoples, from other governments.

[Manon] Mr Marchais, a few years ago the French Communist Party came out in favor of the French strike force. On the other hand, you are against the manufacturing and use of the neutron bomb. I should like to ask you some questions. First, what is, if you like, the modernization and reinforcement of the French strike force [as heard]? Also, what is your present notion of national defense, of our national defense and of our alliance policy?

[Answer] When we... First of all you should know that the French Communist Party's basic position is to be in favor of disarmament. That is our basic position. In that, we are faithful to the tradition of the French workers' movement. We are for disarmament because we think... No one will ever persuade us that you prepare for peace by means of the arms race. And the second argument is that arms are very expensive and that we cannot therefore satisfy the people's needs while spending huge sums, as is done in the arms race. For that double reason, basically, the French Communist Party fights for disarmament.

Having said that, we are under no illusion. The path to general, controlled disarmament, which respects the security of peoples and states, is a long, long path along which we will only make gradual progress. That is why we cannot leave France in a position of weakness in which it could be exposed to aggression. So France must have a defense system, and a credible defense system.

We decided to opt for the strike force--but the strike force as a deterrent. I needn't explain that I think you all know what that means here: a force which any state, whatever kind it may be, must know that if France finds itself compelled to defend itself, in other words, if it was attacked, France would without hesitation use its atomic strike force. In that sense, it is a deterrent force.

Well now, we think that this strike force must not only be kept, but maintained in a condition to provide a valid riposte, to discourage any aggressor, whoever it may be, threatening our country.

As for the neutron bomb, that's another matter. The neutron bomb is a bomb which does in fact, completely alter France's military strategy. It is not a deterrent any longer. It is an aggressive force. With neutron bomb it's a matter of carrying the war into territories outside our country, in other words, outside what is called the national sanctuary. So it is a case of abandoning the defense policy implemented by General de Gaulle. That is, the strike force as an all-round deterrent, directed against any aggressor, whoever it may be--whereas today no one hides the fact that the French strike force is aimed toward the Soviet Union and the socialist countries.

Consequently we are opposed to the neutron bomb because it is an alteration to France's military defense strategy. We are still committed to the deterrent.

We feel that France has a duty to play an infinitely more active part--and you may have a question on this issue--an infinitely more active part that it does at present in advancing along the path of disarmament. And I would add that we are not proposing... We are against military blocs. We are in favor of the simultaneous disbanding of the military blocs. In this, incidentally, we are being faithful to the commitments we have always made. We are not proposing--even though we are against the military blocs--we are not proposing that France should now unilaterally leave the Atlantic bloc, because we do not think there is any contradiction in the fact that France is in the Atlantic Alliance but at the same time carries on an independent policy, a policy, if I can put it this way, of nonalignment in the sense that the French Government ought to take appropriate initiatives with a view to furthering the cause of disarmament. That is our policy.

It is obvious that no one wants to alter the balance of forces. No one does. Nevertheless, that is NATO's chosen objective. The introduction of cruise and Pershing missiles is going to alter the balance of forces in Europe in NATO's favor.

[unidentified journalist] Because it believes that there is already an imbalance in favor of the East.

[Answer] No, it isn't true. The introduction of the cruises and Pershings will alter the balance of forces in favor of NATO and at the expense of the socialist countries, which will cause the socialist countries to take steps to restore the balance. And I can understand why, and give them my approval, because I think that if there were an imbalance in military forces in favor of imperialism we would already have a third world war.

EL SALVADOR DELEGATION VOICES FEAR OF U.S. INTERVENTION

LD101139 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 6 Jun 80 p 10

[Unattributed report: "U.S. Military Intervention Being Prepared"]

[Excerpts] An El Salvador Democratic Revolutionary Front delegation was received at PCF Central Committee headquarters yesterday. (Note: PCF Central Committee Secretary Jean Colpin, Patrick Le Mahec and Georges Fournial received the Democratic Revolutionary Front delegation which comprised Hector Oqueli, National Revolutionary Movement; Salvador Arias, Independent Movement of Liberal Professions; Father Rutilio Sanchez, Christian Revolutionary Movement; Farid Handal, Nationalist Democratic Union; and Fabio Castillo, People's Liberation Movement). "A U.S. military intervention in our country is possible. It could be imminent," the El Salvador representatives stated, adding that "all forms of peaceful struggle have been exhausted. The armed path has been forced on us."

A delegation from the Democratic Revolutionary Front, which contains more than 100 people's organizations, political parties and trade union organizations, is now touring Europe to alert people and appeal for solidarity.

Yesterday the El Salvador representatives thanked the PCF and the Committee for the Defense of Freedom and Human Rights chaired by Georges Marchais for their solidarity. According to them, El Salvador is facing a serious threat: direct armed U.S. intervention.

Two recent official U.S. declarations do indeed suggest the worst. Was it not Mr Carter's adviser Brzezinski who said: "We will not accept another Nicaragua in the region."

Did Mr W. Brodwel, who is in charge of Latin American affairs at the State Department, not indicate that the Americans will intervene if other foreign forces interfere in El Salvador affairs?

However the massacres have not succeeded in stemming the people's determination to bring about real change. While all observers agree that only the United States is intervening in El Salvador, Washington is conditioning public opinion in a way which resembles a priori justification for a landing by the Marines.

The Democratic Revolutionary Front advocates armed struggle.

Indeed all forms of peaceful struggle seem to have been exhausted. In the past 14 years the democratic forces have won the presidential and parliamentary elections. The results have never been respected.

After the overthrow of the dictator Romero last October several leftwing parties agreed to take part in the government since they did not want to spurn any chance of bringing about change. "It only took 80 days to stifle any hope of a peaceful solution," an El Salvador delegate said yesterday.

Indeed what other path could the El Salvador people's liberation struggle take since it is now facing an outright attempt at extermination?

LOCAL ELECTIONS SUMMARIZED; LOW TURNOUT NOTED

AU110930 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Text] Rome, June 11 (ANSA)--With the election returns all in for the regional, provincial and municipal elections in Italy this week, the one consistent change throughout the nation was the Socialist Party (PSI) gains at all three levels of the local vote. Overall results showed no upsets in the balance of power among the various parties and were variously interpreted as confirmation of the holding power of Premier Francesco Cossiga's government coalition.

The other new element in the Sunday-Monday vote was a relatively low voter turnout compared to Italy's traditional high percentage. In the latest elections seventeen percent of the electorate stayed away from the polls while 6.2 percent cast blank or invalid ballots. The nationwide voter turnout of 88.5 percent was the lowest since 1946. Last year 90.4 percent of the electorate cast votes and the blank and invalid ballots were little more than 1.5 million. An electorate of about 43 million persons was called on the cast ballots for fifteen regional councils, 86 provinces and 6,590 city councils.

Cossiga's own Christian Democrat Party (DC) suffered setbacks compared to the 1979 parliamentary elections but showed gains on the local level compared to the last administrative elections in 1975.

The Communist Party (PCI), the second largest in the country, made gains over last year's general elections but slipped locally from its 1975 record showing. As a result of the last administrative elections, the PCI became an active governing partner in many regions, provinces and cities throughout the peninsula.

As for the DC's government partners, the PSI made substantial gains with respect to both the last administrative and legislative elections, while the Republican Party (PRI) held on to its overall political standing (1979) but suffered slight losses on the regional level.

The Proletarian Unity (PDUP) party gained votes at the regional level and held on to its national percentage. The two minor opposition parties, the right-of-center Liberals (PLI) and centrist Social Democrats (PSDI) held on to their past electoral standings. The neofascist MSI party also held on to its percentage, making gains in Naples. The Radical Party did not appear on administrative slates but campaigned for abstention or casting blank ballots.

It is difficult to forecast on purely arithmetic counts the future of local party governments. In Milan, the leftist PCI-PSI-PSDI coalition has 42 seats out of a total of 80 and the ruling arrangement could possibly be continued. In Naples, the PCI-PSI-PSDI-PRI coalition now holds forty seats out of sixty, a wide majority. In Bologna, where the Communist Party has ruled since 1946, the PCI lost its absolute majority and the PCI-PSI coalition now has 35 seats out of a total of 60.

ATTACKS IN MILAN, ROME LEAVE ONE LIBYAN DEAD, ANOTHER WOUNDED

ID112023 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1900 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Text] A Libyan citizen in Milan has been murdered. (Mohammed Azavi Laderi), age 56, was killed shortly after 1800 at the railway station. The crime occurred in the public telephone area. He was a native Libyan and he is survived by two sons in Libya. In Italy, he was a wholesale industrial machinery dealer who lived in Bolzano. (Laderi) was killed by five pistol shots. The man who shot him threw the pistol to the ground before running away.

This crime took place only a few hours after the attempt in Rome against another Libyan, (Mohammed Bita), who was wounded in his apartment by fellow countryman (Abdel Iabi Shudi), the attacker invoked Al-Qadhdhafi's name twice before shooting. The attacker has been arrested by the police. (Bita's) condition is not serious but the bullet which grazed his temple was meant to be fatal, according to the attacker. As is known, last night was the deadline given to Libyans living abroad since the revolution. If the refugees do not return home by 11 June, the colonel said a few months ago in a speech at the military academy of Tripoli, they would inevitably be liquidated, wherever they were.

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON STRENGTHENING DEFENSE FORCES

ID112338 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2030 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Excerpt] The Chamber of Deputy's Defense Commission today discussed Italy's military policy. Minister Lagorio presented a report.

The crux of our military policy is the Atlantic Alliance. The equilibrium in Europe between the forces of NATO and the Warsaw Pact is the hinge of world security. Having said this, the minister of defense defined NATO as a defensive military alliance which is geographically limited, a force of discussion ready for a dialogue without yielding. This strategy has been confirmed and recorded by the recent meetings of the NATO defense ministers.

Within that framework, Lagorio said, Italy must face burdensome commitments for the strengthening of conventional forces with reference to the joint directive which imposes a 3 percent increase in the military budget. The comprehensive efficiency of our armed forces is at the limit of acceptability, because of the scarcity of funds. The expenditure of nearly 6 trillion [lire] per annum, which is equivalent to 76,000 lire per citizen, is among the lowest for the NATO countries. Then we must take into account the insufficiency of training and the exodus to the civil sector of specialized personnel. In order to improve the efficiency of the armed forces, the minister indicated in detail the various sectors of intervention. Faced with the continual increase of the Warsaw Pact forces, the minister concluded, it is impossible for us to give up and [word indistinct] the duties of security [words indistinct] taking into account the basic objective of disarmament and detente.

POPE JOHN PAUL'S BRAZILIAN TRIP DETAILED

AU091959 Rome ANSA in English 1940 GMT 9 Jun 80

[Text] Vatican City, June 9 (ANSA)--Pope John Paul II will also travel to the Amazon region during his trip to Brazil which starts on June 30. The Amazonian capital of Manaus has been added to the pope's itinerary, it was learned here today during an audience John Paul granted to a group of bishops. The pope will travel to a semi-explored region of the Amazon between July 8 and 10. John Paul will go the Amazonian capital of Manaus from Belem, the northern Brazilian city on the Atlantic coast. Altogether the pontiff will visit 13 Brazilian cities in 11 days, between June 30 and July 10. The Manaus visit should be the next-to-the-last stop on an itinerary that covers 30,000 kilometers. The Brazilian episcopate has for several years worked in defense of the fights of the 'Indios' living in the Amazonian forest who are threatened with massacres and expropriation of their lands.

No official program has yet been issued by the Vatican but it is thought that Brasilia will be the first stop. Other spots on the itinerary are Belo Horizonte, Rio de Janeiro, San Paulo, the Marian sanctuary of "Aparecita", Porto Alegre, Curitiba, Sahio (called Sao Salvador) Recife (the diocese of eminent Archbishop Dom Helder Camara), Teresina, Belem, Manaus, and Fortaleza. [Excerpts] Nigerian External Affairs Minister Ishaya Audu has arrived on a visit to Madrid. His visit takes place in the context of the Spanish diplomatic offensive of direct contact with the countries of black Africa and particularly with regard to its policy below the equator.

On his arrival at Barajas Airport the Nigerian external affairs minister said that Nigeria and Spain have a lot in common. Both countries are going through an important phase in their development. They are living through a (?similar) experience in the strengthening of democracy in their state structures. We are also two countries which, he says, carry out a policy of noncommitment to and independence from the big powers. Spain and Nigeria, he said, also have a similar policy with regard to the intentions of the United Nations. Mr Audu, in the first visit by a Nigerian minister of external affairs to Spain, will have an audience with the king.

VENEZUELAN, ECUADOREAN OIL MINISTERS ON TIES WITH MADRID

LD112108 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Excerpts] Shortly after the end of the Algiers OPEC meeting, the former president of that powerful organization, the Venezuelan Minister for Energy and Mines Humberto Calderon Berti, and his Ecuadorean opposite number, Jose Cardenas, arrived in Madrid at the invitation of Spanish Industry Minister Ignacio Bayon.

While expressing satisfaction with the agreements reached in Algiers, both South American ministers reported new developments in relations with Spain. The Venezuelan minister, for example, announced that he had come to have talks with members of the Spanish administration on the possibility of increasing Venezuelan oil sales to Spain.

He added that there is mutual interest in increasing the 70,000 barrels of crude oil per day currently sold by Venezuela to Spain. Such possibilities, he said, would come within the framework of a new style of negotiation. The minister, meanwhile, commented here on the new oil prices--from $28 to $32 per barrel--agreed upon in Algiers. They said that with these measures it had been agreed for the first time that prices and production should have greater uniformity.

Gonzalez said that the subject of the hostages in Iran is not, in any case, the principal reason for the Oslo meeting, because the task of mediation will not be up to the European socialists.

SWISS LABOR PARTY DELEGATION HOLDS TALKS WITH PCE

LD111205 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 6 Jun 80 p 5

[Unattributed report: "Meeting Between Swiss Labor Party and PCE"]

[Text] At the invitation of the PCE, a Swiss Labor Party delegation comprising comrades Armand Magnin, secretary general, and Politburo member Pierre Gueniat has visited our country.

In an atmosphere of frank comradeship and friendship, characteristic of relations between the two parties, they held talks with a PCE delegation comprising Executive Committee members Ignacio Gallego, Jose Maria Gonzalez Jerez, Ramon Mendezona and Jose Garcia Meseguer. Views were exchanged on the situation in their respective countries and the struggle which both parties are waging to defend the interests of the workers and their people.

The Swiss Labor Party delegation expressed great interest in the development of the democratic process in Spain and expressed its solidarity with the PCE's efforts to give impetus to unity among the left and the other progressive forces in order to counter the Union of the Democratic Center government's rightward shift and to tackle the grave economic crisis and unemployment, develop the state of the autonomies and effectively stop terrorism of various kinds.

For its part, the PCE delegation expressed solidarity with the struggle of the Swiss Communists and workers to defend the people's masses' living standard and to safeguard and develop democratic rights.

The problems of the Spanish workers in Switzerland were also broached, with the cooperation between the two parties to resolve them and extend the emigrants' democratic rights being positively assessed.

With respect to the international situation, both delegations expressed their full solidarity with the peoples struggling for their freedom and independence. They expressed their concern at the succession of negative phenomena which have gravely exacerbated it. Together with the further blows sustained by imperialism in Nicaragua, Zimbabwe and other countries, the process of detente has experienced a regression and the arms race has been accelerated, especially with NATO's decision to deploy the "Euromissiles" and the freezing by the United States of ratification of the SALT II agreements.

In addition, the trend toward intervening in international problems with acts of force, which increase the danger to world peace, makes the need to surmount the policy of military blocs even more imperative.

Action to safeguard detente and peace and curb the arms race is essential in order to be able to tackle the crisis affecting the capitalist societies, whose effects are having repercussions throughout the world.

The two parties deem it essential to create the most favorable atmosphere for the success of the Madrid CSCE conference--an atmosphere which will make it possible to restore conditions of full sovereignty to each country and pave the way for political negotiations to resolve existing conflicts and tensions.

Both delegations emphasize the need to make the utmost effort for mobilization, initiative and cooperation among all the forces of peace and progress in order to resume detente and preserve world peace. In this task an important role rests with the workers and democratic forces of West Europe--communist, socialist, social democratic and of Christian inspiration.

At the conclusion of its visit, the Swiss Labor Party delegation held a very cordial meeting with PCE Secretary General Comrade Santiago Carrillo.

PRC'S HUANG HUA ARRIVES, TALKS WITH FRYDENLUND

OW120921 Hong Kong AFP in English 0811 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Text] Oslo, June 12 (AFP)--China's Foreign Minister Huang Hua started a four day official visit to Norway today in the course of a tour of Scandinavian countries which has already taken him to Sweden. At Oslo airport, where he was met by Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund, Mr Huang said the world at present was in a very critical situation that made it important to exchange views. "Our aim is to fight all kinds of aggression and work for an international detente. We want to have peace and detente as the Nordic countries do," Mr Huang said.

Later today he was due to meet King Olav before starting talks with Prime Minister Odvar Nordli and Mr Frydenlund. Among topics likely to be discussed were the international political situation and bilateral relations, informed sources said.

Mr Huang said China was interested in developing its friendly relations with Norway and to learn from Norway's advanced technology and science and use it in China's four modernisations. He recalled that Norway was among the first countries to recognize the People's Republic of China 30 years ago, and said this was the best foundation for developing cooperation between the two nations.

Mr Frydenlund said the Afghanistan situation would be discussed thoroughly by them both. China's picture of the Soviet Union as an aggressive superpower has been taken more seriously after Moscow's intervention in Afghanistan, he added but stressed that Norway would continue its policy of detente and advocate that conflicts should be solved through negotiations.

Mr Frydenlund rejected claims in the Soviet press that by sending Mr Huang to Scandinavia China was trying to bring the Nordic countries under its influence. "We regard this to be a perfectly normal visit and our view is that China has taken an important step out of its isolation," Mr Frydenlund said.

PORTUGUESE AID IN MOZAMBICAN PROJECTS BEING STUDIED

LD091401 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 6 Jun 80 p 7

[Unattributed report: "Broader Cooperation With Portugal"]

[Text] Norway is interested in the idea of experts from Portugal taking part in Norwegian aid projects in Mozambique. Portugal, as the old colonial power in Mozambique, has experience--and not least a linguistic advantage--which can be of use to Norway.

Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund gave a report on Thursday on the content of the political talks held between Portuguese President Antonio Ramalho Eanes, who on Thursday ended a 3-day state visit to Norway, and representatives of the government led by Prime Minister Odvar Nordli.

In his speech at Akershus on Wednesday at the dinner given for him by the government, President Eanes attached great importance to Portugal's role as a bridgebuilder between the rest of Europe and Africa.

"It is Norway's opinion that Portugal has a significant role to play in relations between Europe and Africa, and considers President Eanes' visit an important development in relations between Norway and Portugal," Frydenlund said.

Apart from Prime Minister Nordli and Foreign Minister Frydenlund, Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg, Finance Minister Ulf Sand and Trade Minister Reiulf Steen took part in the meeting with President Eanes.

PRC FOREIGN MINISTER VISITS KIRUNA IRONWORKS

LD111846 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1600 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Summary] "Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua will conclude his official visit to Sweden tomorrow morning and go on to Oslo. Today the Chinese guest visited Kiruna to see Swedish mining technology at the Lkab [mining company] installations. For some time talks have been under way between a consortium of Swedish companies and the Chinese about Swedish cooperation in an extensive modernization of a big Chinese iron mine, and the Chinese visit to Kiruna may be a step on the way toward such Swedish-Chinese cooperation.

The Chinese foreign minister was accompanied by Industry Minister Nils G. Asling. It was not possible to make an stopover landing in Lulea, and in Kiruna the hot Swedish summer weather had turned into a chilly, windy day and the midnight sun was hidden begind the clouds.

This morning the Chinese delegation was able to see several of the automated and computerized installations at Lkab. The Chinese were able to see unmanned trains loading ore from the pits and also discharging their cargo under remote control.

"Kirunavaara, which is the world's biggest underground mine, can fascinate even a layman, Foreign Minister Huang Hua said."

AFP on Huang Hua Visit

OW111457 Paris AFP in English 1103 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Stockholm, June 11 (AFP)--China and Sweden today reaffirmed their commitment to growing cooperation, despite differing views of the international situation.

As Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua rounded off an official three-day visit with a tour of iron mines at Kiruna in the north of this Scandinavian country, observers said his stay should be viewed at two quite different levels. His political talks on Monday, with Swedish counterpart Ola Ullsten, revealed mainly that Stockholm does not share Chinese views on the international situation. As a neutral nation, Sweden does not agree with Beijing's view that the Soviet Union is entirely to blame for present tension.

But Mr Huang also discussed bilateral relations with Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin and other Swedish leaders, and reliable sources said today Mr Falldin had accepted in principle an invitation to visit Beijing around the end of the year. Observers viewed the Beijing trip as a chance for progress in trade links between the two countries, which both view as insufficient. Exchanges reached only 824 million crowns (200 million dollars) last year, accounting for less than one percent of Sweden's foreign trade. Numerous Swedish companies have been in contact with China--some for a long while--with electronic, mechanical and pharmaceutical companies interested both in investing in China and marketing their products there.

Mr Huang today expressed interest in boosting student and sports exchanges with Stockholm, while refraining from commenting on Swedish participation in this summer's Moscow Olympics. Mr Huang's final engagement here was to be a dinner tonight at the Chinese Embassy, before he flies to Oslo early tomorrow.

KAMPUCHEAN OFFICIAL TOLD: 'NO PLANS FOR RECOGNITION'

LD110957 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 6 Jun 80 p 6

[Kaa Eneberg report: "Kampuchea's Foreign Minister [as published] Visiting; No Swedish Recognition"]

[Excerpt] Swedish aid to Kampuchea will continue with reduction, but with an increase in the number of experts sent to the country. Sweden has, however, no plans to recognize the year-old Heng Samrin government.

The decision was announced to Keo Prasat, Kampuchean deputy foreign minister and Moscow ambassador, in Stockholm this week. In the last few days he has called on the government and various aid organizations, chiefly the Red Cross, to give his view of the situation in the divided, famine-stricken land.

At a time when the spotlight of international attention on Kampuchea has clearly faded and several countries have threatened to discontinue aid, the ambassador has requested, among other things, that Sweden should grant the Heng Samrin government diplomatic recognition.

Only the Moscow wing of the socialist states have so far recognized the regime.

The Pol Pot regime, toppled with the aid of Vietnam, enjoys the support of Beijing. Pol Pot's forces are still said to control certain areas, the border areas with Thailand for example, and the regions around the great refugee camps near the borders.

For the Swedish foreign minister the visit comes at a difficult time. On the eve of Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua's visit next week, the Foreign Ministry has been at pains to emphasize that Keo Prasat has received the same treatment as Pol Pot's envoy received a year ago. Thus, senior civil servants have listened to Keo Prasat and reiterated that there are no plans for diplomatic recognition at the moment. In polite talks the Foreign Ministry has stated that there can be no recognition as long as Vietnamese troops are in the country.

Keo Prasat told me that he travels a great deal between Moscow and his own capital, Phnom Penh, and in such a way keeps abreast of developments at home. He said that the country still needs the Vietnamese as a counterbalance to "the forces of American imperialism and Chinese expansionism".

While waiting for the diplomatic recognition that Keo Prasat hopes will come one day, preparations are being made for the establishment of an information bureau in Stockholm. The Foreign Ministry has given its noncommittal permission--in the form of an answer of the type "anybody at all can open an information bureau in Sweden"--and the support committee, "the Committee for Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea," is now seeking premises and financing.

Keo Prasat told DAGENS NYHETER that Swedish recognition would be important for the regime. Sweden is seen as a neutral country which could sympathize with his country's attempts to "build an independent, free state" with a socialist profile. Its final objective is to be counted among the nonaligned states.

GOVERNMENT TRYING TO PERSUADE ATHLETES TO BOYCOTT OLYMPICS

LD111928 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1744 GMT 11 Jun 80

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Excerpts] The government is to make an eleventh hour attempt to persuade British athletes not to take part in the Moscow Olympic games. Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington today invited British Olympic Committee Chairman Sir Denis Follows and 16 chairmen of the governing bodies for Olympic sports to a meeting next Thursday to discuss the call for a boycott. Officials stressed that this was not intended to be a confrontation, but that the government was continuing its policy of persuasion. And because Mrs Thatcher has ruled out more direct action such as taking away athletes' passports, this persuasion would be kept up to the end.

The government also hopes that there will be more individual defections among British sportsmen who find themselves, for reasons of conscience, unable to go to Moscow. Lord Carrington's invitation was issued in spite of a plea today from British Olympic officials for the government to get off our backs. Lord Carrington, in his letter of invitation, said some people felt that sportsmen were being called on to make a disproportionate sacrifice. "That is why I should very much like an opportunity to explain personally to you the strategy which we have been following since the Russians occupied Afghanistan and to set the Olympic issue in the context of this wider policy," he said. "At the same time, I should like to assure you that we have been trying to understand the feelings of those athletes we have asked to sacrifice so much for what we consider to be the security interests of this country."

Sports Minister Mr Hector Munro said today: "It is a continuing source of regret to us that our own British Olympic Association has not, and does not, see fit to support our line. But there is still time for a change of mind," he told the Association of District Councils Sport and Leisure Committee in London. "Certainly the association can be in no doubt that we are not in favour of a British team competing in the Soviet Union against a background of brutal subjugation and harsh aggression in Afghanistan by Russian troops." Mr Munro said he was disturbed that "certain local authorities have seen fit to use public funds" to support the sending of a British team to Moscow.

Sir Denis Follows said tonight that he would be going to Lord Carrington's meeting. But he added: "I don't know really what new the government can say. When we try to get the government interested in sport as a constructive thing we don't get much response. But when sport is to be used as a destructive exercise, it becomes an instrument of foreign policy." Sir Denis said most of the Olympic sports' bodies were committed to going to Moscow. "I don't see how, even if they wanted to, they could change their minds now."

VENICE SUMMIT SHOULD SUPPORT CAMP DAVID PROCESS

LD111041 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 11 Jun 80 p 18

[Editorial: "Middle East 'Initiative'"]

[Text] At their summit meeting in Venice tomorrow, the EEC heads of government will seek to reach agreement on a statement about the Middle East. This has been widely referred to as a European "initiative." The proposal was launched by Lord Carrington in February. The idea was that, as the Camp David negotiating process over Palestine autonomy between Egypt and Israel was bogged down, a European move was needed to break the jam. [paragraph continues]

As first propounded, the scheme had three main elements: recognition of the rights of Palestinians to "self-determination" (i.e. they could set up a separate state if they wanted); acceptance of the Palestine Liberation Organisation as the representative body of the Palestinians; and a move to get the Security Council to alter Resolution 242 so as to refer to "Palestinians" instead of "refugees."

As time went on, the proposals have been progressively watered down, in the face of combined American, Egyptian and Israeli disapproval. We sincerely hope they have been dropped for, as they stood, they could do nothing but harm. They would have no substantive effect on the autonomy negotiations, yet would lend encouragement to all those in the Arab world whose aim is to wreck the peace process started by Camp David. In his letter to the Conservative Friends of Israel organisation, released yesterday, Lord Carrington refers to the need to get Jordan involved. But King Husayn, whatever his public stance at any one time, is fiercely opposed both to the PLO and to the idea of a separate Palestinian state which would inevitably be under the rule of the PLO. The same thing goes for Saudi Arabia and other Arab moderates, whatever lip-service they feel constrained to pay.

The Venice summit should throw all its weight behind continuation of the Camp David process. It is the only plan in sight which has not only already achieved a large measure of success (peace between Egypt and Israel) but also offers the possibility of further progress. It is right that European leaders should show their interest. They should also show their support. No harm in telling Mr Begin to be more sensitive or else to make way for others who would be. But for Europe to try to curry favour with Arab oil producers by producing irresponsible proposals which it does not anyhow have the power to pursue is to practice "gesture politics" in the worst possible way.

GOVERNMENT PRESSING FOR NORTH IRELAND SELF-RULE

LD111043 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 11 Jun 80 p 36

[Nicholas Comfort report: "Cabinet Plan for Ulster To Go Ahead"]

[Text] The government is pressing ahead with its efforts to give Northern Ireland limited self-rule despite continued appeals by the prime minister of the republic, Mr Haughey, for the adoption of an "Irish dimension."

A meeting of ministers, with Mrs Thatcher in the chair, last night gave general approval to a discussion paper on the future of the province which had been prepared by a Cabinet committee under Mr Whitelaw, home secretary. The 70-minute meeting, attended by half the Cabinet, decided that a number of changes should be made to the document, which it is intended to publish at the end of the month as a Green Paper. The revision is not expected to interfere with this timetable and the document will go to the full Cabinet without further consideration at committee level.

Once the document is published, the government will hold consultations in the province on the various options for reconciling an elected assembly with the requirement that the Roman Catholic minority should have its interests protected.

Mr Haughey argued, after seeing Mrs Thatcher recently, that any proposals which did not involve the Dublin government would be doomed to failure. In a BBC television interview on Monday night he voiced the hope that he could convince the prime minister of the practical case for Irish unity. Mrs Thatcher, however, has done nothing to encourage him, having told MPs just before his visit that the future of the province was a matter for its people and for Parliament.

PAPER BLAMES DENKTAS REJECTION OF UN PLAN ON TURKEY

NC120658 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 12 Jun 80 p 1

[From the "Positions and Views" column]

[Excerpts] According to press reports, the Ankara talks of UN Under Secretary General Perez de Cuellar have not been effective. Despite assurances by Turkish officials that they favor resumption of the inter-Cypriot dialogue, the recently submitted Perez de Cuellar plan does not seem to have the Turkish Government's support.

Thus, it becomes obvious that Ankara was briefed by Denktas on the contents of the plan and the rejection of the plan by the Turkish Cypriot leader is probably due to Ankara's intervention. This view has a strong basis and provides a logical explanation of events. Although Denktas appeared to accept the Perez de Cuellar plan last Friday, the following day he expressed negative views. What happened in the meantime? This is definitely the result of Ankara's intervention.

On the other hand, the statement by Turkish Foreign Minister Erkmen is worth noting because it shows Turkish intransigence. Insistence on bizonality--in the way that it is interpreted by Turkey--aims at the partition of Cyprus. But, in such a case, the United Nations would diverge from this view because the UN resolutions speak about a united state. Therefore, the Turks will continue to boycott the UN efforts unless...unless we agree to partition or unless they are pressured by the West to change their present views.

TFSC'S ATAKOL RESPONDS TO ROLANDHIS CRITICISM

TA101203 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 10 Jun 80

[Text] Reiterating that the Turkish Cypriot side is ready to resume the intercommunal talks within the framework of Waldheim's proposals of 28 March, which were accepted by the Turkish Cypriot side after making concessions, Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Minister Kenan Atakol called on the Greek Cypriot leadership to act sensibly as well.

Atakol replied to Greek Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis' statement which was published in the Greek Cypriot press today and which accused Turkish Federated State of Cyprus President Rauf Denktas of cheating. Atakol said: Rolandhis is trying to interpret honorable Perez de Cuellar's statement to suit his own propaganda and is thus attacking our honorable president in a very ugly and wicked manner.

Pointing out that Rolandhis seems to be pleased about the failure to resume the intercommunal talks and is exploiting the situation in an undignified way, Atakol noted: We accepted the UN secretary general's proposals of 28 March after making a large concession. This proposal was rejected by the Greek Cypriot side without any justification. Now they want us to make further concessions. We have already made maximum concessions.

Atakol stressed that no one has the right to destroy the 25-year long resistance, struggle and sacrifice of the Turkish Cypriot side through Greek Cypriot schemes.

O AGON STATES TURKS MUST DEFINE BIZONALITY AT TALKS

NC120659 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 12 Jun 80 p 2

[From "Our Positions" column: "What Are the Turks Seeking?"]

[Text] In a statement after his meeting with UN Under Secretary General Perez de Cuellar, Turkish Foreign Minister Erkmen explicitly said that if the principles of bizonality and security for the Turkish Cypriots are not accepted in advance, there will be no talks.

The meaning of this Turkish demand, which is in the form of an ultimatum, is clear. The Turks want and seek to impose conditions on us prior to the holding of talks. They intentionally fail to clarify the contents of their conditions. They continuously fail to clearly define what they mean by the term bizonality and the term security for the Turkish Cypriots.

Obviously they want us to accept their conditions and, when the talks are held, they will tell us what they mean and will ask us to endorse them since we will have accepted them.

In a few words, they do not favor talks since there cannot be talks when the two sides cannot have the right to explain their views so that substantive negotiations be held.

However, since the Turks insist on bizonality and security for the Turkish Cypriots, let them come to the negotiations to tell us what they mean. Their demand that we accept the two concepts without knowing their content is tantamount to asking us to sign a blank check.

Perez de Cuellar was accompanied by Gobbi, special envoy of UN Secretary General Waldheim in Cyprus and by Gorge, Waldheim's special envoy on political affairs. At the airport the UN delegates were welcomed by representatives of the Foreign Ministry and the UN information center in Athens. Perez de Cuellar's visit is part of efforts being made by the UN secretary general for resumption of inter-Cypriot dialogue. At 1830 [1530 GMT] today Perez de Cuellar will confer with Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis. In the evening Mitsotakis will give an official dinner in honor of Perez. The dinner will be attended by Deputy Foreign Minister Rendis and other officials.

Comments to Press

AT111519 Athens Armed Forces Television Service in Greek 1500 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Replying to press questions upon his arrival in Athens, Perez de Cuellar said the negative results of the proposals for resumption of talks in Cyprus do not disappoint the United Nations because, he stressed, the UN has a duty to maintain continual contact between the two sides so as to be in a position to submit new ideas. The UN is always in the service of both sides, Perez explained, and it cooperates with both sides by proposing new ideas, which they then examine. In reference to his contacts in Ankara, he said he departed with the impression that the Turkish officials are interested in supporting UN efforts for the resumption of inter-Cypriot talks and for seeking a solution to the Cyprus problem. Answering another question as to whether he hopes for positive results soon, Cuellar said the UN will attempt to submit new proposals because this is its duty. It cannot exclude the possibility that the miracle will occur, that is, that both sides will accept a plan for a solution.

The foreign minister said he expressed the thanks of the Greek Government to the secretary general and to Perez de Cuellar for the organization's continued efforts, which the Greek Government always continues to support. At the same time Mitsotakis expressed disappointment over the position of the Turkish Cypriot side which once again led these efforts to failure.

PAPER ADVISES UN TO WAIT ON CYPRUS TALKS DUE TO GREEK ATTITUDE

NC111135 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 10 Jun 80 p 4

[Fahir Armaoglu commentary: "Cyprus Developments"]

[Excerpts] UN Secretary General Waldheim has been making concerted efforts since March for the resumption of the intercommunal talks. The recent talks which his assistant, Perez de Cuellar, had in Cyprus with Denktas and Kiprianou constitute the latest effort. Having failed to obtain a favorable result from these talks, which dealt with procedural matters, Perez de Cuellar arrived in Ankara yesterday. From here he plans to proceed to Athens. This shows that he is trying to get the Turkish and Greek governments involved in the Cyprus dispute.

Both Waldheim's and Perez de Cuellar's efforts are untimely. Although both the United Nations and the Turkish and Greek governments have agreed in principle that intercommunal negotiations are essential for the settlement of the Cyprus dispute, the truth is that the solution of this dispute lies in Greek-Turkish relations. Sp long as these relations are not conducted in a smooth and mature manner, no positive developments can be expected either in the Cyprus or the Aegean disputes.

Yet, since February, Greece has continually hardened its attitude toward Turkey. This started with the mining of the Aegean islands and gradually took the shape of a war psychosis in Prime Minister Rallis' mind. Greece is currently making a great fuss about U.S. and German aid to Turkey. Unless Greece changes its attitude, several Perez de Cuellars will come and go.

Greece's current attitude has a negative effect on the Cyprus issue. What is more, Kiprianou does not stand on firm ground in the Greek Cypriot sector and the internal situation is complicated. On the other hand, the current political atmosphere in Turkey makes it impossible for the Turkish Government to take a definite step.

In view of all this, it would be most reasonable for Waldheim to wait a little longer for a more suitable time, at least until after October, if the Cyprus issue is to be directed toward positive developments. The Cyprus dispute has lasted for 25 years. It will not be disadvantageous if it waits a little longer.

ERKMEN COMMENTS ON FOREIGN RELATIONS IN TERCUMEN INTERVIEW

NC120717 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 10 Jun 80 p 1, 9

[Exclusive interview with Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen by TERCUMAN correspondent Yavuz Donat in Ankara--date not given]

[Excerpts] Question: You have been in the government for the past 6½ months. Can you assess Turkish foreign policy during this period? What have been the main positive and negative developments?

Answer: The general lines of the foreign policy pursued by the governments of the Turkish Republic do not change. All the past and present governments try to implement Ataturk's principle of "peace at home, peace in the world." This principle requires Turkey to maintain friendly relations with its neighbors and to develop friendships which would enable it to protect its independence. Since World War II, two power centers, two international systems have come into being. Because of its geographic position, Turkey is between these two worlds. It may be argued that occasionally Turkey attaches more importance to one bloc than to the other. But the truth is that its general policy is to avoid instigating anyone, to steer clear of provocative policies, to maintain economic relations and to ensure its security from a military standpoint. During our tenure in office, our government has been implementing this policy without deviation.

The previous Turkish Government had, for some time, shown an inclination to shift more importance to the socialist bloc. This inclination had naturally created certain doubts in the minds of the community of the democratic countries, particularly NATO, to which we belong. We have set out to make it clear that our foreign policy preferences do not tally with such doubts and that no country should entertain such doubts against Turkey.

Question: How do you evaluate the suggestion made by French President Giscard d'Estaing that the process of admitting new members to the Common Market should be frozen for a while? Would not this stand pose a serious obstacle to Turkey?

Answer: No, it does not pose a serious obstacle. For this right originates in the Rome Treaty, which entitles every European country to membership provided that it embraces a democratic regime. Since this right is based on an international treaty still in force, the French president cannot possibly do away with it.

Question: The killing of 10 Turks on the Turkish-Iraqi border has caused strong repercussions among our people. The behavior of the Iraqi Government manifested itself in a strange manner, whereas the Turkish governments have always attached importance to our relations with Iraq. Could you say that Iraq is not responding to our positive policy? Would you assess this situation?

Answer: The main aim of our foreign policy is to maintain good and friendly relations with all countries. We naturally cherish the same desire with regard to Iraq. We were naturally annoyed by the recent incident. As was also stated in the Council of Ministers' communique, this incident runs counter to the clear provisions of an agreement we signed with Iraq 35 years ago. It is deplorable that 10 fellow countrymen of ours should lose their lives unjustly and for no obvious reason. It is, therefore, the duty of our government to satisfy the wounded public opinion and to safeguard the rights of the fellow countrymen who have lost their lives. In order to fulfill this duty, we have, as our public already knows, notified the Iraqi Government that we cannot possibly deem this vehement and deplorable incident to be normal, that the perpetrators should be caught and prosecuted and that we are willing to hold a joint investigation into the incident. If we jointly investigate the matter and find out those responsible and take steps to restore the rights of those who suffered from the incident, there is no reason why we should harden our relations with Iraq. I hope that the Iraqi Government will attach serious importance to the matter and that irreparable damage to the Turkish-Iraqi relations will be avoided.

Question: Since the Rallis government assumed office in Greece, Greece has begun to adopt a tough and stubborn attitude toward Turkey. Could you comment on this situation from Turkey's point of view?

Answer: The statement made by the Greek prime minister in the Parliament on the occasion of the new government program attracted our attention. Our honorable prime minister has expressed our views on this statement. We have chosen to examine the situation calmly. We did not want to embark on polemics. I still hold this view. The reasons for such behavior on the part of the new Greek Government could be traced to their domestic policy. Our relations with Greece are centered on the following: We wish to see our mutual interests in the Aegean determined in an atmosphere of mutual understanding. We also wish to reach an agreement with Greece on the question of the continental shelf. The international waters and airspace of the Aegean Sea should be freely used by every state. Greece should be careful to determine the status of our fellow countrymen in Western Thrace on the basis of the Lausanne Treaty and to protect their rights. Apart from this we have no claims.

These issues can be and should be resolved by both countries. We are neighboring countries. When we are not at peace with each other, we suffer setbacks in our relations with other parts of the world. We expect the Greeks to show similar understanding. We hope that the new government in Greece does not adopt a contrary attitude. There is no reason why the Greeks should harbor any doubts about us. We do not, by any means, cherish aggressive aspirations, yet it is inconceivable that the Greeks should continually repeat the view that a balance should be maintained between the two countries. They want a balance based on their own interpretation. It is quite easy to prove that such a balance is neither valid nor realistic. When the areas, the population and the amount of threat facing both countries is taken into consideration, the invalidity of the argument they advance in connection with balance of power becomes too obvious for words. We should not be expected to ask for Greece's permission to increase our defense strength. No rule, no international law, no international organization can prevent us from raising our defense strength to the required level. The military aid extended to us by the Federal Republic of Germany is determined by the Federal Republic of Germany itself and is the result of the importance it attaches to Turkey. The Greek Government has no right to interfere with this aid or to attempt to regulate it. The military aid given to Turkey by the United States is a prerequisite to our alliance and it is determined by the U.S. Government. The Greeks cannot set a limit to this aid either. These are not the only resources of our national defense system, these are additional resources of our national defense system. Our real source of national defense are our own national resources. In reinforcing our national defense strength through our own resources, we are taking care not to threaten any country and not to be carried away by any provocation. Beyond this we have no commitment. We shall do our best to achieve whatever we need. Greece's doubts and anxieties in this respect are totally superfluous. [paragraph continues]

Demands and arguments in this direction are harmful to the improvement of our relations. The NATO Council will soon meet in Ankara at the foreign ministerial level. The Greek foreign minister will be attending too. I will meet with him on this occasion. I hope that it will be a constructive meeting. I shall personally be very happy if this meeting creates the will that is needed to settle our problems as soon as possible.

QOTBZADEH, KREISKY ON CONTACTS AT SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL PARLEY

Qotbzadeh: Need for 'Crimes' Investigation

NC121635 Paris AFP in English 1622 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Text] Olso, June 12 (AFP)--Iranian Foreign Minister Sadeq Qotbzadeh repeated here today his government's demand for a thorough investigation into United States involvement in the "crimes" of the shah's regime.

Mr Sadeq Qotbzadeh, attending the international socialist conference in Oslo as an observer, told a press conference that if the U.S. were to set up a commission of inquiry into the crimes question "it would ease the atmosphere considerably." He said that if Iran's grievances against the U.S. were investigated and publicised "the crisis could be rapidly settled." Iran's parliament, he added, would be in session within a few weeks and could examine the question.

He had come to Oslo, he said, to explain his government's viewpoint, not to discuss the freeing of the hostages, but added that his "frank and open" talks with leaders of the International contributed to a "better understanding" of respective viewpoints and thus facilitated the search for a solution.

Qotbzadeh on Conditions for Hostages' Release

LD121719 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1600 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Text] In a couple of weeks the Iranian parliament will start discussing the question of what is to happen to the U.S. hostages in Iran. This was stated by Iranian Foreign Minister Sadeq Qotbzadeh at a press conference in Oslo today.

Qotbzadeh arrived at the meeting of the Socialist International in Oslo yesterday and today has had separate discussions with various members of the International. According to Qotbzadeh, the question of the hostages was not discussed today. The Iranian foreign minister stressed once again that the question is to be decided by the Iranian parliament. Here is a report from our Oslo correspondent:

The Iranian foreign minister could not produce any timetable for the possible freeing of the hostages, but he said he calculated that the Iranian National Assembly could begin to deal with the question in 2-3 weeks although a solution must come after direct talks between the United States and Iran. The role which the Socialist International can play in this connection is to contribute to creating a better atmosphere for future talks. Qotbzadeh did not press for the return of the shah to the Iranian authorities for prosecution, but emphasized that the important thing is that the world should know the crimes committed in Iran during the shah's regime and especially that this should be known to the U.S. public.

If the U.S. authorities want to improve the precondtions for the release of the hostages, there are a number of investigations which can be started, Qotbzadeh said. He named the role the United States played when the shah came to power in 1953 and asked: Who trained the shah's torture specialists? Who built the prisons for the shah? Who has destroyed our agriculture? Who is responsible for the fact that our army today has difficulty in functioning, despite the funds used for building up the army?

In summarizing the visit to Oslo of the Iranian foreign minister, which has aroused much attention, we can say that it perhaps has created a slightly greater understanding of Iranian views, but that it has not led to the Socialist International receiving any direct suggestion for a political initiative regarding the Iranian problem.

Kreisky Notes Release 'Plan'

WA122001 London REUTER in English 1941 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Stockholm, 12 June, REUTER--A plan has been worked out for negotiations on the release of the American hostages held in Iran for the past seven months, Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky said today. He told the Swedish news agency T.T. [Newspapers' Telegraph Agency] that in private talks in Olso yesterday with Iranian Foreign Minister Sadeq Qotbzadeh he had discussed how contacts he began in Iran last month could continue.

"There is a plan with regard to how we shall act in continued discussions on the American hostages in Tehran, but the plan is neither written down nor concrete," the agency quoted Dr Kreisky as saying. The chancellor added that the plan was for a negotiating process but he declined to give more precise details of his talks with Mr Qotbzadeh.

Kreisky Denies Plan for Release

WA122320 London REUTER in English 2303 GMT 12 May 80

[Excerpts] Oslo, June 12, REUTER--Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, who had private talks with Iranian Foreign Minister Sadeq Qotbzadeh in Oslo yesterday, said today that the Socialist International has not agreed on any plan with the Iranians which could lead to the release of the American hostages.

The Swedish news agency T.T. quoted Dr Kreisky today as saying in an interview that a plan for continued negotiations had been worked out. The Austrian leader denied that quotation but the Swedish news agency insisted its report was accurate.

Dr Kreisky said tonight, "We have made contact with the Iranians. I do not see why we should not continue these contacts. If you want to call that a plan, you may. But we have no plan for negotiating the release of the hostages," he told reporters upon returning to Oslo from Stockholm.

Dr Kreisky had left a two-day meeting of the Socialist International, where Mr Qotbzadeh was holding private meetings with West European socialist party leaders, to deliver an afternoon speech in Stockholm. In Stockholm, the Swedish news agency had quoted Dr Kreisky as saying: "There is a plan with regard to how we shall act in continued discussion on the American hostages in Tehran. But the plan is neither written down nor concrete."

Kreisky on Talks With Qotbzadeh

AU122104 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1950 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Erich Macho interview with Austrian Federal Chancellor Kreisky in Oslo on 12 June--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, you met with Iranian Foreign Minister Qotbzadeh last night within the framework of the Socialist International presidium session and you later also conducted a private talk with him. What was the subject of these talks?

[Answer] Well, it is simply a continuation of what was initiated by the visit of Palme, Gonzalez and myself. Thus, the visit of Qotbzadeh is to be regarded as a so-called followup. And now we continued the discussion of the situation and--naturally one cannot disclose the contents of private talks to the public--but everybody can imagine what was involved.

[Question] Stubborn rumors persist that the Socialist International has a plan for the liberation of the U.S. hostages. The long duration of the talks between Qotbzadeh and the Socialist International leaders corroborate these rumors. Does such a plan exist?

[Answer] There is--if the term plan is understood to imply something in writing, with specific proposals--then such a plan does not exist. But if it is understood as a policy, that is a policy of rapprochement and of efforts to understand the situation and also of mutually convincing each other of certain necessities--then this plan exists, then it consists of what we are doing.

[Question] If you were to assess the events in Iran, would you do this in a positive or negative sense? I am thinking here of the Amnesty International reports which note that there are violations of human rights in Iran today just as they were under the shah regime.

[Answer] Whether there are exactly the same violations of human rights as under the shah regime, that I cannot judge. It also is hard for me to believe. But it is clear that there certainly exist violations of human rights as in any revolution and that one must be cautious in this respect.

[Question] Do you see the revolution in Iran on a path to democracy?

[Answer] Well, for conditions there, some democracy already exists because nobody can contest that President Bani-Sadr was elected in an orderly election; nor can anybody contest that, in essence, the elections to the Iranian parliament were secret elections with certain violations--election frauds as they happen in some countries. But on the whole Iran has to date been involved in a democratization process. How long this process is going to last I do not know because one must realize that the revolution there is going on. There has been no final decision yet about the political orientation.

[Question] What will be the next step by the Socialist International concerning Iran?

[Answer] I think that now, perhaps tomorrow, we will have to deliberate in the light of experiences as to how we shall further cultivate these contacts. One thing is certain, however, and I am placing great emphasis on it: A considerable clarification process has been initiated. Today people in Iran very clearly realize the significance of certain problems and the European side of the Socialist International also is better informed now about the driving forces in Iran.

Further Kreisky Remarks

AU131210 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1036 GMT 13 Jun 80

[Ferdinand Hennerbichler interview with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky in Oslo--recorded; date not given]

[Text] [Question] Mr Chancellor, in your opinion what have been the results of the Socialist International session here in Oslo?

[Answer] First of all, this was a regular bureau session which dealt with a number of current problems, not with any special problems. Now the Tehran trip has shown that it would be useful to give a representative of the Tehran revolution an opportunity to outline his views before this forum here. He, the Iranian foreign minister, has done so extensively, and afterwards there were a number of talks. Today he will again very briefly repeat his views. When that is concluded I will deliver my report. And then we will see how we go on from there.

At any rate, what we wanted has been achieved--namely, to make Iran realize that we are not completely without interest in what is happening there. But, on the other hand, of course no doubt was left about the fact that the question of the hostages certainly does constitute a great obstacle regarding an opening toward democratic Europe. Although this question was not placed in the foreground because, after all, there have been other important events as well, we have left no doubt about how essential, how important this question is to all of us.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, you have already had an opportunity to talk with the Iranian foreign minister in Tehran. Now you have talked with him again here. If you compare these talks, what new aspects did he bring up in your opinion?

[Answer] New aspects--that is not so important. What matters is that wide circles in Iran do realize that this question--to which great attention is being paid by the Iranians too, although they do not want constantly to bring it up themselves--that this question really is very important and that it means more than the captivity of 51 people, or whatever their number may be. It is a question of principle, and that must be realized over there. Whether or not that will help, I do not know.

[Question] Do you believe that one might now have a little more hope that the whole crisis--the Iranian crisis, Iranian relations with the Americans, as well as the question of the hostages--could now be solved?

[Answer] As far as relations with the Americans are concerned, I do not have very great hopes that they will improve very quickly--the thorns have penetrated too deeply in the past--but on the question of the hostages I actually do have the feeling that it will be possible to find a solution.

[Question] Summing up, would you say that a better understanding, a better basis for mutual relations has actually been achieved?

[Answer] I would not want to go as far as that. All I want is to say that this time we have made sure that we cannot be reproached in a few years time for not having done anything to prevent any isolation that might develop. We have done everything in our power. And now we will have to see how things develop.

[Hennerbichler] Thank you very much, Mr Chancellor.

LEADERS OPEN MEETING IN VENICE; DISCUSS INTERNAL CONFLICTS, PLO

Opening Session

AU122005 Rome ANSA in English 1940 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Text] Venice, June 12 (ANSA)--The heads of state and government from the European Economic Community nine member nations opened their two-day summit early this afternoon on Venice's Island of San Giorgio with a survey of the Community economic situation and energy problems.

After remarks delivered by French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and the West German chancellor, Helmut Schmidt, Italian Premier Francesco Cossiga, duty chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers, made a comprehensive statement on economic problems.

Cossiga noted that for several years, the economic issues the EEC Nine have grappled with have been virtually identical and that "the therapy applied is valid but should be used more consistently." The effects of these economic policies, the Italian premier said, "are often limited by domestic factors such as uncertainties surrounding energy supplies and prices." Cossiga went on to affirm that, "energy will be the major problems on the agendas for the next several years yet and is an issue closely bound up with prospects for economic development and the creation of new jobs."

The head of the Rome government also linked the energy problems to the need for reviving the North-South dialogue and especially those talks between the industrialized, oil consuming nations and developing, non-oil producing countries.

Economics, Admissions Issues

LD121948 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Text] Venice--The summit of the heads of government of the European Community opened its sessions this afternoon. Here is a report by one of our representatives, Luciano Lombardi:

As the current president, Cossiga opened the debates recalling the pledge which has thus far characterized the position of each state vis-a-vis a more balanced and harmonious development of joint policies. He also recalled the contents of the document submitted to him yesterday evening by the trade unions. Having overcome the British problem, the EEC must now face the knotty problems stemming from the admission of Greece, which has already been decided upon, and the admission of Spain and Portugal, which by virtue of the weakness of their economic bodies risk giving a southern hue to the entire Community. In this connection a statement by the German Chancellor Schmidt appears significant. Schmidt stated that there was no need to slow up the process of integrating and widening the Community. He said that it was necessary to revise the Community balance. How that is to be done has not been said yet.

The first part of the meeting between the European heads of state here on the Island of San Giorgio dealt with economic, monetary and energy problems and the North-South dialogue between Europe and the countries of the Third World. It is clear that the entire economic policy of the EEC revolves around energy. It is equally clear that if the therapy adopted until now has not proved to be effective, then that is due to external factors which from time to time condition the line of economic policy.

Report on Budget, CAP

ID121940 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1925 GMT 12 Jun 80

[By Geoffrey Meade, PA staff reporter and Steve Levinson, PA economics correspondent at the EEC summit in Venice]

[Text] West Germany, forced to pay the price of Mrs Thatcher's "two thirds of a loaf" Common Market budget settlement, tonight joined Britain in calling for drastic cuts in EEC spending. Under the deal hammered out in Brussels last month, West Germany takes Britain's place as the paymaster of Europe, with an estimated net bill of more than 1 billion pounds a year. Chancellor Helmut Schmidt told Mrs Thatcher in Venice today that he wanted to see strict limits on each member country's future contributions.

This has been Mrs Thatcher's constant plea in the tough battle to reduce the UK's EEC bill. Chancellor Schmidt's demands were made clear to the prime minister when the two met before the summit got underway in Venice this afternoon. They travelled together by motor launch amid tight security to the picturesque Venetian Island of San Giorgio, where the Nine are holding a two-day meeting.

Dozens of vessels containing security men, frogmen, and even doctors, bobbed in the water nearby as the government leaders arrived for the meeting in a 15th-century Benedictine monastery, now used as a naval training base.

The island, a few hundred yards across the water from Venice itself, has been turned into a virtual fortress for the meeting. Eight thousand extra troops and police have been drafted in, and all tourist visits from Venice to the island have been cancelled. Threats from the Red Brigades terrorist group are obviously being taken seriously.

Mrs Thatcher will not see much of her budget rebate before next year. West Germany is having difficulty with its own domestic budget and Chancellor Schmidt has wasted no time in joining the growing demands to cut the high cost of the Common Agricultural Policy [CAP]. The key element in achieving cuts in the British contributions was an agreement by the government to give the go-ahead for EEC farm price rises this year. But if Chancellor Schmidt has his way, such rises will not be approved in the future.

It was because the CAP devours three-quarters of the entire annual EEC budget that the UK found itself paying 6 1/4 the most into Community coffers while lying only seventh in the Common Market wealth league table. [as received]

But Chancellor Schmidt's worries do not put Britain's budget agreement in danger. West Germany is prepared to play its part in funding the UK rebate while pressing for early monetary reform, probably within 12 months.

The first day of the summit was dominated by economic topics. All nine countries were said to be concerned and worried about the recession in Europe and agreed on the need to defeat inflation.

EEC foreign ministers, including Lord Carrington, were expected to discuss the Middle East situation tonight. Britain is determined not to undermine either the Camp David agreement or existing United Nations Security Council resolutions on the issue. There will be no formal recognition of the Palestinian Liberation Organisation, but any communique is likely to mention the organisation. The EEC considers that any Middle East declaration from Europe must take account of the role of the PLO.

Discussion on Palestinian Question

ID122158 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2030 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Text] A meeting of the European Council was held on the Island of San Giorgio in Venice today. Here is a report by our correspondent:

Today has been a day of speeches at the meeting of the European Council. The most important decisions will be made tomorrow morning. In the main approval will have to given to an agreement on the Community's statement concerning the Middle East crisis. This evening at 2000, at the end of the first day's session, the heads of state and government have formulated the directives of principle entrusted to the foreign ministers for the final draft of the document on the Palestinian question. Nothing has transpired from the (?Longhena) library where the meeting is being held. It is known, however, that the controversial point of the debates concerns the role to be played by the PLO in the Middle East negotiations. As you have heard, the talks are not about recognition but about the role, I repeat, that 'Arafat's organization will have to play for the solution of the crisis.

At this morning's informal talks between Giscard d'Estaing and Schmidt, the German chancellor decisively opposed the recognition of the PLO. Giscard does not appear to have completely abandoned the game. His spokesman stated that Paris, together with another European partner, would make an autonomous decision on the Middle East and on the recognition of the PLO. But here in the circles of the Council, few people believe that President Giscard will go that far. It would be an act in open contradiction with the Camp David agreements, in other words, an attitude of breaking away from the United States, which none of the European allies thinks of sharing for a single moment.

As regards this point, the attitude of the Italian Government is quite clear. For Italy the Camp David negotiations must be carried forward, if one is to ever entrust the solution of the crisis to a gradual process of self-determination of the Palestinian people. Tomorrow morning at 1000 the heads of state and government will return to meet again at the Cini Foundation. At midday, during a press conference, Prime Minister Cossiga will make known the results of the summit. This is Giuseppe Chisari of Radio Two in Venice.

Statement on Mideast

NC131353 Paris AFP in English 1348 GMT 13 Jun 80

[Text] Venice, June 13 (AFP)--Heads of state and government of the European Economic Community (EEC) today adopted a statement on the Mideast specifically naming the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and recommending that it be "associated" with peace negotiations for the troubled region. The EEC statement said the time had come to "favorize recognition of two principles: the right to existence and security of all states in the region including Israel, and justice for all peoples implying recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people."

Adding that Israel must exist within secure, recognized boundaries, the statement said the nine EEC countries "are prepared to participate in a system of international guarantees."

"The Palestinian problem is not a refugee problem," the statement continued. "The Palestinian people must be able to fully exercise their right to self-determination."

Achieving these objectives required the participation of all the parties involved, including the Palestinian people and the PLO, which must be associated with the negotiations, the statement said.

KREISKY INTERVIEWED ON ISRAELI-PALESTINIAN ISSUE, IRAN VISIT

LD121557 Kuwait AS-SIYASAH in Arabic 10 Jun 80 pp 12-13

[Interview given by Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky to AS-SIYASAH Editor in Chief Ahmad al-Jarallah in Vienna "last week"--exact date not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] Certain people believe that your ambitions go beyond your interest in your country, Austria, and that you aspire to become one of the world's great leaders?

[Answer] Never. I do not want that. I do not aspire to acquire medals or Nobel Prizes. Should one ask me whether I qualify for a Nobel Prize, I would be prepared to give him a page full of the reasons why I do not qualify for the prize. Should peace be achieved between Israel and the Palestinaians in the future, I believe I would have made a slight contribution to it.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, allow me to say confidently that you were the first person to explain the Palestinian problem to the Europeans.

[Answer] Naturally--I am a democratic socialist. That was due to my political beliefs. I believe that all the area's peoples can coexist peacefully.

[Question] You have heard what happened in the West Bank yesterday. What is your opinion?

[Answer] It was a horrible act. Terrorism generates new terrorism and we must overcome the reasons for terrorism. It is stupid of the Israelis to use force. It is easy, and at the same time horrible, to hurl bombs and to shoot and kill people.

[Question] I know that you are a friend of 'Arafat and As-Sadat. How can you be a friend of two persons with conflicting attitudes?

[Answer] I am glad to be a friend of President Anwar as-Sadat because he is a great personality I have known. Naturally, this does not prevent me from adhering to a different view. In my capacity as a friend of 'Arafat, I can say that he has a strong personality and desires a peaceful solution. I appreciate the difficulties he is encountering in achieving a peaceful solution, I believe that 'Arafat would be the only man in the Palestinian camp who could participate. He is an important person and I will be glad if the gap between him and As-Sadat is narrowed. The Camp David peace process has not led to a solution to the Palestinian problem. I believe 'Arafat was right in saying so from the beginning. I personally believe that Menahem Begin is not prepared to find a solution. This is his personal and political philosophy. Despite the fact that I am (?probably hated [words printed indistinctly in original] very much in Israel, I am sure that there is a strong and growing tendency in support of peace at present. In my opinion, the people in the Arab world have begun to realize, following the Afghanistan crisis, that a peaceful solution in the area cannot be achieved for the Palestinians if the area cannot be protected in the future.

[Question] What does the future hold, in your opinion, for President Anwar as-Sadat at a time when he is being subjected to pressures from the Arab world, Israel and the United States? Will he remain in Egypt for a long time, politically?

[Answer] It is up to the Egyptian people to decide on this matter. But should big changes occur in the government, for example, the situation would be different as far as he is concerned. [paragraph continues]

Another point is that a person like Shi'mon Peres does not want Palestinians inside the State of Israel. Therefore, I belive that he is interested in finding an interim solution with Jordan for the establishment of a Palestinian state. This is the only way.

[Question] Certain people believe that the future favors Israel while others believe that it favors Yasir 'Arafat. What is your opinion?

[Answer] Should there be a peaceful solution, the future would be good for both of them. The Palestinians have a high standard of education that is equal to that of the Israelis. The two peoples can coexist without any feeling of inferiority. There are a great number of thinkers among the Palestinian people. They also have renowned doctors, technicans and professors. They are an extremely developed people and they can establish a state without any difficulties if they receive aid from the Arab world. I believe that the establishment of a new Palestinian state is possible provided Israel shares in certain arrangements.

[Question] What role can Europe play in a peaceful solution in the Middle East?

[Answer] The peaceful solution has been bound by the Camp David agreements. The democratic European states, however, should play their part in an atmosphere of solidarity on the basis of their understanding of the Palestinian issue and their support for the Palestinian people's right to self-determination. Recognition of the Palestinian rights is very significant; it constitutes the basis of the trend toward a peaceful solution. In fact, this is the main objective which our American friends are seeking to achieve. However, Palestinian rights were not clearly stated in the Camp David agreements.

[Question] Certain people in the Arab world believe that Israel's influence in the United States is bigger than the U.S. influence in Israel. Is that true?

[Answer] That is wrong. Should the American President ask the Israel people whether they would like to be ruled by the U.S. President or the Israeli prime minister, the answer would be much in support of Carter. All the wealthy, highly-placed and important Jews oppose Menahem Begin. He is neither loved nor supported by them. They hate him and are disgusted with him. It would be stupid not to exploit this negative aspect among the Jewish people. Should you ask any well-known Jew in the United States about Begin, his answer would be extremely negative. All the American Jews support peace. Why should they be against the Arabs? They are all successful people and cannot say that they are facing a Jewish problem. The fact is that if there were many Arabs in the street, people would say: There are many Arabs; if there were a lot of Jews, people would say: There are a lot of Jews. The same thing would apply if there were Germans or others in the street. But the Jews always have a deep feeling of anti-Semitism. This is the secret of their great envy.

[Question] Since you are Jewish origin, how does the Arab world receive you?

[Answer] It receives me very well. It is not important whether the relations or rulers, kings and prime ministers with me are friendly or not, though I truly like that. What makes me most happy, however, is what the Austrian tourists tell me upon their return from the Arab states. They tell me that the Arab factory workers had asked them to convey their greetings to Kreisky. Even the Bedouins had told them: "Kreisky is our friend." This makes me extremely happy. I am also happy with the attitude of the new generation in Israel. They come to see me saying that they share my views and they are grateful because I am working for peace. The "Peace Now" movement proves that the new generation in Israel wants peace.

[Question] Yes. But as an Arab, I know that Israel has an ideology which was created in the eighteenth century.

[Answer] Yes. But this ideology is subject to attack and it does not have the same effect as in the past. Israel is now going through an interesting process. The new generation is adhering less to the "old" ideals; it has more love for its country; it is less interested in tying itself to the Jewish world and is more interested in its country. As you have said, I have Jewish origins but I am not a Zionist. On the contrary, I refuse to believe that Zionism is the solution to the Jewish problem. There is no persecution at present. Under democracies, the Jewish people are not suffering from any persecution whether legally or illegally. But under dictatorships, persecution exists.

[Question] Have you washed your hands of economic relations between your country and the oil states?

[Answer] Yes, because there is a great controversy over this relationship. I do not wish to protect this system. You can tell your people in Kuwait that the Austrian people do not wish to exploit the situation. We are a friendly state. Had Austria been suffering from economic difficulties and problems, I would have been more cautious. I have not asked for funds from the Arab states. If you wish to lend us money, I believe that we would be prepared to discuss this matter seriously because we do not have sufficient foreign currency.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, we would like you to give us a picture of your recent visit to Tehran.

[Answer] We went to Tehran as representatives of the socialist democratic movement. We are vice chairmen of the Socialist International movement. We tried to contact the leaders of the Iranian Revolution to find out if there was an opportunity for better understanding and cooperation with democratic Europe in the future. We felt that there was sincere interest in this respect. Personally, I felt that the Iranians are split. Some groups have an open mind and want to cooperate while other groups do not wish to cooperate and tend to be isolated. The latter believe that the Western world constitutes a danger to them and to the Islamic revolution. The question of the hostages is one aspect of the multifaceted problem but that was not our task. Iran's problems emerged from the outset with the different views on the hostages issue. Of course, we made it clear that the holding of the hostages and their nonrelease up till now makes it difficult for us to assert our desire to establish relations with Iran. We were convinced that the release of the hostages hinged on a decision by the Iranian parliament. The general impression about the Iranian people is that they harbor hostile feelings toward the Americans, and it is very difficult for the Americans to bridge the gap between themselves and the Iranians.

In our capacity as democratic socialists, we are interested in following up the situation to prevent Iran's isolation from the democratic world. As for the attitude toward Washington, Iran still remembers its past experiences and the support the United States had given to the former regime. With regard to the Soviet Union, there is the problem which arose from its invasion of Afghanistan. I am not sure if Iran wishes to remain equidistant from the two superpowers but I believe that there is a tendency not to treat the two superpowers in the same manner.

[Question] Certain Arab polticians believe that the big powers' policy is to share the world among themselves and that Iran and Afghanistan are the Soviet's share. What is your opinion on this?

[Answer] We can see examples of this division. Western Europe is tied to the United States. Germany and Korea are divided. I do not completely exclude the tendency of the big powers to divide, share and make deals if possible. But I do not believe that there is an absolute need for all this at all. If the Middle East problem--that is the Palestinian problem--is solved tomorrow, provided that the solution is specific and there is no other solution, the situation will change completely.

You wish to know what kind of solution is possible. Well, if Yasir 'Arafat's statement that the PLO wants a Palestinian state in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank is true, and if what Shi'mon Peres had told me is true--that the Labor Party, should it come to power, would return the West Bank and Gaze Strip to Jordan so as to establish a Palestinian-Jordanian state, then I personally believe that there is a chance for exploratory discussions. If exploratory discussions are held--not between the two parties directly concerned because they tend to fight at the negotiating table--but by other parties, and if these discussions can bridge the gap between the two parties which are directly concerned in the crisis, I believe that the Geneva conference can be held with the participation of the Palestinian people, including the PLO. This conference must have only one task--to establish negotiations between the Palestinian and Israeli peoples to reach a peaceful solution. If this can be achieved through exploratory negotiations, then I believe that there is a good opportunity for a solution. But the question depends on the two sides and on the extremists on both sides who will try to find new ways to stop the discussions. Nevertheless, a solution appears to be possible. The question is, what is the solution that is most suitable for the Palestinian people? I believe that there is a possibility for the creation of an independent state. It is possible first of all to discuss matters related to the relations between this state and Israel, matters such as those related to work, employment, borders, economy, means of communications and security. If these matters are discussed beforehand, I do not see why the problem should be difficult to solve. At present, a solution seems to be very remote but I believe that it is possible practically.

Gives Press Conference

AU110930 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 12 Jun 80 pp 1-2

[Report on Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's Vienna press conference on 11 June before his departure for Oslo meeting of Socialist International]

[Excerpt] Attempts to starve Iran or to liberate the hostages through another military operation will not be successful. Such attempts merely led to a deterioration of the situation for these persons, Kreisky said. He added that, on the other hand, it was ridiculous to reproach the Americans for not having prevented the revolution in Iran. In reply to an additional question Kreisky declared that the unfriendly and sometimes downright hostile attitude toward Americans in many parts of the world was incomprehensible to him. The Austrians had had only the best experiences with the Americans. Outside of Europe the massive U.S. support of Israel may play some part in this negative attitude. Referring in this context to the forthcoming U.S. presidential elections the chancellor added that he, personally, would prefer Carter because, in contrast to his Republican rival Reagan, Carter is already known.

Unless the fighting in Afghanistan ends soon, there is a danger of the fire being fanned by various liberation movements and of an expansion of the conflict to the Indian Ocean, Kreisky stressed at yesterday's press conference. He said that it was now up to the non-aligned countries to help their member Afghanistan and to find out what possibilities exist to solve the conflict not against, but with, the Soviet Union.

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT ADDRESSES SPD CONGRESS 9 JUN IN ESSEN

DW111552 Bonn SPD Press, Radio and TV Service Special Issuance in German 9 Jun 80

[Prerelease of speech by Federal Chancellor and SPD Deputy Chairman Helmut Schmidt on 9 June at SPD Congress in Essen; numbers as published]

[Excerpts] I. Duty With Regard to Peace

1. The eighties have begun with difficult world political crises. But for Richard Nixon and Franz Josef Strauss to suggest that the world is already involved in a third world war is an exaggeration.

During the past months all of us have realized that world peace is fragile and that it requires unremitting efforts, consideration, firmness and sacrifices to preserve peace. This is not a new realization for those of us who have experienced one or even two world wars. But this is an experience for some of the younger people who have grown up in security and well-being. They need to take this into account.

Over the past 6 months our people have known deep down that it is possible to preserve peace. Neither the taking of hostages in Iran nor the invasion of Afghanistan, the persistent Palestinian crisis, the lasting misery in the Third World nor the upset in the balance of power due to exaggerated armament efforts have touched off the world conflagration which many people feared. The chances for mastering the crisis have not yet been spoiled.

2. We Germans bear part of the responsibility for seeing to it that these chances are not spoiled but used. Gustav Heinemann has said: "Peace is the emergency in which we all must stand our test." This means that in order to preserve peace, we must stand our test in peacetime. We Social Democrats have this duty. We will fulfill this duty--for our country--and in serving all Germans as well as all friends and neighbors.

I belong to a generation that has been marked by dictatorship and war. This experience made me a Social Democrat when I was a prisoner of war in Yabbeke, Belgium. It has remained my highest duty to create prerequisites for people both within and outside our country to help avoid, contain and overcome conflicts through the strength of an honest compromise. I do not believe in prestabilized harmony--neither in the world, nor in our country and society.

3. German conservatives have always believed that common welfare must be based on basic harmony. In this "each" is supposed to obtain "his own"--and that from above. A social conflict would then mean disorder. Accepting social conflict would then mean endangering the common welfare. Communities would then be an irksome evil. This is the reason for the domestic political images of the enemy. This is the reason for the linkage between the images of the internal and external enemies: Those who do not want to act like the CDU must be having their strings pulled by Moscow. Thus we have such slogans as: "Freedom Instead of, or Freedom or...."

This kind of slander of the adversary by the candidate for chancellor was also seen with regard to the conservative Adenauer--but it dates back even further: Via the Weimar Republic back to Bismarck's fight against social democracy and the Catholic Church. It can also be found in Metternich's reactionary domestic policy, also in his "holy alliance."

Carl Schmidt's political "friend-and-foe concept" remains for the time being the height of theoretical justification for the implementation of the conservative harmony delusion by the forces in power. By the way, every dictator can also be justified--regardless of whether he is a rightist or leftist, a Hitler or a Stalin--through this antidemocratic concept of politics. But some of the current CDU/CSU speakers were completely imbued with thinking along the friend-or-foe line at their Berlin party congress.

4. We Social Democrats, however, have always known that conflicts between interests and ideological conflicts are unavoidable. It is necessary to have constitutions and constitutional rules for settling conflicts peacefully, and one must obey the rules. It is necessary to be willing and able to compromise. There is no ultimately perfect order--neither internally nor externally. The people in a society as well as the states among themselves must repeatedly and consciously achieve a conciliation of interests.

In domestic politics this means that democracy is not a static condition, but much rather a dynamic condition--a controversial social and political process. The continuous will for reforms is a central category in this political process. Conflict over reforms is unavoidably necessary if inner peace is not to be undermined in an explosive way.

With regard to foreign policy this means that controversial interests are unavoidable for the coexistence of people and states. They can be pressed to the wall through occupation and by the occupiers. Through arrogance vis-a-vis its neighbors a people can lose peace itself. He who wants to preserve peace among peoples and states must follow Kant's categorical imperative.

5. The maxim of acting only in such a manner that one's own performance does not differ from that expected of the other states is always valid. It also holds true that after an armed conflict, the victor must practise moderation in converting victory to peace. The loser must likewise convert his defeat into peace. Great German Democrats managed to do this after World War I--from Ebert to Stresemann. After World War II Adenauer achieved this with our Western neighbors; Brandt and Scheel managed to achieve this with our Eastern neighbors.

This was and is not peace out of complaisance or weakness, but peace out of the realization of its necessity and out of moral strength.

The will for peace has opponents--as the will for the "open society" (Karl Popper) has opponents--time and again among our own people. From Hugenberg to Hitler it was ultimately the boundless, venomous campaign against the Versailles peace treaty which divided Germany. Hitler's thinking in terms of friend-or-foe led his domestic adversaries into the concentration camps and gas chambers.

For a CSU Bundestag deputy on Whitmonday to attack our treaties with the East as "treaties of shame" is to repeat the grave errors of the German nationalists and the national socialists of the twenties. When his party chairman fails to say anything about it, then this sheds light on the danger that Germans may well contribute again toward promoting dissension in the world.

6. The overwhelming majority of Germans in the West and East want peace. For this reason they endorse our policy which is in fact aimed at consolidating peace. This confidence was reflected by the elections. Since the last Bundestag elections the CDU and the CSU have been forced to accept losses of votes in all land diet elections.

We Social Democrats, in contrast, have not only maintained our positions but considerably improved them, especially in the last elections--most recently here in this land of the Federal Republic. I congratulate Johannes Rau and the friends in North Rhine-Westphalia on the grandiose success they scored 4 weeks ago, as I congratulate Oskar Lafontaine and the comrades in the Saarland.

These victories gave new strength to us Social Democrats throughout the Federal Republic. We do need strength because the great challenges of which we spoke in Berlin in December have not at all been diminished by the world political developments of the past 6 months.

We must prove our worth in the face of these challenges. We will try to understand the interests of others and take them into consideration. We will pursue our own interests with calm firmness.

Curt Baer, an old Hamburg Social Democrat who was active in the era of the Weimar Republic, recently sent me his memoirs, the "Political Reminiscences of a Hamburg Pedagogue." He shows by means of a Goethe expression how important this firmness is in times of unrest. I quote:

"Whoever has a faltering mind in times of change increases the evil and spreads it further and further. But he who firmly sticks to his guns shapes the world for himself."

We hold to the principle of peace. We hold to the basic law and its basic rights. We hold to freedom and justice. We hold to solidarity. We are aware that nothing can be achieved without hard work. It is with this firmness of mind that we enter into the Bundestag election campaign. In so doing we operate on a solid foundation.

We can take pride in our economic accomplishments in the face of adverse world economic circumstances. They have helped to keep our social net intact and efficient. Our internal peace is good. Our social peace need not be ashamed of anything in the world.

We will further enhance all this gradually. We will continue working toward converting technical and economic progress into humane and social progress for all of us--and in this process our natural environment must not be destroyed.

II. Domestic and Social Policies

7. Our election program includes the honesty to say what can and what cannot be implemented. Programs must be credible. Therefore, our draft program says very clearly that we promise only what we can fulfill in economic and fiscal terms. At this point I very emphatically add the request: Preserve this credibility in discussions and votes on the motion. Nothing would be worse than not being able to keep promises.

This is not a rejection of our reform policy or further development of our social security. On the contrary, the two most important statements in this respect, including the perspective for the eighties in our program, are:

1. "Those who want to live safely tomorrow will have to shape the future today. The will to reform our state and society remains unchanged and continues to be the basic force of our action."

2. "In difficult times social peace requires more and not less solidarity."

These two social policy guidelines, in fact, are a rejection of the conservative concepts of a return to the past.

Economic Situation

9. Our economy has developed well this year, irrespective of the gloomy forecasts at the beginning of the year.

Investment activities are good. Unemployment is at the lowest level since 1974.

The reduction of unemployment and the absorption of large groups of young people into the work force are excellent successes of a policy in which the government, employers and employed cooperated. From 1976 through 1979 roughly 700,000 new jobs were created; this year another 170,000 jobs will be added. Unemployment decreased 3.3 percent; youth unemployment fortunately is below average.

11. Thus far we have tackled world recession and inflation, oil and energy crises better than many other states. Our currency is stable. Day by day the German mark is negotiated on international stock exchanges at extremely stable prices, and this by foreign exchange dealers and capitalists who have hardly ever been Social Democrats. This indicates the great confidence the world has in our German economy and its currency. The attempt by the CSU and some of the newspapers associated with it to suggest to their readers that a currency reform of the German mark is imminent is naturally considered nonsense on the New York, Zurich and Tokyo stock exchanges. It really is nonsensical and irresponsible.

12. Since the outbreak of the oil crisis we have carried out a number of economic and investment programs, thereby stabilizing the economy and employment in the Federal Republic. Naturally this led to increased borrowing by the Federal Government. We have put up with this because it is economically sensible. The successes we have scored in our economic and employment policies have proved us right.

Considering our credits in relation to the gross national product we see that the debts of the empire before World War I, which were 60 percent of the then gross national product, were much higher than those of the Federal Republic in 1980, which amount to roughly 30 percent. By the way, Switzerland has also reached this latter percentage.

We will continue our solid fiscal policy course. This means in the present situation that the net borrowing of DM24 billion approximately envisaged for fiscal 1980 must not be increased.

It also means that the net borrowing of DM27 billion envisaged for fiscal 1981 must not be increased, not even in the light of additional expenditures the Federal Republic must expect as a result of the resolutions adopted in Brussels the week before last. It means, in other words, the 1980 federal budget proves and the 1981 federal budget will prove again that we have the strength and the courage to fully live up to our necessary national and internatinnal tasks and, at the same time, keep to the principle of solidity in our fiscal policy.

Tax Cuts

13. This also means that we stand by our draft bill, which has been decided upon by the Bundestag, on tax and family policy relief measures covering an amount of roughly DM17 billion. We do this mainly because the wage and income tax on medium incomes--particularly of employed couples where both partners work, of unmarried skilled workers and employees as well as of tradesmen and self-employed--is growing out of proportion. Therefore, the revision of the wage and income tax rates which we envisage as of 1 January 1981 is indispensable.

Energy Policy

18. From 1973 until today world oil prices have risen more than fifteenfold. For a very small sector this has had an effect on the general price level. The high crude oil account resulted in a negative price level. The high crude oil account resulted in a negative performance balance. But oil has not unhinged our price structure. On the contrary, the FRG remains one of the countries with the most stable prices in the world. While we increased our gross national product by 15 percent since 1973, our oil consumption on the whole has not grown since then. It means that with the same quantity of oil we obtained 15 percent more material wealth. This is a great achievement. Economists and ecologists should be able to agree with this assessment.

In the first 3 months of this year we even consumed less oil than in the first 3 months of last year. This is an important saving because the FRG this year will probably have to spend DM66 billion for oil imports. In return, we will have to export correspondingly more. And what we export we cannot consume ourselves. We have a good quantity of oil supplies at present. Stocks are at a record level worldwide and also in the FRG. We could live on our reserves for 127 days without imports. But apart from that we remain dependent on unsafe world regions for half of our crude oil. Nobody knows how the prices and the quantitative supply will develop. Therefore, the energy supply will remain the most important economic problem of years to come.

19. The Federal Government embarked on a policy "away from the oil" in good time. The decision of our Berlin party congress on energy policy supports this position. This means the following:

1. Better utilization and saving of energy;

2. Future opening of new energy sources such as solar, wind, terrestrial heat, biological gas--and I would like to add in this context that nobody should harbor any illusions about what these can do to relieve the situation in our country;

3. Priority for domestic coal today and tomorrow;

4. While observing this priority, further limited utilization of nuclear energy to the degree warranted by energy policy necessities.

This conversion is necessary. It is no simple task, but strong impulses to our economy also emanate from this conversion to new technologies, from the development of new implements such as, for example, the heatpump. Specifically, this offers opportunities for investments; this will open up new jobs.

A Cabinet committee has examined all proposals made publicly concerning energy austerity and has started a whole series of measures. There is, however, not yet a majority for a speed limit on the autobahn.

20. German black coal clearly ranks priority.

Subsidies to the black coal sector over many years have turned out to be appropriate. Now the stockpiles are being reduced and coal extraction will be stepped up--perhaps to as much as 95 million tons a year. For this purpose we need enormous investments--approximately DM3 billion a year. For this purpose we need more miners--more young German miners. The sale of the increased coal output has been ensured. The mining sector may proceed from this premise in its calculations.

In the mid-eighties a new field of coal utilization will be opened with the large-scale technical liquefaction and gasification of coal. In the seventies the Federal Government invested more than DM600 million in research and in pilot projects to create the prerequisites for this opening. It was early this year that the Cabinet adopted a coal refining program. To this end the industry has registered 14 large-scale projects comprising a total investment of DM14 billion. This, by the way, is one of the reasons why the coal mining region has a good future.

21. The long-term guarantee of the energy supply also includes the moderate utilization of nuclear energy. In the open debate on nuclear energy the Social Democratic Party has gone further than any other party. We must be grateful to those who have contributed their divergent opinions to this debate. The Federal Government has linked the limited expansion of nuclear energy with two conditions: the guarantee of safety and waste disposal. This will remain unchanged. Our safety regulations, by the way, are the strictist in the world. They are constantly adapted to the level of science and technology.

The heads of government of the Federal Republic and the laender on 28 September 1979 agreed on continued work on nuclear waste disposal on the basis of a proposal advanced by the Federal Government. I express my gratitude particularly to Johannes Rau and Holger Boerner for the support they gave the Federal Government. The decision describes with exact schedules the additional partial steps to be taken under the integrated waste disposal concept. At the same time it stipulates that, parallel to that concept, alternative waste disposal techniques such as, for example, direct final storage without reprocessing will be examined.

Green Party

23. Let me say a word about the Green Party at this point. The SPD and the FDP can win the 5 October elections only if the number of those voting for the Green Party remains as small as possible. This is why I ask you to make the following clear to the people who want more done for environmental protection:

1. The vote of anybody voting Green will probably be lost because the Greens will not attain 5 percent. Any lost vote, however, helps the party which has been trying time and again in the past several years to pull the teeth out of our environmental policy in the Bundesrat.

2. Anyone voting Green does not know exactly whether he gives his vote to "red" Greens or to "black" [conservative] Greens.

3. Anyone voting Green supports a party which views all political issues solely from one angle. Because the Greens think in single dimensions they arrive at politically naive and dangerous conclusions, for example, in foreign and security policy. During the budget debate in the Bremen House of Deputies, for example, the Greens demanded a cut in funds for social housing construction.

An ill turn will be done to environmental protection if this important concern is compressed into the corset of a splinter party. Fervent environmental protectionists must remain a supraparty, an ecological conscience for the big parties.

Internal Security

29. We must repeatedly withstand the test of finding the right balance between internal order and liberality. We have maintained the internal security of our country--also in situations which were psychically extremely difficult for citizens and for those in authority. We want to continue to maintain our liberality in the future. He who would tighten up on liberality would deprive us of the freedom to breathe.

We have been able to isolate terrorism in our country thanks to political-spiritual disputes, thanks to the vigilance of our security authorities, thanks to careful and toilsome work by our courts. Some other countries are in a much worse situation. But the successes which undeniably exist cannot be lasting comfort. We are as little immune as other countries against new acts of terror, particularly since international forces can exert violence in our country as well.

30. He who carries out his right to demonstrate without applying violence must not be considered as being on the same level as criminals. But he must watch out because, if others use iron bars in the demonstration, if they turn over cars and attack people, then this is no longer a demonstration but a breach of public peace or worse.

Aggression and acts of violence in an open democratic society are wrong means of maintaining and shaping peace. He who yells at a political adversary, who throws tomatoes or paint at him, who exerts violence is an adversary of democratic society. And he who instigates other to do this without dirtying his own hands is no better--regardless of whether he opposes Strauss or somebody else!

31. We do not want to shy away from controversy. We want to give young people not just the opportunity to act within the framework of existing law for change; we want to encourage them to do this. Society and the state need the criticism of the young--the young people need the state too, by the way, even if some of them do not want to realize it.

The liberality of our people, the quality of our state and its institutions must be measured by how far we can endure criticism of us and our institutions, whether we can respond in a controlled way to incorrect arguments and whether we can be open to correct arguments. The reliability of justice, however, depends on whether we act firmly vis-a-vis violations of law and order and vis-a-vis violence.

Integration of Foreigners

32. Millions of foreign workers have rendered immeasurable services to us. Some of them live under most unworthy conditions; some of them are being exploited by their landlords. Heinz Kuehn has rendered a great service with his analyses of the problems of foreigners among us.

It was a mistake to bring that many foreigners into the country. Now we have to be careful that we do not make the foreigners pay for this mistake. There is unfortunately a latent hostility toward foreigners. It is being played up in Baden-Wuerttemberg and Bavaria in a clever way in connection with the very complex asylum problem. Social Democrats, whether it is popular or not, must accept that the foreigner who has legally entered the country together with his family has a claim on our solidarity.

I do not want to hide the fact that the very liberal German right to asylum has been misused. Measures against this misuse are being prepared. But for the great number of those whom we ourselves have called to come to the country to help us in our industry, and for those who really seek asylum, those who have been persecuted at home, for them we bear humanitarian responsibility.

33. It will be one of the most difficult reform tasks of the eighties to integrate their children who have grown up here fully into our community--if their parents want it.

They need equal opportunities--in education and training, for example. In March, after Heinz Kuehn's preparatory work, the Federal Government worked out a broad orientation framework for itself and the laender and communities.

For those of the second generation over 18 years of age a claim for naturalization should be granted under certain conditions. The land government of North Rhine-Westphalia has made some good preparatory work in this respect.

There is a suggestion, however, which I do not want to support, namely, to give foreign citizens the right to vote in local elections.

It would be an invitation to set up local parties in foreign languages which would lead to confusion. I am much rather for full citizenship after proper qualification, if the person wants it; then all political opportunities would be open to him.

34. Naturally we cannot lift the halt of recruitment, regardless of how much pressure is being exerted by individual employers' associations. We do not want to become an immigration country with nationality problems--we have enough to cope with considering the division of our own nation. But we must make it possible for him who is here, who fulfills the prerequisites and who wants to stay here, to be able to do so.

But we must make it easier for those who want to return home later on. A developmental policy program for professional reintegration into their homelands and the promotion of investments of workers employed here would help to facilitate these returns.

The gradual and full integration of those foreign workers who want to stay here has been rightly incorporated into our election program. If we do not master the task of integration, we will face hazards with regard to social peace.

Leopold Senghor described us Germans recently as a historical mixture of Celts, Teutons and Slavs. But the truth is even much more colorful!

From this colorfulness come our many cultural forces and talents! They will even increase once there are Italians, Greeks and Serbs as well.

III. Security in World Crises

37. Only he who is sure of his cause can convey security to others. Anyone spreading fear induces others to respond with overreaction or to stick their heads into the sand. Both are dangerous. Fear provokes new insecurities.

Our security policy has proved its worth in Europe--defense efforts for the establishment of the balance of forces, on the one hand, and detente policy on the other. We have pursued these two in harmony with our Western allies. Since the outbreak of the twin crises in Tehran and Afghanistan the danger existed at first--and it really has not yet been eliminated--that the aggravated relationship between the two world powers might affect Europe. We contributed to the reduction of this danger. In doing so we not only were able to rely on the backing of France, our most important partner in Europe. Doing so we won the approval of our other allies. And we also observed in the GDR, in Poland and in the other East European states a strong interest in the maintenance of detente policy and in its further development.

The latest world political crises are particularly menacing because the Afghanistan conflict might merge with the U.S.-Iranian crisis and with the Palestinian crisis into one single conflict even though these three do not all spring from the East-West controversy.

The Iran crisis and the Afghanistan conflict have demonstrated to us an important change in potential international dangers. What threatens security is not primarily an East-West confrontation in Europe but, at least as much, East-West conflicts in the Third World. This began as early as 1974-75 through the indirect Soviet intervention in Angola with Cuban soldiers; other examples were Ethiopia and South Yemen, and temporarily, Somalia. The most striking case is the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan which has alarmingly impaired the relationship between the two world powers. Owing to the geostrategic advantage of position on the part of the Soviet Union in Southwest Asia, it has also made us aware of a potential jeopardy to the vital energy and raw material supply lines of the Western industrial states.

We must look upon it as conceivable that collisions of interests may erupt between the two world powers in the Third World and that these collisions can affect Europe. This new development requires a new approach to security policy. We must view it on a worldwide scale. An overall Western strategy must be aimed at containing the dangers of conflicts in the Third World. And the Persian Gulf must be mentioned first in this regard.

Our German contribution to this end can only be of a political and economic nature. We are not a great power; this is why a military engagement of the Federal Republic can be mustered solely for the balance of forces in Europe.

Strengthen the Sovereignty of the Nonaligned

38. It is our task, jointly with our allies and European partners, to improve the preconditions for the stability of those states which actually are nonaligned and wish to remain nonaligned, and to promote their readiness to cooperate with the West.

Mr Genscher has justly said: "The concept for a Western Third World policy can only be this: support for the independence and self-determination of the Third World. Such a concept alone has a future, such a concept alone can maintain peace."

In this connection it is necessary to reduce distrust in the Third World. The distrust of the nonaligned is attributable to experiences from the colonial era; in this context people fail to recognize that the will for partnership prevails everywhere in the West. The distrust in the West has its roots in the close concert of nonaligned and communist countries in the anticolonial phase of the nonaligned movement. In this respect people overlook the fact that this concert was very often neither sought nor wanted by the peoples of the Third World, but had been forced upon them by the short-sightedness and the rejection of progress by Western states.

Active German participation in such an overall Western policy serves international stability. It cannot be misinterpreted as being aggressive.

The West must not try to prevent states from giving themselves social systems different from ours. It must not try to urge our own concepts of order on others in the Third World. On the contrary, the West must accept and welcome any independent course in the Third World.

39 The required strengthening of the independence of the Third World states requires contributions toward solving the conflicts in the Third World peacefully, through negotiations. Zimbabwe was a good example. I hope that this success will radiate on Namibia in the near future as well. Cooperation of the EC with the five ASEAN states and the Euro-Arab dialogue are additional examples of a positive nature.

The Afghanistan crisis results from the violation of human rights, particularly from the violation of the principle of the nonaligned status of sovereign states of the Third World. It particularly hits the Islamic states which feel threatened anyway because of Tehran and Palestine.

Dialogue in the Crisis

40 After a pause caused by the shock, an international discussion about taking the edge out of the Afghanistan crisis has begun. That is progress vis-a-vis the dangerous lack of communications that lasted well into May. The Federal Government has pressed for and helped in many ways to bring about this progress. We remain involved without pushing to the foreground, and without forgetting that we do not stand between the camps in this conflict but that we are and want to remain part of the Western alliances such as the North Atlantic Pact and the European Community.

41 We have made great efforts in past months to make sure that, despite intensified tensions in the world, the detente process in Europe would not be damaged but further developed. Our policy has been predictable at all times. This also pertains to our political, financial and military contributions to our own alliance.

It equally pertains to the fulfillment of our commitments to the Alliance. We never carelessly say yes to new suggestions; we carry out tough negotiations on them. In doing this we pursue our own interests. Our Alliance comrades do the same. But when we have concluded matters, everyone can rely on our word.

Loyalty to treaties is indispensable for the success of German peace policy--in all directions of the compass!

42 Our present most important efforts are aimed, as before, at the attempt to limit arms and armed forces through East-West negotiations or, even better, to reduce them.

We therefore consider it necessary that the SALT treaty be ratified by the U.S. Senate. As before, we consider negotiations on SALT II and the European imbalance in the nuclear medium-range field as indispensable.

We consider it necessary that an initial MBFR agreement on mutual troop reductions in Central Europe be achieved after more than 6 years of negotiations. We welcome the plans which are supposed to complement and support the disarmament talks through agreements on confidence-building measures, and we are therefore interested in suggestions by Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Edward Gierek in an all-European framework. We will cooperate with the aim of giving a new thrust to the detente process in Europe at the CSCE followup conference in Madrid this fall.

Not every conflict in the world must be made a European West-East conflict. Otherwise, we Europeans would never have been able to conduct negotiations on the final document of Helsinki, which were important for the whole continent. But it is true that, if regional or partial conflicts remain unsolved or if they are even aggravated, a generalization, a general intensification of the danger may become unavoidable at some point for Europe as well.

Moscow Visit

43. We will point this out very clearly late this month in Moscow. We will point out our concern. We will represent national interests, but in coordination with our allies. Even the seemingly smallest contribution we Germans could make for safeguarding peace, must be made. We will speak frankly. We will speak factually, without false politeness. Nobody among us will have wobbly knees, but nobody will see us acting arrogantly either or showing muscle.

Security Policy Principles

44. The Soviet Union knows that we belong to the West. It will not want to change that. It knows the principles of our security policy. I will name them once again:

The close international linkage of our defense policy is a consequence of legal tasks emerging from the North Atlantic pact. This pact is a sensible consequence of the fact that none of its members, including the Federal Republic, under any possible circumstances could defend itself and its freedom alone, but only together with the other Alliance partners. From this prerequisite ensues the following:

First--the principle of balance. The basis of our security policy is maintaining the European military balance. The security of Western Europe and the chances for our detente policy to be successful depend on the preservation of the balance of political, economic and military forces in the East and in the West which are effective in Europe and which bring influence to bear on Europe from without.

Second--The defensive principle. Our detente policy demands that our defense measures be capable of being recognized externally as being defensive. The defensive principle demands a basically defensive structure for the Bundeswehr regarding its military setup and its size.

Third--The principle of Alliance preservation and loyalty. As long as there is neither disarmament, arms limitations nor a European security system in Europe, the maintenance of the political and military balance and our security depend mainly on political cooperation in the Atlantic Alliance, and on the military functioning of NATO. We must make our proper political, economic and military contribution to its maintenance.

Fourth--The principle of proportion between mission and means. The political mission of our armed forces may neither ask too much of the available means, thus asking too much of the soldiers, nor should more means be made available than is required by the mission.

I have cited these principles and their explanation from my book on the strategy of balance. It appeared in 1969 with the subtitle: "German Peace Policy and the World Powers."

I have continued to stand by these principles in 3 years as defense minister under Willy Brandt and in 6 years as federal chancellor.

It was in the same conviction that Soviet General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev and I stated in May 1978: "Both sides consider it important that nobody seeks military superiority. They proceed from the premise that approximate parity and equality are sufficient for guaranteeing defense." I will adhere to this in the future as well.

But I also abide by the motto which I had placed at the beginning of my book at the time: Balance is a necessary condition for peace, but by itself it is not yet sufficient. What must be added is respect for the equal rights, the independence of all peoples--and for their legitimate interests.

What must be added is the will for peace. What must be added is the will for a conciliation of interests, for compromise. And even the desire is not sufficient in itself. What has to be added to all this is the ability to compromise. It is here, in the lack of the ability to compromise, that the actual danger is to be found.

45. It goes without saying that in Moscow we will also talk about the Eurostrategic medium-range weapons. That the Soviet general secretary said recently that the Soviet Union is prepared to negotiate on them within the framework of SALT III, should not be criticized on principle even though a lot of time might thereby be lost.

But what seems to be dangerous to me is the stepped-up Soviet medium-range armament which destabilizes the balance. It exceeds Soviet defense needs. The U.S. closing of the arms gap arising out of the dual NATO decision of December can at best entail an initial deployment in the second half of 1983, that is to say more than 3 years will yet elapse before the first deployment is made. NATO, that is to say the United States, at the same time offered negotiations on mutual limitation without delay.

The time factor extending until the fall of 1983 theoretically leaves the Soviet Union the option of extraordinarily enhancing by then the lead which it has today. It was as early as May 1978 that I drew the attention of the Soviet general secretary to the danger inherent in this lead. Our joint statement of May 1978 refers to it.

My recent suggestion of utilizing the time factor for negotiations was rejected by the Soviet side. Some people in the West purposely wanted to misunderstand the suggestion as a softening.

I will stick to my guns: It would be useful for peace if no deployment were made on both sides during the next 3 years, but instead that negotiations be conducted on mutual limitations as soon as possible. I assume that negotiations will materialize, at any rate, in the context of SALT III. We will contribute to them--even if we cannot, and do not want to do any negotiating as a non-nuclear power.

46. At the end of the week before last the German-Soviet economic commission held its ninth meeting in Bonn. The talks within the framework of the commission have confirmed that economic cooperation agreed on a long-term basis has a stabilizing effect in a crisis.

I had a detailed talk with Deputy Premier and Politburo member Tikhonov. It was a very frank dialogue--not keeping anything from each other--in an objective climate. Both sides realized that the chances of a further intensification of economic cooperation between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union can be put into practice only if it is possible to cope with the dangers of the international situation.

Both sides are aware that what has been accomplished in 10 years of detente policy must not fall victim to the present crisis.

Friendship With France

47. We are aware that we can look after our German interests only jointly with our partners in the European Community and in concert with our partners in the North Atlantic Alliance.

On 5 February this year, therefore, President Giscard d'Estaing and I, in view of the crisis, jointly averred the loyalty of our two countries to the Atlantic Alliance and the determination to abide by its commitments. And we added the following:

"France and the Federal Republic of Germany, whose citizens experienced the horrors of the two world wars on their own soil, have been advocating for 30 years the creation of a more stable and more peaceful world. In this respect their mutual reconciliation, their joint cooperation in the building of Europe, their parallel action for detente were stages along this course. They advocate the view that under the present circumstances the European powers must assume special responsibilities assuring each other in concert with their Alliance partners that the fundamental balance required for the security of their countries and for the security of Europe will be guaranteed."

Friendship With the United States

48. This brings me to our relationship with the other Alliance partners, especially with the United States. The United States is our most important NATO partner. As a world power the United States bears a special responsibility in the present crises. This holds true for Afghanistan and Palestine, and this holds true for Tehran where 53 U.S. citizens have been held hostage in violation of international law for more than half a year now. The Berlin party congress expressed its solidarity with the hostages and their nation. This holds true today as it did then.

We must understand the United States if we want to expect understanding for our own interests--the interests of a divided country, a divided nation, the interests of the city of Berlin. I have found this understanding on the part of President Jimmy Carter and many influential Americans: understanding for the meaning detente has for Europe and for the Germans; understanding that our trade with the Soviet Union and other East European countries means more politically and is something different than American trade with these countries; understanding that we want also to fulfill our treaties in this field of trade. We have no reason at all to complain about lack of understanding on the part of our American friends.

Occasionally something has been written on anti-Americanism in Germany and there has been some talk about it. Such slogans have nothing to do with reality, but they have something to do with election propaganda needs of some German opposition politicians who want to create mistrust against the German Government in the United States. These are very noble patriots!

They will achieve nothing by this. Close partnership with the United States will remain the indispensable prerequisite of our security and defense policies. Everybody knows that.

In addition, we know--and I am repeating myself--of the great significance the basic values expressed in the American Declaration of Independence have for me and for many Germans, basic values which have brought decisive influence to bear on our own basic law and its basic rights.

Anti-Americanism would be great foolishness. I would definitely oppose it.

It remains our duty, however, to link national and Alliance interests. He who considers our German contributions to a self-contained overall Western concept as inadmissible misunderstands the definition of partnership betw en us and the American leadership--which, to tell the truth, neither side disputes. President Carter confirmed on television on 13 April that "we live in a pluralist society. Every nation is strong, self-confident and independent, and every country has another perspective, depending on the special relations with its neighbors and the other countries in the world. We expect this manifoldness.... We respect...this manifoldness, which I consider so fruitful."

I agree with Jimmy Carter. Differences of interest and differences of opinion also exist vis-a-vis England and other partners. sometimes even vis-a-vis France. This is natural in an alliance. Comradeship in an alliance stands not only on frank talk, it much rather demands it. It characterizes our relations that we do not keep well-considered advice on matters of common interest from each other. If it were different something would not be in order among friends. But we are allies and we are friends.

Alliance Commitments and the Bundeswehr

49. The Federal Republic of Germany has always loyally adhered to its commitments toward the Alliance. Our Bundeswehr is firmly integrated in the Alliance.

Our armed forces are well trained and well equipped. In contrast to the United States and England, they are based on general compulsory military service. Our soldiers serve the balance of forces, thus serving peace. They are self-confident and loyal citizens of our democracy. Some 22 years ago Willi Berkhan and I took a very personal stand expressing confidence in these soldiers. I am proud that everybody can see today that his confidence was justified.

Within the framework of a division of labor, we took over the task of bringing about a joint action to assist Turkey in 1980, just as we did last year at the time of the Ecevit government. Some 16 countries agreed to supply more than $1 billion; our German contribution of $295 million, or DM560 million, amounts to one fourth of the total amount. We are also helping our Alliance partner Greece. We have acted successfully on behalf of Greece's becoming a member of the European Community. We are helping to decrease tensions between these two partners.

The European Community

50. Our foreign policy cooperation with our EC partners in Europe has proved its worth in the present crises, as has our solidarity with the United States. But if the European Community is to remain capable of acting in the crisis, it must solve its internal problems. During the past several months the Community was threatened by a general paralysis. The settlement of the budget quarrel was therefore an urgent task of foreign and security policies. The maintenance of the balance and the strengthening of Europe's role in the preservation of peace in the world necessitated a compromise to Great Britain's advantage. In this respect the Federal Republic of Germany will have to bear its share just like the other member states of the Community, namely, in accordance with the breakdown under the EC finance system that has been in effect since 1971.

According to current Brussels estimates, this means for us alone a total payment of DM2.5 billion for 1980 and 1981. By these estimates we will be paying roughly DM5 billion more in 1981 than we receive from the EC. Apart from us it will only be France and England that will have a negative net balance sheet. Other EC states which per capita are hardly any poorer than we are, in contrast, will have high, positive net balance sheets.

For this reason it is necessary to eliminate the causes of such imbalances by 1982. This applies particularly to the methods of implementing the principles of the Common Agricultural Policy hitherto practiced. In this respect, too, solidarity cannot be a one-way street. Without the indispensable adaptations of agricultural policy, and without a balanced distribution of burdens, the EC will be unable to finance the tasks which it will be facing as a result of its expansion toward the south. The accession treaty with Greece has been concluded, negotiations with Spain and Portugal are in progress.

We will achieve success in this great political task, which we have taken upon ourselves for the sake of strengthening democracy in Europe, only if we consider ourselves strong and safe as a community. The French president recently drew attention to this interrelationship. Anyone familiar with the bad situation of our fishermen will agree with the Federal Government which last Wednesday linked its approval of the Brussels package with the establishment of the contractual state of equal access to the sea areas of the EC by the end of this year.

We Europeans need the EC for reasons of economics, employment policy and balance policy; but it must not be turned into a self-service store for special interests, because in such a case it could not remain viable.

51. At the world economic summit in late June, political topics this time will probably be shifted more strongly into the foreground. The weight now accorded Europe in the world will impose great tasks on France, England, Italy and ourselves in Venice. Hopes are being placed in Europe--not only in the East-West conflict, but also in the difficult relationship between highly industrialized states and under-industrialized, developing countries.

Development Aid

52. The countries of the Third World are gaining in significance. The Federal Republic of Germany will help to better support and enhance the economic viability, the nonalignment, the political independence and the cultural independence of these countries. I have already emphasized this considerably, but I would like to add a word about the extent of our economic aid.

In 30 years the Federal Republic of Germany has paid about DM56 billion net in public funds, meaning after deducting repayments, to the developing countries, including about DM38 billion alone since the beginning of the social-liberal coalition. Within the framework of the medium-term finance planning valid up to 1983, it is planned to increase the budget of the Federal Ministry for Economic Cooperation by 12.5 percent a year. The biggest amounts go to India, Pakistan, Turkey, Indonesia, Egypt and Bangladesh; Africa and Southern Asia are key regional areas. Combatting absolute poverty has been a priority task for several years now, which is why the poorer developing countries receive special promotion.

The Federal Republic of Germany last year extended public development aid of more than DM6 billion, 30 percent more than in the preceding year. This increase constitutes an immense financial feat, in line with the wish of the party. This feat placed France and us together at the head of the Western donor countries, second only to the United States. In 1978 in terms of volume the Federal Republic of Germany did nearly three times as much as the whole East bloc and eight times as much as the USSR!

The oil bill of the developing countries which do not produce oil is estimated to amount to about $55 billion in 1980. At the moment the Western industrial states extend development aid of roughly $20 billion a year. Even a doubling of the Western development assistance would not be sufficient to cover the exploding oil bill of the developing countries. This reflects the great responsibility of the OPEC countries, who must urgently be expected to grant more development aid, but also to make direct investments for financing the balance of payments deficits of the developing countries.

Naturally we render substantial humanitarian assistance--particularly to refugees; our German Red Cross in this connection tops the international scale. Priority is being given at present to Somalia, Pakistan and Southeast Asia. Our special solidarity at present is naturally focused on Somalia which helped us very much in an extraordinary situation. The Federal Government will dispatch a Cabinet member to Somalia in the near future to examine, on the spot, prerequisites for further humanitarian help.

IV. German Policy

53. Some 10 years of detente policy have enabled us to do more for the cohesion of the Germans and more for the people than was possible in former decades.

In my last report on the state of the nation I took Willy Brandt's 20 points enunciated at Kassel as a standard for measuring what has been achieved in the meantime. Much of what we envisaged in 1970 has been implemented. But much still remains to be done.

In the present world political situation it is important to continue our policy vis-a-vis the GDR without interruption. It was therefore good that negotiations on improving transportation facilities to Berlin were concluded successfully in late April, and that it has been agreed to have talks on water pollution--particularly the salt in the Werra and protection of Berlin waters. We have committed ourselves to making large expenditures, but this money is well invested for the cohesion of the Germans. Trade turnover with the GDR has increased threefold in the past decade. In 1980 we will surpass the DM3 billion mark. I consider that also as positive.

Our cooperation with the GDR must not be limited to economic and financial issues. We are particularly interested in cooperation on problems involving the people in both German states. Reunification of families is included here, and the Federal Government is making determined and successful efforts in this respect. Travel alleviations, which we are struggling for, is also part of this. West-East travel has increased greatly. But East-West travel is lagging behind, it is absolutely unsatisfactory for only a few young people from the GDR to be able to visit us.

54. I had an opportunity in Belgrade to meet State Council Chairman Honecker for an extensive and very frank talk. We primarily discussed the international situation. Naturally, the well-known East-West antagonisms came up. It is important that particularly in times of crisis the Germans on both sides speak to each other. I welcome, therefore, that Volker Hauff recently went to the GDR to have talks and that Dr Mittag, the leading GDR economic politician, visited us recently and that I had an opportunity to talk to him extensively. It remains my intention to meet Mr Honecker again in the near future in the GDR.

Herbert Wehner said a few years after Kassel: "Zero hour outside the Alliance and outside the communities--be it of the West or the East--does not exist any more for the Germans. They must try within the framework of alliances and communities to bring influence to bear themselves on the settlement of their problems, as far as rapprochement is possible at all.

Therefore, I say that peace is of vital importance for our people but also for all people...Peace stands even beyond the nation, because without peace there would not be any chance for a nation and the people to live and develop. The Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic as completely different negotiating partners with equal rights at the negotiating table is better than an imagined and proclaimed sole representation claim without an actual sole legitimatior from all Germans."

Talks in the recent past have made it clear to me--and I say this with great inner satisfaction--that the politicians in both German states are aware of their special responsibility for peace in Europe.

The seventh point in Kassel said: "The contracting sides state that never again may war emanate from German territory." In December last year Honecker and I repeated this sentence independently of each other.

A Singular German Culture

55. A week ago Pope John Paul II spoke at UNESCO about the priority of cultural reality, and even about culture as an expression of "fundamental sovereignty."

"I am a son of a nation that has a great deal of historical experience, that has been repeatedly condemned to death by its neighbors, but that has survived and remained what it was. It has maintained its identity despite all divisions and foreign occupations, not because it has applied physical violence but solely because it has drawn upon its culture. That culture has turned out to be a power greater than all other powers. What I am saying here about the nation as a foundation for its culture and its future is not derived from 'nationalism.' It is much rather a firm element of human experience and human ideas regarding the development of man. There is a fundamental sovereignty of society which is expressed in the culture of its nation."

Sovereignty was not meant here with regard to its meaning with a view to state or international law. It was meant as the result of the education of the individual and of the people through culture.

It is most of all the culture which both German states have in common, despite all antagonisms, which goes beyond the borders, regardless of how firmly the border lines may be drawn. Could culture not help us define ourselves more accurately and in a more varied way? I see here a task of the eighties for both German states.

German partition did not create two separate cultures. Both states much rather live in the continuity of the same German language. history, art, literature. Jurek Becker, Boell, Grass, Handke, Heym, Kunert, Lenz, Plenzdorf Weiss and Christa Wolf--this is a single literature. It is similar to generations ago when Luther, Humboldt, Grimm, Goethe, Clausewitz and Hegel represented one German culture, despite the small German states (and even inner-German wars!).

One may be allowed to ask whether Guenther Grass' audacious idea of a joint national foundation (with headquarters in both parts of the city of Berlin) really has to remain so utopian as it seems at first glance.

The supreme demand on us is the preservation and consolidation of peace. Our policy toward the German Democratic Republic also serves this goal. Let us do everything possible and not neglect anything in working on this, in strengthening the awareness of a common historical identity, a common cultural identity, in preserving and strengthening the awareness of national identity.

V. Excursion: Nervus Rerum [Heart of the Matter]

56. At this point I will make an abrupt change and return to the nervus rerum. When the finance legislation which came into force as of 1970 was adopted--legislation that goes to the credit of Alex Moeller for its comprehensive reform aspect--nobody was able to visualize the extent to which the international tasks and expenditures of the Federal Republic of Germany would increase. There has been a considerable shift in our tasks to areas beyond our borders: Development policy, military aid, NATO improvement, above all EC policy. Partly this is the consequence of the world economic crisis, partly it is the result of the growing international significance of Germany. In that respect I have cited some representative figures. In addition, there is the policy on Germany and aid to Berlin.

The expenditures outside our borders exclusively hit the federal budget. Besides, the federal budget must carry the main burden of economic development and economic structure policy--ranging from the future investment program to coal and the railroad system as well as defense and aid to the social security network.

The federal laender have refused to grant the Federal Government the required financial resources. In each individual revenue distribution arrangement they have disregarded during the past 10 years the provision of article 106 of the basic law. The Federal Government had to accept this even though article 106 grants the Federal Government and the laender an "equal claim to have their necessary expenditures covered and prescribes a proper arrangement," meaning a just arrangement.

Ever since the CDU/CSU achieved a majority in the Bundesrat, which is the extended political arm of the Bundestag opposition, this majority, owing to the requirement for the approval by the Bundesrat for any revenue distribution bill, has been filling its own coffers--at the expense of the federal coffers.

This is a misus of the Bundesrat. The intention is to starve the Federal Government financially.

57. It is necessary to talk about all this, and about the mixed financing and the burdens on the laender linked with it as well. A different basic attitude toward simple legislation on revenue distribution is necessary lest Germany's financial system relapse into the 19th century and the Federal Government be hog-tied by the laender. Apart from the integration of foreigners and their children, this will be one of the most difficult domestic policy tasks in the new decade.

It is necessary to put a stop to a situation where the laender force the Federal Government to borrow, as they are doing now, and subsequently criticize it for doing so contrary to their better knowledge, like the Bavarian minister president for example.

This has nothing in common with Federalism--rather it is tantamount to a return to German particularism.

The government statement Johannes Rau gave last week is a pleasant contrast to this. He expressly recognized the new burdens which the federal budget will have to face as a consequence of the world political situation and, on behalf of the biggest land of the Federal Republic, North Rhine-Westphalia, he declared his readiness to bear a proper share. I welcome this very much, and I am allowed to announce to the party congress that together with Hans Matthoefer I had a talk with the Social Democratic minister presidents last night which was conducted along these lines.

The SPD has never been a particularist party--it will now fight to give the Federal Government what is necessary for Germany to decently and properly live up to its balance and peace role in Europe and in the Third World

Concerning the FDP and the Social-Liberal Coalition

61. It is clear that the CSU candidate has caused an additional consolidation in the in the social-liberal coalition. Many an old CDU voter will vote for the FDP this time because of him. This can only benefit the FDP.

It is not that our partner has always been easy to cope with. We have had to struggle with each other often enough, especially in the field of social policy: The FDP always wants to place emphasis on the private economic insurance principle while we wish to emphasize society's doing this.

But we have always succeeded in reaching accord in the end because both of us know that even more important matters are at stake. Hans-Dietrich Genscher has always been aware of that. Wolfgang Mischnick has always known this. We must be grateful to both of them. Herbert Wehner knows what he has in Wolfgang Mischnick: a reliable partner in each parliamentary week.

The FDP is very much an independent party. No Social Democrat can expect or even demand that the FDP pursue a Social Democratic policy. The liberals cannot demand that we pursue an FDP policy either.

Disputes and agreements will be necessary on a case by case basis. Compromises will be necessary over and over again. We have to admit this.

The FDP election result in North Rhine-Westphalia was certainly also caused by the fact that the FDP has a coalition with the CDU just 300 kilometers away from Duesseldorf. The 1,700 votes the FDP lacked in order to attain the 5 percent limit, are in part Mr Klumpp's fault.

62. I do not need to explain again today why the Free Democrats and the Social Democrats in Bonn must and want to cooperate for another 4 years; almost everybody in Germany has understood the reasons for a long time.

Mr Genscher said on Friday--and the FDP congress has decided the following: "The Free Democratic Party declares its will to continue the social-liberal coalition for the next legislative period. It is determined to make the coalition a further joint success for our country while implementing as much liberal policy as possible." We Social Democrats welcome this declaration of the will of the Free Democractic Party. We on our part declare our desire to continue the social-liberal coalition for the next legislative period. The Social Democratic Party of Germany is determined to make the coalition a further success for our country, while implementing as much Social Democratic policy as possible.

There will be domestic political problems which will cause hard struggles between the SPD and the FDP in the future as well. Promoting research work, saving energy, strengthening the rights of workers and employees in plants and the problems of the news media are examples. The further development of the European agricultural market is another example.

63. But this cannot cover up the fact that great and solid agreement exists in the social-liberal coalition with regard to the major issues, particularly the most central issue of peace policy, the will for liberality in our society, but also the will for realistic gradual reforms. This is the foundation on which we will build our work in the next 4 years.

VII. Conclusion: What Is Involved

64. We will not be able to achieve an absolute majority in 1980. The preservation and development of a social-liberal majority is the issue.

So far our coalition has had just a very slim majority of 4 voters to reject vetoes of the Bundesrat. Only with calmness and composure, only because nobody was absent due to sickness at the wrong moment, were we able in the past 4 years to sail around all rocks. This majority must become greater.

We Social Democrats are fighting to become stronger than the CDU/CSU--as we did in 1972. The FDP did not suffer from this at that time. It will all benefit also in the future.

65. We Social Democrats know that we must maintain peace within and without--and that we can maintain this peace. The crises in the world have strengthened this certainty. We do not just have the will for peace, we have the ability for peace.

Carlo Schmidt wrote shortly before his death: "The Bundestag elections must not be lost for the sake of the further existence of liberality, of social solidarity, a liberal constitutional state, for the sake of foreign policy aimed at detente and security, which outlines the character of the social-liberal coalition."

Carlo was right. Freedom and peace cannot be won once and for all, they must much rather be won over and over again-- I say daily--they must be safeguarded again, and often enough they must be fought for and won again. Because war has emanated from Germany, because our country to this day is marked by the aftereffects of war, because every German family even at present shows marks of the war, it is the national duty of the Germans not to merely want peace, but to really form it.

We will do it together: We--the Great Social Democratic Party of Germany. We fight together--for security for all Germans, for our country, for peace.

SAUDI OFFICIAL PREDICTS DROP IN OIL PRODUCTION TO ENERGY LEADERS

ID121732 Hamburg DPA in German 1612 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Excerpt] Cologne--Saudi Arabia can maintain its increased oil production of about 9.5 million barrels per day to stabilize the market only for a short time. This was stated by the president of the Saudi state-owned PETROMIN company, 'Abd al-Habi Hasan Tahir, in Cologne today. At the Cologne University Energy Institute Tahir told leading representatives of the German energy industry that all Saudi efforts to make up to some extent for the shortfall from other countries can for political reasons be sustained only on a short term basis. These efforts can only be defended if the West steps up its efforts to develop alternative energy sources. Tahir considered the development of nuclear energy especially promising since it is the quickest way to relieve the pressure on oil supplies. The Saudi president repeatedly stressed the need for greater speed since the pressure from the other OPEC countries on his country will become too great if Saudi Arabia attempts to give long-term assistance.

Tahir announced that the refining capacity in Saudi Arabia will be greatly increased by 1988. Its annual output will then reach about 75 million tons. This will lower the quantity of crude oil available for export by 1.5 million barrels per day. Instead, more finished products will be offered or the world market.

ECONOMICS MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON OIL PRICE HIKES

DW121016 Bonn ZDF Television Network in German 1900 GMT 11 Jun 80

[Excerpts from reporter Balkhausen interview with Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff in Bonn--recorded; date not given]

[Text] [Question] Can we talk of a new oil price 'shock' regarding the possible negative economic effects?

[Answer] As to the negative effects, the OPEC meeting made a very deplorable decision indeed. But you can talk of a shock only when you are surprised. This news regrettably does not come as a great surprise.

[Question] Will the additional burdens to the German drivers and hearing oil consumers be very substantial this year?

[Answer] Whether it will have any immediate effects this year, is doubtful. It always takes a couple of months until such price hikes finally reach the consumer. But such an effect regrettable cannot be ruled out.

[Question] Do you see new dangers ahead for the world economic development, an economic recession perhaps, or more unemployment?

[Answer] Undoubtedly it is a heavy burden to the developing countries which do not produce oil. Undoubtedly it aggravates the problem of recycling the accumulating revenues of the oil producing countries. It certainly also will mean pressure on the world economic development, possibly and regrettably also in the FRG a bit.

[Question] Will the oil supply situation become more unsafe?

[Answer] No, our stocks and reserves are very good. Fortunately this OPEC meeting at least did not discuss production cuts. That is the only bright spot.

[Question] How do you assess Great Britain's intention to hike its prices considerably?

[Answer] It certainly is true that Great Britain does not belong to the moderate side of oil-producing countries. It can be criticized and naturally we do not find it very pleasant. But we have no possibility of exercising any direct influence on it. But your question is an occasion for me to stress once again the particularly responsible attitude of the Saudi Government and its oil policy.

PRESS PREVIEWS VENICE EEC SUMMIT MEETING

DW130826 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 13 Jun 80

[Press review] [Text] BERLINER MORGENPOST writes about the Venice meeting of the European Community Council: The state and government chiefs of the European Community at their summit meeting will probably use the chance to demonstrate more Community cohesion. This can polish up the battered reputation of the Community in the world, since it was about to break down in connection with financing problems of the agricultural policy and since decisions involving embargo problems vis-a-vis Iran have been achieved only with difficulty. A confrontation of national interests therefore is hardly to be expected in Venice. Aside from the political shadowboxing at the European Community Meeting, it will be probably most important for Europe to prepare a clear marching route in Venice with regard to the world economic summit.

HESSISCH/NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE of Kassel maintains: The solemn statements on greatness and cohesion stand in a grotesque contrast to reality. Under the nine partners with equal rights the big ones have the say, while the small ones feel a bit foolish. The Federal Republic, however, is being pushed to play the role of a paymaster, while England and France stand out more with regard to their independent actions. It has been learned, by the way, that only these two wanted to change UN Resolution Number 242, which evoked strong and successful resistance from American President Carter. Now such a balanced statement on the Near East is to be expected that one must ask oneself: What good is it? The core of the European Community could demonstrate whether it is still able to perform an act of strength, rather than engage in political puzzles. The Community must be reformed and cured. If one lets everything run as before, the Community will be on the verge of bankruptcy in 2 years. But the fate of the European Community is being determined more by bills than by diplomatic documents.

SCHWARZWAELDER BOTE states: There is no talk any more in Venice of recognizing the PLO and of a new UN resolution. It at all, there is talk of a Near East statement which is supposed to be a helpful completion of the Camp David agreements. Indeed, it cannot be seen what progress could be achieved with a unilateral pro-Arab resolution of the nine states for the peace process in the Near East, since this would make all those Arab states, who are not prepared to compromise with Israel, feel strengthened in their positions. Carter has spoiled Giscard's intention of having Israel pay the price for the oil supply of the European Community.

RHEINPFALZ of Ludwigshafen points out: The nine state and government chiefs of the European Community feel pressured by a more and more threatening world situation. Free Western economy has been so far the most important trump card of the free nations in the worldwide struggle for safeguarding peace in freedom, in other words for exerting influence. This pertains to dealings with young nations as well as to the ability to muster deterrence and defense. The "machine" does not function correctly any more. It is therefore one of the main tasks of the chiefs in Venice not only to decide on world-political declarations, but most of all to issue guidelines to how the Western motor can be fixed again with measures that will be necessarily unpopular, in order to create a chance to implement the resolution on the international situation. But that is difficult in parliamentary democracies, particularly when elections are in the offing.

GENDARME FORCE WITHDRAWN FROM NEW HEBRIDES

LD121310 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Text] The serious troubles which have broken out in the French-British condominium of the New Hebrides are perhaps a further cause of friction between Great Britain and France: France has withdrawn its gendarmes as a sign of appeasement; Great Britain has decided to send a company of marines, regardless of the attitude of the French authorities. This was what a Foreign Office spokesman indicated this morning at any rate.

BOURGES COMPARES MILITARY STRENGTH OF USSR, U.S.

LD120947 Paris LE MATIN in French 9 Jun 80 p 2

[Pascal Krop report on 7 June "Security in the Mediterranean" conference in Toulon: "Defense--Bourges Explains"]

[Excerpt] Parliamentary Deputy and Mayor of Toulon Arthur Paecht stated that "a confrontation between the two big powers in the Mediterranean is hardly conceivable but that it was nonetheless clear that, without fighting, the USSR has already scored two important points--it has extended Mediterranean territory and strengthened its navy compared with the American 6th Fleet."

The Giscardian deputy then emphasized the danger represented by Soviet long-range Backfire aircraft based in the Crimea, observing that, in addition, the Soviet Union is seeking new land bases.

"Since threats are taking shape," he concluded, "will we even continue to protect our nationals, our own supplies and our communication lines?"

"It is true," [Defense Minister] Yvon Bourges replied, "that the Soviet military apparatus has considerably increased, but I do not believe that it can be said that it has overtaken either that of the West or, in particular, that of the United States."

After observing that, for instance, the Russian occupation of Afghanistan was closely connected with the events in Iran, the defense minister asserted that "France's political activities were to be considered as a whole and not only from the military viewpoint."

After paying this indirect tribute to detente, Yvon Bourges made a point of reassuring his audience by recalling that even though France is not a member of NATO's integrated command, it is continually exchanging information with its Atlantic Alliance Allies, including information on the Mediterranean. It must be noted that throughout his lecture Yvon Bourges gave no details about the new naval plan for the renewing of the French fleet.

CHADIAN DIPLOMAT IN PARIS REJECTS RECALL, APPEALS TO AUTHORITIES

AB121730 Paris AFP in English 1631 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Text] Paris, June 12 (AFP)--A Paris-based Chadian diplomat recalled by the government of President Goukouni Oueddei today requested France to give him facilities to continue his work.

Former Charge d'Affaires Ahmed Allammi described President Oueddei's government as fictitious and said that his recall to Ndjamena was illegal.

In a statement sent to AFP he asked the French authorities to provide all assistance necessary to the performance of his mission in the higher interest of normal future relations between the two countries.

GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR ORLY AIRPORT BOMB EXPLOSION

NC121055 Paris AFP in English 1048 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Text] Paris, June 12 (AFP)--Seven immigrant cleaning workers were injured at Paris Orly Airport early today in a bomb attack claimed later by a terrorist group held responsible for some 15 other incidents over the past year.

Earlier reports said eight people were injured, but Orly management confirmed that two women were in "serious" condition, though not in danger, while three other people were kept in hospital with minor injuries and two allowed home after treatment.

The seven, all Portuguese and North African immigrants employed by a private cleaning contractor, were injured by splinters of metal. The bomb, in a suitcase in a left luggage locker, went off just before 1:00 a.m. local time (2300 GMT) devastating some 300 square metres (yards) of a first floor domestic flight hall.

Airport Managing Director Gilbert Dreyfus said this morning that it was too early to assess the extent of the damage, but estimates put the cost at well over one million francs (250,000 dollars).

Flights were normal when the airport just south of Paris opened as usual this morning after personnel cleared major debris from the hall.

In Paris, Transport Minister Joel le Theule described the attack as "idiotic and scandalous", saying nothing could justify or explain an attack which had injured innocent people doing their job.

In an anonymous phone call to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE, the organisation, known as the March 27-28 Direct Action Group, said a suitcase had contained two kilos (four and a half lbs) of plastic explosives.

PSOE'S GONZALEZ COMMENTS ON OSLO MEETING, HOSTAGE ISSUE

LD130150 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 12 Jun 80

[Text] Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, has returned from Oslo, Norway, after attending the meeting of the leaders of the Socialist International. One of the sessions was attended by Iranian Foreign Minister Sadeq Qotbzadeh. Mr Gonzalez told journalists at Barajas Airport that the Iranian minister gave an explanation of the situation in Iran and the present development of internal events in the country. According to Mr Gonzalez, this is not easy to convey and we must maintain an atmosphere of great prudence, because they, the Iranians, are asking that we analyze the causes of the situation and not just the consequences of a problem. However, the Socialist leader continued, I think that there is room for optimism regarding developments in Iran, even with regard to the hostages. On this subject he said:

[Begin Gonzalez recording] Every time Iran is mentioned the subject of the hostages takes first place, while the 35 million Iranians come second. What they want, at least on the international level, is to redress the balance of this kind of reporting so that the country's main problem is seen to be that of a country which has suffered 25 years of dictatorship rather than the hostages being seen as the main problem. The impression I had when I was in Tehran is that the Iranian authorities are aware of all the internal and international implications of the problem and that consequently they are (?adopting) a [word indistinct] positive attitude towards resolving this on an internal and international level.
